In second appeal it is contended before me that the finding of the learned District Judge on the question of custom should not be accepted since in arriving at that finding he had ignored the entire evidence produced by the plaintiffs in respect of that issue. It is also argued that the patta granted by Hem Singh as lambardar was not for the benefit of all the cosharers and could not, threfore, be considered as binding on them It was urged that decree for the entire claim should have been passed in favour of the plaintiffs for their share of the rent as claimed.

I have heard this appeal at great length and have come to the conclusion that the finding arrived at by the learned District Judge is vitiated by the error that it has not been arrived at after considering the entire evidence on the record. If he had considered the entire evidence on the point and then come to the conclusion to which he has arrived I would have had no hesitation in accepting his finding and deciding the appeal in accordance therewith. I, however, find that no less than six witnesses were examined by the plaintiffs to prove that the custom in mahal Mathura Singh was to the effect that every cosharer collected his share or rent. The defendant himself went into the witness-box and denied that such a custom prevailed. Thakur Hem Singh lambardar also deposed to the same effect. There were three other witnesses examined on behalf of the defendant who deposed that lambardar alone used to collect rent and to issue pattas commuting grain rent for cash rent I have been taken through the entire evidence on the record and the patwari's evidence appears to me to to be good evidence in favour of the plaintiffs.

No mention is, however, made of this evidence one way or the other in the judgment of the learned District Judge. He has only referred to the evidence of P. W. No 3 Gangadin, and to that also only so far as a small passage is concerned I am not, therefore, satisfied with the finding arrived at by the learned District Judge on the question of the custom pleaded by the plaintiffs-appellants. I would have either arrived at a fresh finding myself or remanded the case for fresh finding after consideration of all the evidence on the record It is, however, not possible for me to take any of these two courses since I find that the issue framed by the trial Court on this point is an incomplete issue. The issue which the Court ought to have framed on the pleadings should have been "whether there existed any local custom in mahal Mathura Singh by virtue of which the cosharers in that mahal were entitled to collect their share of the rent"

This has not been done

I also realize the necessity of Thakur Hem Singh being impleaded as a party in the case. It is usual rule that whenever a tenant pleads payment of rent to a third person such third person is invariably impleaded as a co-defendant.

I should have also expected the trial Court to have framed an issue to the effect whether a lambardar was entitled in law or by custom to commute the grain rent for the cash rent without the consent of the cosharers The second issue that has been framed by that Court is merely to the effect whether the land in suit is grain rented or held on a cash rent. In my opinion this defect should also be removed.

I also find from the evidence on the record that the kankut proceedings which are alleged by the plaintiffs-appellants, are not satisfactorily proved to have taken place in the presence of the defendant-respondent, Danna. Under those circumstances it is doubtful whether he would be liable to pay rent at the rate at which the plaintiffs claim. Prima facie it appears to me to be an exorbitant rate. An inquiry has to be made in respect of this matter also.

On a consideration of all these points I have come to the conclusion that it would not be proper for me to decide the case on the materials which exist at present on the record. I am, therefore, obliged to remand this case to the learned Assistant Collector, Sitapur, with a direction that he will implead Thakur Hem Singh as a co-defendant in the case and that he would allow the parties to produce any further evidence which they may like to produce on the issues which I am now remitting to him for trial

1. Does there exist any local custom in mahal Mathura Singh of village Khairepara by virtue of which every cosharer of that mahal is entitled to collect his share of the rent? Or whether the lambardar alone is entitled to collect the rent?

2. Are the cosharers of mahal Mathura Singh bound by the action of Hem Singh lambardar in commuting grain rent for cash rent? Is his action in commuting grain rent of the defendant for cash rent justified by any benefit to the cosharer?

3. Were any kankut proceedings held in the year 1333 Fasli in respect of the crops standing in the holding of the defendant Danna? If so, were they held in his presence and are they binding upon him?

4. If not what is fair and proper rent for the holding in dispute?

5. Has the defendant paid Rs 42 to Thakur Hem Singh lambardar, and if so, was that payment made in good faith and is it binding upon the plaintiffs?

The learned Assistant Collector will allow the parties to produce before him such oral and documentary evidence as they may like to produce and will then submit his finding on the above issues. He is also requested to deal with the evidence now on the record and the evidence to be produced before him in detail. Findings are to be returned to this Court within a period of four months from this date. Parties will be given 10 days' time to file their objections against the findings, time to be reckoned from the date when the findings are notified to them by the learned Assistant Collector.

Judgment—The facts of this case are sufficiently stated in my order of remand dated 29th March 1928.

The findings on the issues remitted by me have now been submitted by the learned Assistant Collector. It appears from them that he has held an elaborate and exhaustive enquiry and the findings submitted by him have been of great help to me in deciding this case.

The issues submitted by me were as follows

(1) Does there exist any local custom in mahal Mathura Singh of village Khairepara by virtue of which every cosharer of that mahal is entitled to collect his share of the rent? Or whether the lambardar alone is entitled to collect the rent?

(2) Are the cosharers of mahal Mathura Singh bound by the action of Hem Singh lambardar in commuting grain rent for cash rent? Is his action in commuting grain rent of the defendant into cash rent justified by any benefit to the cosharers?

(3) Were any kankut proceedings held in the year 1333 Fasli in respect of the crops standing in the holding of the defendant Danna? If so were they held in his presence and are they binding upon him?

(4) If not, what is fair and proper rent for the holding in dispute?

(5) Has the defendant paid Rs. 42 to Thakur Hem Singh lambardar, and if so, was that payment made in good faith and is it binding upon the plaintiffs?

I may state that I had directed the learned Assistant Collector to make Hem Singh a party to the suit and also allow the parties to produce such more oral and documentary evidence as they may like to produce. I find that this has been done and the findings returned by the learned Assistant Collector are to the following effect:

As to issue 1 he has found that the custom pleaded by the plaintiffs that in mahal Mathura Singh of village Khairepara every cosharer of that mahal is entitled to collect his share of rent is established; and that the lambardar alone is not entitled to collect the rent.

As to issue 2 he has found that the lambardar had no authority to commute the rent of the grain paying tenant and that his action in commutting rent of defendant Danna into cash rent was not justified by any benefit to the cosharers since the holding can be let out on rent for Rs. 100, whereas the cash rent fixed by Thakur Hem Singh was only Rs. 42.

As to issue 3 he has found that it is proved that kankut proceedings were held in the year 1333 Fasli in respect of the crops standing in the holding of defendant Danna, and that he was present when such proceedings were held, but they are not binding on him since the valuation of the crops was immensely exaggerated.

As to issue 4 he has found that the fair and proper rent for the holding in dispute amounts to Rs. 79.

As to issue 5 he has found that it is not proved that the defendant paid Rs 42 to Hem Singh and in any case the said payment was not made in good faith and is not binding upon the plaintiffs.

Objections have been filed by defendant-respondent, Danna, in this Court and by Hem Singh defendant in the Court below, to all these findings, and the case has been argued before me at great length.

I now proceed to give my decision in regard to each of the issues remitted by me.

Issue 1.—This issue relates to the existence of the local custom alleged by the plaintiffs to prevail in mahal Mathura Singh of village Khairapara by virtue of which every cosharer of that mahal is entitled to collect his share of the rent. As remarked by the learned Assistant Collector this is the most important issue in the case. (His Lordship referred to the evidence and proceeded) There is, therefore, left no doubt in my mind that this evidence shows satisfactorily that the rent belonging to Raj Kuar has been collected separately for a long time. This would not have been the case, if the rent had been collected by the lambardar alone and not by the cosharers separatley.

I may also refer to the evidence of Hem Singh himself, who was examined in this case as D. W. 1. He stated clearly in cross-examination that in the case of bitai tenants he never took more than his own share while other cosharers took their shares. He also stated that he did not give any share out of his collections to any cosharer. This goes clearly in support of the custom alleged by the plaintiffs.

I should now like to refer to the wajibularz produced in the case (Ex. B-7). Para. 3 of the said wajibularz shows that the fixation of rent and other matters connected with the management of the estate took place with the consent of the cosharers. If there had been a custom in mahal Mathura Singh to the effect that the lambardar used to collect rent all alone, such a state of affairs as is pointed out by the wajibularz would not have existed. In that case it would have been recorded in the wajibularz that it is the lambardar, who is responsible for the fixation of the rent and for doing other acts in the course of management. The wajibularz further provides that every cosharer pays separately his quota of the Government revenue. This also supports the custom alleged by the plaintiffs

It was argued on behalf of the defendant that since in para 2 of the wajibularz the entire mahal was stated to have been bilijmal no such custom ought to be presumed to exist in that mahal. I do not see any force in this contention, because the custom like the one alleged by the plaintiffs is recognized by law to prevail in joint estates, and if it is found to exist its validity has to be recognized: vide S. 126, Oudh Rent Act

Reference was also made on behalf of the defendant to the statement of Bhagwant Singh P W. 2 made in a previous suit (Ex. B 16) in which he had stated that his share of profits was still due from Hem Singh, and consequently the latter suit against him should not be decreed. It was contended on the basis of this statement that this proved collection of the rent by the lambardar Hem Singh. I am unable to accept this contention for two reasons: firstly that this was a statement made by Bhagwant Singh in a suit brought against him by Thakur Hem Singh for recovery this share of the Government revenue and might have been made by him falsely to suit his purposes of defence in the case;

secondly that there are certain shamilat lands in mahal Mathura Singh, which belong to all the cosharers and it may have been that the profits mentioned by Bhagwant Singh as due to him were in respect of those shamilat lands.

On a consideration of all the oral and documentary evidence I am of opinion that the finding as to custom arrived at by the learned Assistant Collector is correct and must be maintained.

Issue 2 —As to issue 2 I am of opinion that Hem Singh, lambardar, was not justified in commuting grain rent into cash rent in respect of the holding of defendant Danna. The learned Assistant Collector has found that ordinarily the holding would fetch Rs. 100 and that the fair rent for that holding, taking all circumstances into consideration, would be Rs. 79. Under these circumstances the commutation of the rent of his holding to Rs. 42 cannot be justified, and the cosharers of mahal Mathura Singh cannot be considered to be bound by his action. Apart from this I am of opinion that in the case of tenants paying their rent in kind it is not legally open to the lambardar to commute their grain rent into cash rent without the consent of all the cosharers. Such an action on his part could not, in my opinion, be considered to be an action in the ordinary course of management of the village. He may be entitled to collect rent from the tenants as it stands, i e., if the tenants are paying cash, to collect rent in cash and if they are paying their rent in kind, to take grain instead. I am not, however, prepared to hold that he would be entitled for the purpose of management to convert the grain rent into cash rent, since such conversion would alter the very system of collection for which the lambardar cannot be considered to have any authority in law. I am, therefore, of opinion that the action of Hem Singh, lambardar, in commuting the grain rent of defendant, Danna, into cash rent is not binding upon the other cosharers of mahal Mathura Singh The same view was taken by the revenue Courts which did not uphold the validity of the leases granted by Hem Singh to other tenants: vide Exs. A-1 and A-2. Hem Singh admitted this fact in his evidence and stated further that when he gave the pattas to these tenants he had taken verbal consent of all the cosharers. There is no proof of such consent having been taken in the case of defendant Danna. (After deciding issues 3 to 5, his Lordship concluded). The result of these findings is that the plaintiffs would be entitled to get a decree for their share of the rent payable by Danna; that kankut proceedings held in the year 1333 Fasli in respect of Danna's crops cannot be upheld, and that the fair and proper rent for his holding is Rs. 79. According to that calculation the plaintiffs would be entitled to Rs. 37-2-0 as their share of rent.

I, therefore, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge of Sitapur, dated 21st April 1927, and also discharge the decree passed by the learned Assistant Collector on 15th January 1927, and in lieu of these decrees I pass a decree for Rs. 37-2-0 in favour of the plaintiffs as their share of rent in the holding of the defendant Danna in respect of the year 1333 Fasli

As to costs my order is that the defendant Danna and Hem Singh will pay their own costs of all the Courts and will further pay the costs of the plaintiffs appellants in all the Courts proportionately to the amount now found due to them.

Judgment.—This is an appeal arising out of a declaratory suit which has been dismissed by the two lower Courts.

The facts of the case are that one Mohammad Khan was the owner of a three annas share in village Bargadhi which constitutes a hamlet of a bigger village Chhach-hundahi-Singhahya mohal Mustahkam pergana Utraula, District Gonda. This share of three annas now represents a six annas share by virtue of partition. Mohammad Khan mortgaged the aforesaid share in favour of two persons named Abdul Wahid Khan and Bhiku who were the plaintiffs before the Court of first instance and appellants before this Court. The mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage executed on 14th November 1914 for a consideration of Rs. 5,000. Subsequently on 19th May 1915 Mohammad Khan executed a simple mortgage deed in respect of two annas share out of the same property in favour of S. Ali Husain the defendant-respondent. About a month later, that is on 17th June 1915 Mohammad Khan executed two deeds of further charge, one for Rs. 1,000 in favour of Abdul Wahid Khan named above and the other for Rs. 100 in favour of Bhiku also named above Abdul Wahid Khan has died during the pendency of the appeal and is now represented by Mt. Sandal and others (appellants 1 to 5) who are his legal representatives.

On 10th April 1923, S. Ali Husain instituted a suit for sale of the mortgaged property (two annas share) in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda on the basis of his mortgage-deed dated 19th May 1915. He impleaded Mohammad Khan the mortgagor and several other persons as defendants in the suit. Two of these persons were Abdul Wahid Khan and Bhiku who were arrayed as defendants 39 and 40 in that suit. They were impleaded on the allegation that they were subsequent transferees of the property in suit : vide Ex. 2. Abdul Wahid Khan and Bhiku did not put in an appearance and the preliminary decree for sale was passed ex parte in favour of S. Ali Husain on 25th October 1924. The decree was for recovery of Rs 29,469-13-10 by sale of the property mortgaged.

On 29th August 1925 Abdul Wahid Khan and Bhiku the plaintiffs of the present suit and who were defendants 39 and 40 in the suit for sale brought by the respondent, put in an application in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Gonda to the effect that they were mortgagees in possession under the deed dated 14th November 1914 and the two deeds of further charge both dated 17th June 1925 in regard to the three annas share against two annas out of which the decree for sale had been obtained by S Ali Husain, and that their lien in respect of the three aforesaid mortgages be declared at the time of the sale : vide Ex. 4 The parties appeared before the Court on 29th August 1925. Abdul Wahid Khan and Bhiku were present in person with Babu Avadh Behari Lal, pleader; and S. Ali Husain the decree-holder was present through his agent S. Iqbal Husain. On behalf of the decree-holder the deed of Rs. 5,000 of 1914 was admitted and no objection was raised in respect thereof. But the other two deeds of further charge executed in 1915 were not admitted. Thereafter a decree absolute for sale was passed on 7th October 1925.

Subsequently another application was put in by Abdul Wahid Khan and Bhiku on 18th October 1926 praying for the same relief : vide Ex 6. On 19th October the Subordinate Judge passed an order to the effect that as prior transferees they were not necessary parties to the suit brought by S. Ali Husain and if they wanted priority in respect of that deed they could bring a regular suit for the purpose and get the question settled : vide Ex. 7. Abdul Wahid Khan and Bhiku thereupon brought the present declaratory suit on 27th November 1926 and this is the suit in which the present appeal has been filed. The relief prayed for by them was to the effect that they had a prior charge under their mortgage dated 14th November 1914 and the defendant S. Ali Husain who had purchased the two annas share mortgaged to him on 20th October 1928 could not get possession of the property without redeeming the said mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs.

The defendant S. Ali Husain contested the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had lost all their rights under the mortgage deed dated 14th November 1914 since they had not set up those rights in the suit brought by the defendant in which they had been impleaded as defendants. In short his contention was to the effect that the decree for sale obtained by him in execution of which he had purchased the two annas share was res judicata between the parties so far as the above mortgage was concerned.

The Additional Subordinate Judge of Gonda, to whose file the suit had been transferred, accepted the defence of the respondent S Ali Husain and has by his decree dated 12th May 1927 dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The decree passed by him has been affirmed by the learned Additional District Judge of Gonda by his decree dated 20th January 1928

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court against the decree passed by the Court below dismissing their suit and the only question involved in the case is whether the decree for sale obtained by the respondent bars the plaintiffs-appellants from claiming the relief asked for by them on the basis of their mortgage deed 14th November 1914.

We have heard the parties at great length and have come to the conclusion that the appeal must be allowed and we now proceed to give our reasons for taking that view.

The latest case decided by the Privy Council on the subject will be found reported in Radha Kishun v. Khurshed Hossein (1). The fact of that case were that one Radha Kishun, the appellant, had instituted a suit for recovery of his mortgage money by sale of the property mortgaged on the basis of a mortgage dated 13th May 1892 of which he had taken a transfer from one Bakhtawar Mal, the original mortgagee. A portion of the property in suit had been previously mortgaged to the defendants by means of a usufructuary mortgage, called zerpeshgi, on 25th February 1891 and was then subsequently mortgaged to the same defendants under a simple deed of mortgage dated 28th April 1894.

In 1906 a suit was brought by the defendants for recovery of their money under the deed of 1894. In that suit the appellant Radha Kishun was also impleaded and the decree for sale was passed against him also. Radha Kishun the appellant then subsequently in 1907 brought a suit on the basis of his mortgage of 1892 and impleaded the mortgagees under the deed of 1894 as parties to the said suit Their defence was that the appellant could not obtain a decree in respect of the property mortgaged to them since Radha Kishun being a party to the suit of 1906 brought by them had never put forward his mortgage of 1892 as a defence in the case, and that, therefore, the decree passed in their favour in the year 1906 operated as res judicata im their favour and in the face of that decree the suit of Radha Rishun the appellant was not maintainable. This defence was accepted by both the Courts in India and Radha Kishun's suit was consequently dismissed

On appeal their Lordships of the Privy Council took a different view and Sir Lawrence Jenkins in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee observed as follows :

"The rule of res judicata is contained in S. 11, Civil P. C., 1908, which provides that no Court shall try any suit in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties litigating under the same title in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit, and has been heard and finally decided. Had this been an exhaustive statement of the rule it obviously would not have supported the plea in the facts of this case, and so reliance has been placed on Expln. 4 which provides that any matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence in such former suit, shall be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in such suit. The mortgage deed of 13th May 1892, it is urged, might and ought to have been made a ground of defence in the former suit No. 100 of 1906, and by the omission the present suit is barred. The rule is clear; the controversy is narrowed down to the question whether the facts invite its application. It becomes necessary, therefore, to see what was the position of Bakhtaur Mull in the former suit No. 100 of 1906. It was a suit brought by the Sahus to enforce against the mortgagor their mortgage-deed of 24th April 1894. Bakhtaur Mull was joined as a defendant, but whether any or what relief was sought against him does not appear.

"Bakhtaur Mull's mortgage was prior to that on which the Sahus sued, and its validity is now admitted.

"The case, therefore, came within the terms of S. 96, T. P. Act, 1882, which expressly provides that where property, the sale of which is directed, is subject to a prior mortgage the Court may, with the consent of the prior mortgagee, order that the property be sold free from the same, giving to such prior mortgagee the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold. The implication of the section is that without such consent the property could not be so sold.

"Bakhtaur Mull's position, therefore, was that he was prior mortgagee with a paramount claim outside the controversy of the suit unless his mortgage was impugned. Consequently to sustain the plea of res judicata it is incumbent on the Sahus in the circumstances of this case to show that they sought in the former suit to displace Bakhtaur Mull's prior title and postpone it to their own. For this it would have been necessary for the Sahus as plaintiffs in the former suit to allege a distinct case in their plaint in derogation of Bakhtaur Mull's priority.

"But from the records of this suit it does not appear that anything of the kind was done, and, as has been observed, of things that do not appear and things that do not exist the reckoning in a Court of law is the same."

"The Sahus, therefore, have failed to establish the conditions essential to their plea, and they alone are responsible for this defect. The plaint in suit No. 100 of 1906 has not been produced, and this omission is not supplied by the summary of the plaint set out in the extracts from the decree. That summary still leaves the contents of the plaint a matter of mere conjecture and certainly does not show that Bakhtaur Mull's mortgage was attacked. The decree, too, is open to the same comment. In arriving at this conclusion their Lordships have not overlooked the authorities cited at the Bar, but so far as they are binding on this Board they are clearly distinguishable."

The rule of law laid down by their Lordships in the above case is to the effect that if a prior mortgagee with a paramount title is impleaded in a suit brought by the puisne mortgagee and there is no contest in that suit regarding the prior mortgage the right of the prior mortgagee would not be lost to him. If, however, there is a controversy and that controversy is decided against him whether by actual decision or in default, his remedy would be barred and the rule of res judicata would stand in his way of asserting his claim under the prior mortgage.

This question was recently discussed by a Bench of this Court, to which one of us was a party, in a case reported in Bansi Dhar v. Jagmohan Das (1). In that case also a prior mortgagee was a party to the suit and set up his claim under his mortgage which was of a prior date. It appears that subsequently he withdrew his claim based on the prior mortgage and a decree was passed. It was held by this Court that under those circumstances the question of the prior mortgage not having been inquired into could not be treated as an issue directly and substantially raised in the previous suit, and that the claim of the prior mortgagee was not in any way affected by the decree which had been obtained by the puisne mortgagee.

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 88=3 Luck. 472.

Reliance has been placed before us, as was done in the Court below, upon several cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council and also by the different High Courts in India. Some of those decisions, it is sufficient for us to observe, were cases which had arisen before the passing of the present Code of Civil Procedure in which it has been clearly laid down: vide O 34, R. 1, that a puisne mortgagee may sue either for foreclosure or for sale without making a prior mortgagee a party to the suit and a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage. It, therefore, appears to us that whatever may have been the state of law prior to the passing of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, it is clear that after the passing of the Act of 1908, the mere fact that a prior mortgagee has been made a party to a suit brought by the puisne mortgagee would not destroy his prior mortgage unless there is a clear controversy in that suit and the controversy decided adversely to him.

The only point which we have, therefore, to decide is whether in the suit brought by the respondent S Ali Husain there was any controversy relating to the prior mortgage of the appellants and whether that controversy resulted in an adjudication against them either expressly or impliedly. We may mention that this would in each case depend upon the facts and the circumstances existing in that case. The rule of law is clear but the actual point to be decided in each case is whether the facts of that case are such as would invite the application of that rule.

We now turn to the facts of the present case. We have got on the record the plaint of the former suit brought by the respondent S. Ali Husain It is clear from para. 8 of the plaint that defendants 39 and 40 were impleaded as puisne mortgagees. The actual words used in that paragraph are "bataur muntagil ilaihim madab" which, when translated, mean "as subsequent transferees." Our attention has not been drawn to any other allegation in the plaint besides this, from which it may appear that the rights of defendants 39 and 40, who are the plaintiffs in the present suit, as prior mortgagees were in any way denied. There can be no doubt as would appear from the facts of the case stated above that these defendants were puisne mortgagees or subsequent transferees, as the respondent called them in his plaint, by virtue of the two deeds of further charge dated 17th June 1915

We are, therefore, unable to infer by necessary implication that the respondent in his suit actually intended to raise any controvesy regarding the right of the plaintiffs of the present suit in respect of their prior mortgage dated 14th November 1914. It can very well be said that the only thing which the respondent wanted in that case was to destroy the rights of the present plaintiffs as they existed under their two deeds of further charge dated 17th June 1915. It has been strenuously argued on behalf of the respondent that the mere fact that the plaintiffs of the present suit were impleaded in the suit brought by the respondent as subsequent transferees was sufficient to show that the respondent denied their rights as prior mortgagees. We regret we are unable to take that view. If no subsequent mortgages had existed in favour of the plaintiffs of the present suit and the respondent impleaded them in his suit as defendants on the allegation that they were subsequent transferees, there would have been some room for argument that the respondent wanted to assail their rights as prior mortgagees We are to a great extent supported in this conclusion of ours by what the agent of the decreeholder himself stated before the Court on 29th August 1925, when the parties were present before the Subordinate Judge The plaintiffs of the present suit had asked the Court to declare their lien in respect of the deed of 1914 and the two deeds of further charge of the year 1915. It was clearly stated on behalf of the decree-holder in reply that there was no objection so far as the deed of 1914 was concerned but the right of the applicants, so far as the deeds of 1915 were concerned, was denied. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that nothing which was stated on behalf of the decreeholder after the passing of the decree should be taken into consideration in deciding whether the question relating to the prior mortgage was in controversy in the suit brought by the respondent. We regret we are unable to exclude this evidence from our consideration The evidence consists of a statement made by the agent of the respondent and is good evidence to show what he actually understood in that case when he impleaded the plaintiffs of the present suit as defendants calling them subsequent transferees.

We are, therefore, of opinion that when the respondent Ali Husain impleaded the plaintiffs of the present suit as defendants in his own suit he never intended to question their rights as prior mortgagees under the deed of 1914. Indeed as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case quoted above it was necessary for him, if he wanted to destroy the title of the plaintiffs in the present suit, to lodge a distinct case in his plaint in derogation of the claim of the appellants relating to priority in respect of the deed of 1914. We, therefore, hold that the rule of res judicata which has been applied in the present case by the Courts below does not stand in the way of the plaintiffs and that his suit must be decreed.

There is no other question regarding which the parties are at issue, the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs-appellants being admitted throughout.

We, therefore, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and grant a decree to the plaintiffs-appellants that their suit as brought will stand decreed with costs in all three Courts.

WAZIR HASAN AND SRIVASTAVA, JJ.

Muhammad Usman Khan—Judgment-debtor—Appellant.

Bankey Lal—Decree-holder—Respondent

Execution Decree Appeal No. 8 of 1929, Decided on 22nd July 1929, against order of Sub-Judge, Lucknow, D/- 5th January 1929.

(a) Oudh Civil Rules, R. 190 (b)—Village forming part of estate as defined in Oudh Estates Act 1869 is ancestral so long as property is governed by Oudh Estates Act.

Village forming part of an estate as defined in the Oudh Estates Act 1869, is ancestral land within the definition of the term as given in R. 190 (b) only so long as the property continues to be governed by the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act. The property must be considered to form an estate or part of an estate as defined in the Oudh Estates Act so long as the property continue to be governed by the Oudh Estates Act but it cannot be considered to be such estate or a part of an estate when it ceases to be governed by that Act. [P 468 C 2]

(b) Oudh Estates Act 1869, S. 14—Judgment-debtor, person mentioned in Cl. (2) of S. 13 (A)—He is subject to same conditions and rules of succession as testator.

Where the judgment-debtor is one of the persons mentioned in Cl. (2), S. 13 (A), he holds the village bequeathed to him by his grandfather subject to the same conditions and to the same rules of succession as the testator, under S. 14. A. I. R 1925 Oudh 709, Rel. on. 16 O. C. 277, Dist. [P 468 C 2]

D. K. Seth—for Appellant.

Makund Behari Lal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an execution of decree appeal by the judgment-debtor. The point involved in the appeal is a very short one, namely, whether the 16 annas share in village Ataria, which has been attached and put up for sale in execution of a decree is an ancestral property or not. The learned Subordinate Judge of Lucknow relying on Cl. (a), R. 190, Oudh Civil Rules, has held that the property must be considered to be the self-acquired and not the ancestral property of the judgment-debtor. The contention urged on behalf of the judgment-debtor in this appeal is that the village in question forms part of an estate as defined in the Oudh Estates Act 1869, and is therefore "ancestral land" within the definition of the term as given in Cl. (b), R 190, Oudh Civil Rules. The parties are argeed that the village in question is a part of taluqa Kasmandikhurd, which belonged to Mohamad Ahmad Khan, grandfather of the judgment-debtor, who was the original taluqdar, and had come in the possession of the judgment-debtor under a will executed by his grandfather in his favour about 30 years ago. The name of Mahomad Ahmad Khan is entered against Nos. 10 and 7 of lists 1 and 3 respectively, prepared under S. 8, Oudh Estates Act.

The learned counsel for the judgment-debtor argues that the village having admittedly once been a part of an estate as defined in the Oudh Estates Act it must be considered to be ancestral property irrespective of the question whether in the hands of the judgment-debtor it continues to be governed by the Oudh Estates Act or not The learned counsel for the decree-holder maintains, on the other hand, that Cl (b), R 190, can apply only when an estate or a part of an estate is in the hands of the original taluqdar.

We think that both parties have pitched their contentions too high and that the correct position lies somewhere midway between the two. In our opinion, so long as the property continues to be governed hy the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act, it must be considered to form an estate or part of an estate as defined in the Oudh Estate Act, but it cannot be considered to be such estate or a part of an estate when it ceases to be governed by that Act. The parties are agreed before us that the judgment-debtor appellant was not the immediate heir of his grandfather, but there can be no doubt that he was a possible heir. Ss. 14 and 15 of the amended Oudh Estates Act have been given retrospective effect. The judgment-debtor is clearly .

"A person who might, in the absence of of other heirs, have succeeded to such estate or portion under the provisions of the Oudh Estates Act", and is, therefore, one of the persons mentioned in Cl. (2), S. 13 (A), Oudh Estates Act It follows that he holds the village in question which had been bequeathed to him by his grandfather, subject to the same conditions and to the same rules of succession as the testator, under S. 14, Amended Oudh Estates Act. The same view was taken by Mr. Lindsay (now Sir Benjamin Lindsay) and Pandit Kanhaiya Lal in Execution of Decree Appeal No 16 of 1915 It was a case relating to property held by one of the younger sons of the same Mahomad Ahmad Khan. In the course of their judgment in that case they remarked that:

"The father of the judgment-debtor, Mahommad Ahmad Khan, was a taluqdar, whose name appears in lists 1 and 3 prepared under the Oudh Estates Act. We are also told that the village now in dispute forms part of the estate granted by the sanad. It seems to us therefore that having regard to the definition of the "ancestral land" in the paragraph o the Oudh Civil Digest, just referred to, this property does constitute ancestral land for the purposes of execution of the decree."

It may be mentioned that Cl. (b), R 190, Oudh Civil Rules, is word for word the same as Cl. (b), para. 179, Oudh Civil Digest, above referred to. The view taken by us is also in consonance with the decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh to which one of us was a party reported in Ameer Mirza Beg v. Udit Pershad (1). In that case the property was not held to be ancestral because the case did not fall within S. 14 but was one governed by the provisions of S. 15, Oudh Estates Act. The learned counsel for the respondent has relied upon the decision reported in Asghari Khanam v Raj Bibi (2). It is a case relating to a certain property which at one time formed part of the Maniarpur estate. It is obvious from the facts of the case and the history relating to the Maniarpur estate that the property in the hands of Mt. Asghari Khanam, the judgment-debtor, was subject to the provisions of S 15 and not S. 14, Oudh Estates Act. The reference made in the judgment to Ss. 14 and 32-A Oudh Estates Act seems to us, if we may respectfully say so, to be based on some misapprehension of facts and confusion of ideas. If the learned Judges meant to hold that property governed by S 14, Oudh Estates Act, cannot be considered as ancestral property as defined in the rules, we must respectfully dissent from that view. We may also point out that if the construction placed upon the decision by the learned counsel for the respondent is correct, then the decision is also directly in conflict with the later decision of Messrs. Lindsay and Kanhaiya Lal in the unreported case to which reference has been made above. It might also be pointed out that S. 32-A, Oudh Estates Act, which gives the taluqdars the power to declare any non-taluqdari property owned by them as subject to the Act has no application to the case of property governed by S. 14.

For the above reasons we are of opinion that the village Ataria which is under sale is not the self-acquired but the ancestral property of the judgment-debtor, and falls within the terms of Cl. (b) R. 190, Oudh Civil Rules. We, therefore, allow this appeal with costs and setting aside the order of the lower Court declare the property in suit to be ancestral property.

Udairaj Singh—Plaintiff—Appellant.

Mt Raj Kunwar and others—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 52 of 1928, Decided on 26th July 1929, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, D/- 23rd December 1927.

(a) Hindu Law—Mitakshara — Adoption —Boy whose mother adopter could have legally married can only be adopted.

Among twice born Hindus governed by the Mitakshara law an adoption can only be made of a boy whose natural mother could before her marriage have been legally married by the adoptor : 21 All. 412 (P.C.) and A. I. R. 1915 P. C. 15, Rel. on. [P 475 C 1]

(b) Wajibularz—Custom permitting adoption of sister's son in absence of sons of collaterals—Right of adoption comes into being only when no such sons exist.

When the wajibularz provides for a custom permitting the adoption of sister's son or daughter's son in absence of collaterals, such custom even though taken to have conferred right to adopt brother's daughter's son, would give the right of adoption only in the absence of the existing sons of collaterals. Where it is clearly established that there were existing sons of collaterals, a brother's daughter's son could not be adopted. [P 475 C 2]

Where the trial Judge applies his mind fairly and intelligently to the examination of evidence the value of the Judge's opinion is very great. [P 471 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an appeal against a decree dated 23rd December 1927, of Babu Jagdamba Saran, Additional Subordinate Judge of Hardoi, dismissing the suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant Udai Raj Singh, a minor whose age is stated to be seven years on 23rd November 1926, brought through his next friend Madho Singh. This suit is for the possession of certain property in the Hardoi District. It is admitted on both sides that the property in question belonged to a joint Hindu family consisting of two brothers Shankar Singh and Jangu Singh whose personal law was the Mitakshara. Shankar Singh died on 24th November 1914. Jangu Singh then became proprietor of the whole property by survivorship. He, however, permitted the name of Raj Kuar, the widow of Shankar Singh, to be entered in the revenue papers in respect of a portion of the property The lady in question had admittedly only the right to maintenance in the property. The two brothers resided together in the village of Samrauli in the Hardoi district. It is now accepted on both sides that after Shankar Singh's death his widow Raj Kuar continued to reside in the same house with her brother-in-law. Shankar Singh and Raj Kuar had five daughters. Jangu Singh died on 29th October 1923 At the time of his death three of Shankar Singh's daughters were still unmarried, When Jangu Singh died there was no male issue of either Shankar Singh or Jangu Singh and in the ordinary course of law intestate succession would have been to the collaterals. Sanwal Singh now deceased was the collateral who ordinarily would have been entitled to succeed.

On 13th November 1923, Sanwal Singh applied to the revenue authorities to have his name recorded to engage for the revenue of the whole property, the estimated value of which is Rs. 1,25,000 and the income of which is over Rs. 5,000 a year. His application is dated 13th November 1923. On 8th December 1923, Raj Kuar filed an objection before the revenue authorities to the entry of Sanwal Singh's name and asked that her own name should be recorded on the ground that Jangu Singh had devised all his rights to her by a nuncupative will. The nature of her claim is stated in detail in Ex. H-4 dated 7th February 1924. It is to be noted that she made no suggestion either in her objection or in the statement of her pleader to the effect that Jangu Singh had adopted a son On 7th February 1924, Madho Singh as next friend of Udai Raj Singh put in another objection to the claim to the revenue authorities in which he stated that Jangu Singh had prior to his death adopted Udai Raj Singh the present plaintiff-appellant as his son. The Deputy Collector who decided the first proceeding in mutation found that Udai Raj Singh was the adopted son of Jangu Singh and directed his name to be entered. This order is Ex. 14. It is dated 10th December 1924. The Deputy Commissioner of Hardoi on appeal reversed this order In the meantime Sanwal Singh and Raj Kuar had compromised. Under the terms of the compromise Sanwal Singh's name was to be recorded subject to certain condition. The Deputy Commissioner's order which is Ex. H-9, dated 6th May 1925, directed Sanwal Singh's name to be recorded. It was against the plea of adoption of Udai Raj Singh but the entry was mainly on the basis of possession. This order was confirmed on 14th September 1925 by the Commissioner of the Lucknow Division by his order Ex. H-10. The suit of Udai Raj was filed on 23rd November 1926.

The learned trial Judge has found that there was never any ceremony of adoption of any kind and that the whole of the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant to prove the factum of adoption is unreliable He has found that the evidence adduced by the defendants to show that there was no form of adoption is reliable Apart from that he has found that Udai Raj Singh could not have been legally adopted by Jangu Singh as Udai Raj Singh's natural mother was the daughter of Shankar Singh. The family are Chatris and as such twice born. He found against the plea advanced on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant to the effect that there was a custom in the family under which a brother's daughter's son could be validly adopted. His finding there was that no custom had been established varying the law and that the alleged custom even if accepted as valid would not justisfy the plaintiff-appellant's adoption, if such adoption had taken place, as it only permitted a person such as himself to be adopted if there were no sons of collaterals available He found that sons of collaterals were available.

Before we proceed to discuss the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant to establish the form of adoption it will be better to state certain facts. We have already stated that when Jangu Singh died there were in existence three unmarried daughters of Shankar Singh. There were two other daughters who had married before the death of Jangu Singh. One of them was called Ram Dulari. She had married Raghuraj Singh of Bargawan in the Sitapur District. Raghuraj Singh was the son of Shiwa Singh. Shiwa Singh's cousin was Madho Singh the next friend of the plaintiff-appellant. Madho Singh resides in Bargawan. Udai Raj Singh the present plaintiff-appellant was the son of Raghuraj Singh and Ram Dulari. Jangu Singh had been married more than once. He had a son who died on 6th May 1921.

His wife, the mother of that son, died on 24th May 1921. Ram Dulari is proved to our satisfaction to have died on 4th October 1921. Udai Raj Singh was born, according to the story set up on his behalf, on 15th May 1920, but according to the evidence adduced by the defendants, which we believe, he was born on 17th October 1920. The case for the plaintiff-appellant is that Udairaj Singh was adopted on 20th November 1921. He was thus at the time of his alleged adoption a little more than one year old and according to this story he was adopted within six weeks of his mother's death.

The village of Bargawan in the Sitapur District is more than 20 miles distant from the village of Samrauli in the Hardoi District. The map shows that between the two villages the river Gomti flows. This fact is mentioned to show that according to the usual method of village conveyance the villages are about a day's journey apart. A large number of witnesses were called on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant to establish the fact that an adoption ceremony took place in Samrauli on 20th November 1921, in which Jangu Singh adopted Udai Raj Singh as his son. The learned trial Judge has refused to accept this evidence as reliable. In the course of his careful judgment he has explained that in examining the evidence he has kept in mind certain principles laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in previous cases of alleged adoptions and has judged the evidence according to those principles.

But apart from the use of these principles, valuable as they are, the main point in support of his finding on the value of the evidence is that his judgment shows that he applied his mind to the consideration of the evidence of all the witnesses produced and that he carefully studied the evidence of each witness who was produced before him, and applied his mind to the evidence of Raj Kuar who was examined on commission. In all cases of this nature it is easy to criticize the reasons given by the trial Judge for the rejection of the evidence of individual witnesses. But the fact remains that in a case such as this in which the trial Judge has applied his mind fairly and intelligently to the examination of the evidence the value of the Judge's opinion is very great. We had the advantage of having the appeal argued by an experienced advocate who has taken us in detail through the evidence of every witness called on his client's behalf. He has addressed us intelligent and careful arguments to show that the learned trial Judge was not right in rejecting their evidence. But after having given due weight to the arguments of the learned counsel we find ourselves in agreement with the views taken by the learned trial Judge on the value of the evidence. We add certain reasons, some of which have already been taken by the learned trial Judge, in support of this conclusion.

We find upon the evidence before us that Jangu Singh was at the time of the alleged adoption a man not much more than 40 years of age. He was on our finding on the evidence healthy and well preserved. He died on 29th October 1923, but his death does not appear to have been due to previous debility or long-standing disease. Such a man would not have reason to anticipate an early death. He had already begotten several children. Some had died He left two daughters surviving. He had the prospect of marrying again and begetting a son. We have it on evidence, which we believe, that he was contemplating marrying again. In these circumstances there was not on the face of it any great reason why he should wish to adopt a son. But if he did wish to adopt a son it is difficult to understand why he should have wished to select Udai Raj Singh for the purpose. Udai Raj Singh was the son of his brother's daughter. Apart from the question of legality of such an adoption (a question to which we shall refer later) such a selection would be peculiar. There are further points. Udai Raj Singh was an only son. His mother had died some six months before the alleged date of the adoption. Although the adoption of an only son is not prohibited under the law it is not considered amongst respectable Chatrias (such as the parties profess to be) fitting to give an only son in adoption to another man. Further Udai Raj Singh was at the time a baby. Jangu Singh could not possibly have had any idea as to how his character would develop. What then are the reasons put forward which are supposed to have actuated Jangu Singh? There is evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant to the effect that Jangu Singh had formed such a dislike to his natural heirs that he did not wish his property to descend to them. But this evidence the learned trial Judge found to be unsatisfactory and we agree with him that it is unsatisfactory. Nothing definite has been made out to show a real dislike or in fact any dislike and in our opinion the suggestion that Jangu Singh desired that the whole of the family property should go eventually to a boy whose natural father came from another district and whose mother was his brother's daughter is improbable. The desire of a Hindu to have a son who would bring him salvation after his death would exist to no great extent in the case of a man like Jangu Singh who had every prospect of marrying again and begetting a son.

There are certain circumstances in connexion with the alleged facts of the adoption that tell strongly against it. Jangu Singh was not an ordinary peasant. He was a zamindar possessed of valuable landed property and to a certain extent a man of affairs. Such a man would know, if he wished to adopt a son, that such an adoption was likely to be challenged by his natural heirs after his death. We have it admitted that no deed of adoption was executed. There would not have been the slightest difficulty in executing such a deed and registering it. Not only was Jangu Singh a man of affairs. Madho Singh we find is a man of considerable astuteness and Raghuraj Singh is a man of some education. No real attempt is made to show why a deed was not executed. The only reply is that no one thought it necessary to execute a deed. We have left so far another explanation which was put up. Here the position taken up in the mutation proceedings is not the same as the position taken up in the trial Court. In the mutation proceedings it would appear from the statement of Raghuraj Singh which has been proved and brought upon the record (Ex H-19), that the adoption took place because Jangu Singh was anxious that one of the unmarried daughters of Shankar Singh, i. e., a sister of Ram Dulari, should marry Raghuraj Singh. It is in evidence that this girl eventually did marry Raghuraj Singh. She is now also dead. This is what Raghuraj Singh stated:

"First of all the question of marriage was broached. Jangu Singh proposed it. It was refused on my behalf. When he agreed to take my son in adoption then I agreed to marry at the recommendation of the Mirza Sahib."

The Mirza Sahab is Mirza Ahmad Shah (P. W-28). We shall consider his evidence later. The story then was that Jangu Singh had considered the adoption of Udai Raj Singh as an afterthought and that he was so anxious to marry one of the three unmarried daughters of his brother to Raghuraj Singh that he was ready in consideration to adopt the son of Raghuraj Singh. This story has now been changed. In the trial Court it was put forward that Jangu Singh desired for his own reasons, wishing to adopt a son, to adopt Udai Raj Singh and that the marriage of Raghuraj Singh with the other daughter of Shankar Singh was a secondary consideration. There are further peculiar circumstances about the alleged adoption. From the evidence of the alleged adoption it appears that a considerable amount of money would have been spent on the ceremony. A large number of guests were invited. Many brahmans were employed and a nautch was held. It is in evidence that the famliy kept accounts but no accounts have been produced. It is difficult to see how the accounts could have been made away with, for it is in evidence that Raghuraj Singh and Jangu Singh lived together and Raj Kuar is now palpably siding with the plaintiff-appellant.

We now take in detail the evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiff We take first Madho Singh P. W. 35. He is regarded as the head of the joint family of which his brother's son Raghuraj Singh is a member. According to him Jangu Singh came to Bargawan a month or a month and a half before the alleged date of adoption. The alleged date of adoption was 20th November 1921. So he came on some day in the first half of October 1921. As we have already stated Ram Dulari died on 4th October 1921. Madho Singh says that Jangu Singh asked the family to give him Udai Raj Singh in adoption. The boy's mother was just dead. The family at once agreed to the adoption according to Madho Singh's statement. He said that at the same time Jangu Singh suggested that an unmarried daughter of Shankar Singh should marry Raghuraj Singh. The proposal was hardly seemly as her sister had just died. The proposal was refused by Madho Singh but not, according to him, because it was not seemly proposal but because he said he hoped to get a bigger dower from the father of some other woman for the marriage of Raghuraj Singh. Then Mirza Ahmad Shah appeared on the scene. Mirza Ahmad Shah (P. W.28) is a taluqdar residing in Qutubnagar in the Sitapur District He admits that all his property is heavily encumbered and that he is not in possession of any village to which he has title.

According to Mirza Ahmad Shah, Jangu Singh came to him and asked him to use his influence with Madho Singh to induce Madho Singh to accede to the marriage of Raghuraj Singh with Shankar Singh's unmarried daughter. In consequence he and Jangu Singh went to Bargawan to the house of Madho Singh and persuaded Madho Singh to accede to the marriage. There is nothing inherently impossible in a Mahomedan gentleman being brought in to assist in the settlement of a marriage between Chatris, but read with other circumstances it does not sound very likely that he would have had sufficient influence with Madho Singh to induce Madho Singh to accept a smaller dower. According to this story the adoption of Udai Raj Singh had already been settled. It is asserted that this adoption was conducted according to the ideas prevalent amongst high class Chatris. A large number of brahmans had to officiate, and an auspicious date had to be selected for the ceremony. This brings us to the evidence of P. W-5 Vidya Dhar Brahman. Vidya Dhar is a Pandit of Bargawan. According to his story he was asked to fix an auspicious date for the ceremony. He is the Pandit of Madho Singh. It is not made clear why Jangu Singh should wish to select Madho Singh's Pandit to fix a date instead of selecting his own Pandit. According to Vidya Dhar he fixed the date at once. This must have been some time in October 1921. He fixed it for about a month ahead. He said that at the time he made, a note in a printed calendar which he kept. He has produced the calendar. The entry could have been made at any time. Once the date was settled invitations were sent out to a large number of persons. Mirza Ahmad Shah, according to his story, took the trouble to come from Qutubnagar to Samrauli to attend the ceremony. It is stated by other witnesses that a nautch took place. Mirza Ahmad Shah has no recollection of a nautch taking place. We now come to the evidence of Raghuraj Singh (P. W. 36). According to him, Madho Singh approved of the adoption and asked him if he was willing to give his boy in adoption. We now quote his own words:

"I said I was quite willing to do so because it would go to perpetuate the line of Jangu Singh. As I am very young, I did not care that I was giving away my only son in adoption for I hope to have more sons in future. I did not give any thought to the future of the plaintiff in giving him in adoption. My first son was born two years after my first marriage. He died. Plaintiff was born a year and a half or a year and nine months after his death. The first son died at the age of ten months . . . . . I came to know that the matter of adoption was settled after the coming of Mirza Saheb to Bargawan. Jangu Singh had come to Bargawan ten or thirteen days before the Mirza. I did state then that when Jangu Singh agreed to take my son in adoption I then agreed to marry. This is true. I did state there that the Mirza said that when Jangu Singh was saying that he would take my son in adoption where was the hitch about the marriage and what more could I expect. I heard this from my uncle and stated like that. I do not recollect if I stated there that only Jangu Singh was present at that time. I stated there that my father and Madho Singh were present at that time."

According to the story for the plaintiff as soon as the boy was adopted he went to live with Jangu Singh. He was looked after by Raj Kuar and Raj Kuar's unmarried daughter, apparently the daughter who subsequently married Raghuraj Singh. There were two other daughters in the house. This arrangement would have been a very suitable one but there seems no reason why it should not have continued after Jangu Singh's death. Madho Singh has, however, deposed that as soon as he heard of Jangu Singh's death he went to Samrauli and took the plaintiff away to his own house taking him from the care of Raj Kuar. He says that he did not know about Jangu Singh's death for some time. These are his words :

"I was at Lucknow when Jangu Singh died. When I returned from Lucknow after 15 days I came to know that Jangu Singh had died. I came to Samrauli to take away the plaintiff as there was no male member to look after him. I did not come to know there if any application had been made by any one for mutation of names. I applied for mutation in the name of Udai Raj Singh three months after taking him away. I came to know some day before that that Sanwal Singh and Raj Kuar had already applied for mutation. I fell ill. I remained ill for a month and a half. Then I sent men to take possession over the property. This is the cause of the delay to apply for mutation. I applied as guardian of the plaintiff."

We come next to the evidence given on commission by Raj Kuar. It is now admitted that the family was a joint family. Yet we find that Raj Kuar on Jangu Singh's death not only asserted that it was a separate family but claimed the whole property under a nuncupative will which she has made no attempt to establish. She further ignored in her claim the alleged adoption of the plaintiff. To explain this peculiar action on her part she has asserted that she is an ignorant illiterate woman who did not know what was happening and that such actions as had been taken on her behalf were undertaken without her knowledge. Against this, however, it is to be noted that one of her other daughters married a certain Dwarka Singh who is a pleader in Sitapur. Ex. H-2 shows that her application in mutation was filed on 8th December 1923 and Ex H-3 shows that on the same date she executed a power-of-attorney in favour amongst others of her own son-in-law Thakur Dwarka Singh. Apart from Raj Kuar's conduct in this matter there are other points about her statement. She has endeavoured to strengthen the appellant's case by antedating the proposal to adopt the plaintiff emanating from Jangu Singh six or seven months before the alleged adoption. But as she places Jangu Singh's visit to Bargawan in order to make the proposal as having taken place on the death of Raghurai Singh's wife and as it is established that Raghuraj Singh's wife died on 4th October 1921, she has shown her inaccuracy on that point. According to her Madho Singh took the boy away after Jangu Singh's death on the ground that the boy would feel lonely. As he was living with his mother's mother and his mother's sisters this suggestion does not find acceptance

It will, however, be seen that for the first time that we can get any definite information as to where the baby was after Jangu Singh's death, he is found to have been living with Madho Singh. This circumstance would be compatible with his never having been adopted at all and with his never having left Bargawan. We now come to the remaining witnesses for the plaintiff. They are many of them apparently respectable people. Many of them are zamindars. A large number are Chatris. Most of them deposed to having been present at the adoption ceremony or knowing something about it. It is unfortunately, however, by no means unknown in cases of this kind for apparently respectable witnesses to depose absolutely falsely either to oblige their friends or from less reputable motives. The remarks apply not only to the witnesses who have given evidence as having been present at the time of the alleged adoption but to witnesses who have given evidence in respect of other incidents. Little can be based here upon apparent respectability for the defendants have produced a large number of witnesses who are also respectable. If their evidence is believed it is practically impossible that any such adoption could have taken place.

In these circumstances we come back to the impression left on the mind of the learned trial Judge as to the relative credibility of the witnesses. He refused to accept as credible any of the evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiff and he accepted as credible on the whole the evidence produced by the defendants We have already noted the peculiar circumstances of the case. The allegations as to the adoption can be criticised as they have been criticised both by the learned trial Judge and ourselves from many points of view unconnected with the personality of the witnesses. We have considered this case carefully and we have no hesitation in accepting the findings of the learned trial Judge as to the alleged ceremony. We agree with him in the finding that the evidence adduced by the plaintiff is not reliable and that the evidence adduced by the defendants is on the whole reliable and as a result we find that Jangu Singh is not established to have desired to adopt the plaintiff appellant and that he did nothing to attain that object. Upon this finding of facts the appeal must fail.

The remaining points are academic. As, however, the learned counsel for the appellant has pressed us to express some opinion as to the validity of an adoption by Jangu Singh of a son of a daughter of ShankarSingh we shall state findings upon the legal points. As we understand the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (1) their Lordships accepted the authority of the Dattaka Mimansa and Dattaka Chandrika in respect of twice born Hindus governed by the Mitakshara law Their Lordships were there considering the question as to whether the adoption of a sister's son in a twice born family governed by the Mitakshara law was or was not valid. They decided that such an adoption was not valid. But it appears to us that this decision is further an authority for the proposition that amongst twice born Hindus governed by the Mitakshara law an adoption can only be made of a boy whose natural mother could before her marriage have been legally married by the adoptor. We are supported in this position by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Puttu Lal v. Parbati Kuar (2) for at the end of that judgment it is said :

"In Srinamulu v. Ramayya (3) the adoption of a son of a wife's brother was held to be a valid adoption, and it was rightly pointed out that the rule of Hindu law that a legal marriage must have been possible between the adoptor and the mother of the adopted boy refers to their relationship prior to marriage."

On this view of the law it is clear that Jangu Singh could not have adopted the son of the daughter of his brother Shankar Singh for he could not have married the daughter of his brother Shankar Singh when she was unmarried.

The learned counsel for the appellant has put forward a further argument. He has referred to the wajibularz of the village Koiyan from which the ancestors of Jangu Singh came. In this wajib-ul-arz it is stated that a member of the family who is without issue can adopt the son of one of his male collaterals and it continues that if none of his male collaterals has any son he is competent to adopt a daughter's son or a sister's son. This wajib-ul-arz is Ex. 1. But we cannot see that even if this were held to be a valid custom it would assist the plaintiff for as we read it, if the right to adopt a daughter's son or sister's son includes a right to adopt a brother's daughter's son the right would only come into being in the absence of existing sons of collaterals. It is clearly established that there were existing sons of collaterals who could have been adopted. We find for example on the record of this case as a defendant Sant Bakhsh Singh, the son of the deceased Sanwal Singh, who was seven years old at the time of the institution of the suit. He must have been born in 1919 These questions as we have said before are, however, academic for the plaintiff having failed to establish on reliable evidence that there was any apparent adoption and having failed completely as to the factum of adoption the appeal fails on the facts without going into any question of law. We accordingly dismiss the appeal. Madho Singh, the next friend of the minor plaintiff appellant, will pay his own costs. Raj Kuar and Sant Bakhsh Singh minor were not represented in this appeal. The remaining respondents were represented by the same learned counsel. The respondents who are represented will receive their costs of appeal from Madho Singh the next friend of the minor whom we hold personally responsible for their costs.

Mt. Raj Kuwar and others — Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeals Nos. 90 and 93 of 1927, Decided on 7th November 1928, from an order of King, J., D/- 7th January 1927.

Oudh Estates Act (1 of 1869), S. 22 (10)—Plaintiff claiming declaration to reversionary title has to prove that he is nearest male agnate according to rule of lineal primogeniture.

Plaintiff claiming declaration as to his reversionary title to an impartible estate has to prove that he is the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture. Where the plaintiff fails to establish that his grandfather's father was the first born son of his father and was senior in age to his other brothers he cannot obtain the declaration : 20 Cal. 619 (P.C.), Dist. [P 476 C 2]

Judgment—These are the plaintiff's appeals from the decrees dated 7th April 1927, passed by Mr. Justice King sitting on the original side of this Court. They respectively arise out of two suits which the appellant instituted for obtaining the relief of a declaration as to his reversionary title to the estate of Uriadih situate in the District of Partabgarh in the Province of Oudh. Thakurain Sri Raj Kuar, defendant 1, in both the suits is the widow of Lal Bankateshar Bahadur Singh the last male holder of the aforesaid estate, and is in possession of the same. On 18th January 1922, she executed a perpetual lease in respect of certain lands situate in three villages comprised in the said estate in favour of Babu Ram, Ram Bharos, Nand Kumar, Parbhu Nath, Raghunath and Sri Nath, defendants 2 to 7 in one suit, and a sale-deed on 26th June 1919, in respect of village Sindhaura, within the estate in question in favour of Rani Jaggi Kumari defendant 2 in the other suit. Rani Jaggi Kumari died during the pendency of the suit and on her death the Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh as Manager in charge of the estate of the deceased and Peshapat Partab Bahadur Singh, Taj Partab Bahadur Singh, Biamond Raj Kumari, Lath Raj Kumari and Kunari Sahiba, Raj Kumari, minors, were impleaded as defendants.

The plaintiff attacks the validity of these two deeds and bases his right to do so on his reversionary title to the estate. The primary and the only question for determination in the appeals is the said title of the plaintiff. The validity of the alleged title solely depends upon the proof of a pedigree * which the plaintiff filed together with the plaints of the two suits. It is admitted that the plaintiff is not the reversioner nearest in degree to the last male holder but he claims title under the provisions of Cl. (10), S. 22, Act 1 of 1869, as amended by the latest enactment (Act 3 of 1910) of the Legislative Council of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh. The clause is as follows :

"or in default of or on the death of such mother, then to the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture subject as aforesaid."

The plaintiff has, therefore, to prove that he is the nearest male agnate according to the rule of lineal primogeniture. According to the decision of the learned Judge of the trial Court the plaintiff has succeeded in proving every step in the pedigree but he has failed to prove the primogeniture of one Zabar Singh in relation to his two brothers Pahalwan Singh and Gambhir Singh. On this ground the learned Judge has dismissed both the suits and the appeals before us, both in the memoranda and the arguments were confined to the last mentioned matter alone.

Zabar Singh was the father of the plaintiff's grandfather, Prithipal Singh. After the annexation, the taluqa of Uriadih was settled with Diwan Harmangal Singh, whose name was entered in Lists 1 and 2 of the lists prescribed by S. 8, Act 1 of 1869, in respect of that estate By virtue of the statutory effect and the character of List 2 the estate of Uriadih must be deemed to be an impartible estate.

We may mention at the outset that at the hearing of the appeals the respondents' learned counsel challenged the correctness of the finding of the learned trial Judge in respect of one step only in the pedigree propounded by the plaintiff. Zabar Singh mentioned above was the son of Zorawar Singh. The learned Judge has found that Zorawar Singh was senior in age to his brother Bhup Singh. This is the finding which has been impeached by the respondents. We have come to the conclusion that the finding of the learned trial Judge that the plaintiff has failed to establish that Zabar Singh was the first born son of Zorawar Singh must be upheld. Having regard to this conclusion we refrain from deciding the matter relating to the seniority of Zorawar Singh in relation to his brother, Bhup Singh. Obviously the onus lies on the plaintiff to establish the fact that Zabar Singh was senior in age to his other brothers. If we are satisfied, as we are and as the learned trial Judge was, that the plaintiff has failed to discharge that onus it is not necessary to consider other pleas urged in defence.

Apart from the evidence which is really very slender in proof of the fact that Zorawar Singh was the first born of the sons of his father it was argued on behalf of the appellant that having regard to the entry of the estate in List 2 and the provisions of S. 10, Act 1 of 1869, there is a conclusive presumption that Zabar Singh having held the estate in his possession at the time of his death was senior in age to his other two brothers Pahalwan Singh and Gambhir Singh. In support of this argument reliance is placed upon the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Narindar Bahadur v. Achal Ram (1). The estate involved in that case was an estate placed in List 2 of S. 8 of Act 1 of 1869 and not in List 3 as is the case here. In delivering the judgment of the Committee Lord Hobhouse said :

"The effect of that is that the estate is labelled as one which, according to the custom of the family, descends to a single heir, but not necessarily by the rule of lineal primogeniture. It may be, and, it has so happened in this case, that the heir according to lineal primogeniture is more remote in degree from the ancestor than other collaterals, or other persons in the line of heirship. If so, the degree prevails over line according to the classification under the Act ; though if two collaterals, are persons in the line of heirship equal in degree, then as the property can only go to one, recourse must be had to the seniority of line to find out which that one is."

The precise line of the argument before us is that Zabar Singh being equal in degree with his two other brothers must be presumed to have been the most senior in age for the reason that according to the rule of family custom stated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee the most senior of the brothers had the title to the estate. It may be that the argument is one aspect only, and that is, that in a case of competition of titles based on inheritance, Zabar Singh, if he were the most senior in age of his brothers, would succeed to the estate under the rule of the family custom, and if it were shown that he did, as a matter of fact, possess the estate on the basis of such a title, presumption may be raised that he was the most senior in age. But there is absolutely no evidence on the record to show this. True there is some evidence that the family held some property for instance Ex. A-71, the wajib-ul-arz of Raipur Bishaur, which recites the tradition :

"Therefore in paraganna Pattim Nath Singh's son Dula Rai and his son Basant Rai and his son Bhagwat Rai and his son Jagdish Rai and his son Hirday Shah succeeded one another as single owners. In short when the time of Hirday Shah was reached a fresh series of partitions commenced.....In short, the facts as to the separation and division of taluqas of paraganna patti and as to the acquisition of this taluqa are described in this way that Hirday Shah the common ancestor of the owners of patti, contracted two marriages, the first was Moong Dei while the second was Parbati. Mt. Moong Dei the first wife gave birth to three sons (1) Jai Singh Rai, among whose descendants are the taluqdars of Oriadih, 9 shares and 11 shares, (2) Paran Singh whose descendants hold taluqa Dasrathpur, (3) Ugrasen Singh, Ugrasen Singh's son was Indarjit Singh whose son was Zorawar Singh whose son was Rai Zabar Singh and his sons is Rai Pirthipal Singh the present possessor of the taluqa."

On the basis of this recital it may be held that there was some ancestral property, and having regard to other evidence on the record, equally consisting of tradition, it may further be held that Zabar Singh in his time held the nucleus of the estate of Raipur Bichaur But this is not enough. Zabar Singh was the most intrepid adventurer as compared to his three brothers and there is also the tradition, as appears from the evidence on the record, that his possession of the estate originated in bloodshed. The learned trial Judge of the trial Court is of opinion, and we think rightly, that Zorawar Singh acquired the estate by force or otherwise but not by inheritance Further the presumption raised by List 2 and S 10 is limited to presumption of impartibility and does not go further. We accordingly reject this argument. (After discussing evidence the judgment proceeded) Other evidence in this connexion is a pedigree, Ex. 152, which was filed by Rai Jagmohan Singh, the plaintiff's grandfather in a suit against one Diwan Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh for possession of the estate of Dasratpur which originally belonged to a member of the same family Hanuman Singh, whose name was entered in Lists 1 and 2 of Act 1 of 1869. This case was finally decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the year 1890 and the judgment of their Lordships is reported as Bisheshar Baksh Singh v Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh (2). The pedigree seems to have been admitted by the opposite party Dewan Ran Bijai Bahadur Singh In this case no question arose as to the seniority of Zabar Singh The claim which eventually succeeded was founded upon nearness of degree and the pedigree by itself does no more than mention the three sons of Zorawar Singh and mentions Zabar Singh's name first Obviously it will be highly unsafe to base a finding in favour of the plaintiff's case on such a slender foundation.

Finally we have three judgments in a case which arose in the year 1895. This was also a claim by a member of the same family, one Jageshar Bakhsh Singh for possession of the taluqa of Dasratpur. The plaintiff in that case founded his title on the seniority of Pahalwan Singh brother of Zabar Singh. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the finding that it was not established that Pahalwan Singh was senior in age to Zabar Singh vide Ex. 30. On appeal by the plaintiff a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and decreed the suit vide Ex. A-122. The defendant then appealed to His Majesty in Council and his appeal was allowed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee and the suit was eventually dismissed. The judgment of their Lordships is reported as Jagatpal Singh v Jageshar Baksh Singh (3). The finding of their Lordships was:

"It has not been proved that Pahalwan Singh was older than Zabar Singh, and the respondent's case, therefore, fails. The burden of proof was on the respondents and that burden they have failed to discharge."

Much stress was laid on this decision of their Lordships but we are unable to construe the finding quoted above as a finding in favour of the seniority of Zabar Singh. The case was dismissed on the sole ground that they had failed to discharge the onus of proof which as plaintiffs they were bound to sustain We are taking the same view of the burden of proof in the present case, and in agreement with the finding of the learned trial Judge we hold that appellant has failed to discharge that burden.

It now remains to say a few words as regards the oral evidence tendered on behalf of the plaintiff. We may mention that the appellant's learned counsel read to us the names of witnesses on whose evidence he wanted to rely in support of the appeal. We have ourselves read the evidence of those witnesses and are unable to disagree with the opinion which the trial Court formed in respect of it, that it is wholly unconvincing and worthless.

Before we take leave of the case there is one important matter which must be stated. The plaintiff who is the appellant before us, had brought another suit on the original side of this Court for a declaration of his reversionary title in respect of the estate of Patti Saifabad hissa No. 11, coupled with a declaration that the adoption of Dewan Rameshar Prasad Singh made by the widow, Thakurain Gajraj Kuar was invalid. To that suit both Thakurain Gajraj Kuar and Dewan Rameshar Prasad Singh were parties. The Courts in India held that Dewan Rameshar Prasad Singh was validly adopted by Thakurain Gajraj Kuar and the plaintiff's appeal to their Lordships of the Judicial Committee has also been dismissed. It is admitted on behalf of the plaintiff that Dewan Rameshar Prasad Singh in his character of an adopted son of Dewan Rajinder Bahadur Singh, the deceased husband of Thakurain Gajraj Kuar has a preferential reversionary title to the estate of Uriadih now in question as against the present plaintiff. There is no doubt that the decision in that suit constitutes res judicata as between the plaintiff and Dewan Rameshar Prasad Singh in the matter of the title founded on pedigree, to the estate of Uriadih. This being so it is obvious that the present appeal is wholly frivolous and is prompted by the litigious spirit of the appellant. We were asked by the respondent to admit in evidence the judgment of our Court in the previous suit and we have acceded to their prayer. There was no objection on behalf of the appellant as the judgment was delivered four days after the decision of the two suits, out of which these appeals arise, by the trial Court

We accordingly dismiss these appeals with costs. The Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh was separately represented before us in Appeal No 90 of 1927 by the Government Advocate of this Court. He would, therefore, be entitled to his separate costs in that appeal.

A short pedigree which we have made out will be attached to our decree.

Judgment.—This is the decree-holder's appeal in execution proceedings from the decree of the District Judge of Fyzabad dated 21st August 1928, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the same place dated 20th January 1928.

The appellant's application for execution of his decree has been rejected by the Courts below on the ground that the execution is barred by limitation. The appellant's case is that the execution is not barred on two grounds: (1). Acknowledgment by the judgment-debtor which saves limitation under S. 19, Lim. Act, 1908, and (2) payments made by the judgment-debtor from time to time towards the judgment-debt. Both these grounds were examined carefully and rejected by the Courts below. Having heard arguments we have come to the conclusion that the view taken by the said Courts is correct.

On the question of acknowledgment reliance is placed upon a letter dated 9th June 1925. It is a letter written by the general-agent of the respondent and the lower Court finds in agreement with the Court of first instance that it was written at the instructions of the judgment-debtor. It is signed by the agent The Courts below are of opinion that the letter would have served the purpose of a valid acknowledgment within the meaning of S. 19, Lim. Act, had it been shown that it was made within the time prescribed by the law of limitation for the recovery of the debt due under the decree. The finding in this behalf is that it is not so shown. The matter stands thus : Several payments were made by the judgment-debtor both before and after the letter in question but these payments in themselves are of no avail unless they are of such a nature as would fall within the terms of S 20 of the aforementioned Act and thus keep the limitation alive so as to enable the acknowledgment relied upon to become effective. The judgment-creditor has therefore to prove that before the date of the letter of acknowledgment payments were made for interest as such or for principal and in the latter case :

"acknowledgment of the payment appears in the handwriting of or in a writing signed by the person making the payment. vide S. 2 Act 1 of 1927.

It may be stated that the first part of the proviso to sub-S. 1, S. 20, Lim. Act, 1908, as amended by S 2, Act 1 of 1927,is inapplicable to the present case because the alleged payment of interest was made before the first day of January 1928. In this case there is no evidence of an acknowledgment of the nature required by the proviso and therefore the payment of any part of the principal cannot have the effect of saving limitation

As to the payment of interest, it is true that the decree-holder invariably credited the payments made by the judgment-debtor partly in payment of the interest and partly of the principal. Such an appropriation by the decree-holder, however, does not satisfy the requirements of the law. The payment must be a payment of interest "as such" and not towards the reduction of the general account in which each payment has been treated by the judgment-creditor as having the effect of reducingthe consolidated liability both for the principal and the interest of the judgment-debtor see : Hanmantmal v. Rambabai (1) ; Muhammad Abdulla Khan v. Bank Instalment Co., Ltd (2) Chanderpal Kunwar v Dunia Prasad (3) and Mahamed Kamel v. Ahmad Ali (4).

The rule enacted in S. 20, Lim. Act, 1908 as to the effect of the payment of interest is wholly independent of the other rule that where a debt is due which carries interest and payments are received by the creditor without a defined appropriation on the one side or the other the money so received is first applied in payment of interest and when that is satisfied then in payment of the capital. It seems to us clear that where money is paid on a general account without a defined appropriation on the part of the debtor no part of that money can be held to have been paid for interest 'as such.'

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs

H K. Ghosh—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent brought under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act (22 of 1886), by the Court of Wards, Ajodhya Estate, against Sarfaraz Singh the appellant. The suit was decreed by the Assistant Collector of Gonda on 9th August 1926, and while passing the decree for arrears of rent he passed a decree for ejectment of the appellant also. This decree has been confirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge of Gonda on 2nd May 1928. The appellant has now appealed to this Court

The facts of the case are that the land in suit consisted of the occupancy holding of two miniors, named Raghuraj and Ram Raj. The land had been mortgaged to the appellant Sarfaraz Singh under various deeds, some of which were executed by one Ramnidh, uncle of the minors, and others were executed by Mt. Hubraji their mother. The minors failed to pay rent and on 1st September 1919, a decree for arrears of rent was obtained by the Court of Wards against the said minors under guardianship of their mother Mt. Hubraji. The decree remained unsatisfied and on the basis thereof the Court of Wards brought a suit for ejectment of the minor from the said holding and obtained a decree on 30th September 1920. The mortgagee was not made a party to either of these two suits and he continued to remain in possession. In June 1923, the Court of Wards took out execution proceedings and took delivery of possession of the said holding. In spite of the decree for ejectment against the tenants and in spite of the delivery of possession through Court the appellant continued to remain in possession. The Court of Wards thereupon brought the present suit on 23rd March 1926. They treated the appellant as a tenant under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act and claimed a decree for arrears against him and also prayed for his ejectment. The rent was determined and as stated above a decree for the amount so found was passed against the appellant and a decree for ejectment was also passed against him.

When the appeal came on for hearing before a single Judge of this Court a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lay to this Court against the decree of the Courts below so far as it directed the ejectment of the appellant. The contention was that an appeal against decree for ejectment would lie to a Court of revenue and not to a civil Court. The learned Judge of this Court thereupon referred this case for decision of a Bench of two Judges and the case has now been laid before us.

Regarding the preliminary objection we may state that this very point was raised in Rent Appeal 22 of 1928 which has been decided by a Bench of this Court and will be found reported as Ram Bahadur Singh v.

Dharam Raj Singh (1). It has been held in that case that the decree for ejectment passed in such cases is appealable to the civil Courts along with the appeal against the decree for arrears of rent and that no separate appeal would lie to a Court of revenue against the decree for ejectment. The learned counsel for the respondent accepts this decision for the purposes of this appeal. The preliminary objection fails and is, therefore, rejected

As to the merits the learned advocate for the appellant has raised three points in support of his appeal; firstly, that the tenure in suit is not an occupancy tenure but is an under-proprietary tenure conferred upon the ancestors of the mortgagors under a settlement decree dated 31st January 1872, secondly, that the decree for ejectment is not a valid decree and is in any case not binding upon the appellant since he was no party to the ejectment suit brought against the mortgagors by the Court of Wards, and, thirdly, that the Court of Wards have accepted rent from the appellant and it was not open to them to treat him as a tenant under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act.

As to the first point we have carefully read the decree of the Settlement Court. After its perusal we are of opinion that it did not confer any under-proprietary rights and that the rights which were conferred under it upon the ancestors of the minors named above consisted only of occupancy rights The judgment clearly states that the claimants failed to establish any proprietary or under-proprietary right in respect of the eight annas share of the village in which these lands are situate. After that declaration it is clear that when the Settlement Court decreed "qabzadari" rights they meant only heritable and non-transferable rights and not rights in the nature of an under-proprietary tenure We, therefore, reject the first contention.

As to the second contention the argument that was addressed to us was of a two-fold character. One was to the effect that the decree is not valid and binding on the minors since no notice of the appointment of their guardian was given to them in the suit in which the decree for ejectment was passed and the other was to the effect that the appellant not being a party to that decree it could not be considered binding upon him.

As to the first argument it appears to us that it cannot be sustained since, in our opinion, the mother of the minors actually contested the suit and the interest of the minors were sufficiently protected during the trial of the suit. It is now a settled rule of law that if a minor is sufficiently represented in a suit and his guardian, though not properly appointed conducts the suit on behalf of the minor in a proper manner the minor cannot be allowed to challenge the result of that suit by alleging that at the time of the appointment of the guardian ad litem of the minor no notice thereof was given to him. The argument, therefore, fails.

As to the second argument we may state that it has also no force. It is now settled by a series of decisions that where an occupancy tenant mortgages his holding and the occupancy tenure is extinguished by virtue of relinquishment or ejectment the interest of the mortgagee in respect of that holding also ceases from that date. This was held by Piggott, J., in Ram Racha Dube v. Gokul Rai (2). It was a case where an ex-proprietary tenant whose tenure, we may observe, is of the same character as that of an occupancy tenant had mortgaged his holding and the question arose as to whether the rights of the mortgagee in respect of that holding could continue after the ejectment of the occupancy tenant. It was held that whatever rights were possessed by the tenant were extinguished by the ejectment and that after the ejectment the ex-proprietary tenure which formed the subject of mortgage ceased to exist. The same view has been taken by the Board of Revenue in several cases : vide Naubat Bibi v. Raghubar Koeri (3), decided by Messrs. Freemantle and Hopkins and Haji Husain Khan v. Faujdar Khan (4) decided by Messrs. Oakden and McNair and reported in Revenue Cases for the year 1927, p. 422. We are, therefore, of opinion that the occupancy tenure ceased to exist when the tenants Raghuraj and Ram Raj were actually ejected in June 1923, in execution of the decree for ejectment passed against them. The position of the mortgagee would thereafter be held either to be that of a trespasser or that of a tenant if so recognized by the landlord.

As to the third point the learned advocate for the appellant drew our attention to several receipts on the record showing that rent had been accepted by the Court of Wards from the appellant On examination, however, it appears that those receipts relate to a period anterior to ejectment. The Court of Wards accepted rent only on behalf of the occupancy tenant and in no way recognized the validity of the mortgage in his favour. No rent was accepted by the Court of Wards after the ejectment. The appellant had sent by money order rent for the subsequent period but the Court of Wards had refused to accept it. Under those circumstances it appears to us to be clear that the appellant has never been recognized as a tenant by the Court of Wards by virtue of acceptance of rent

The result of all these findings is that the rights of the appellant as mortgagee of the occupancy holding came to an end when his mortgagors were ejected in 1923, and that thereafter the position of the appellant was that of a pure trespasser and the Court of Wards was justified in treating him as a tenant under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act. The decree for ejectment has, therefore, been rightly passed. No question as to the amount of rent for which the decree was passed against him was raised in appeal

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment.—The view of the Chief Inspector of Stamps is borne out by the decision in Hem Nath v. Wilayat Ahmad (1). But this Court has now no power to require a party to pay an additional fee. The power to compel the payment of the additional fee is given to a Court by S 12, Court-fees Act of 1870. Primarily the power should be exercised by the Court in which the plaint or memorandum of appeal which is deficiently stamped has been filed but by the second portion of the section, the same power can be exercised by a Court of appeal, reference or revision if in its opinion the question has been wrongly determined to the detriment of the revenue. The Court must either be the Court in which the plaint or memorandum of appeal has been filed or a Court sitting as a Court of appeal, reference or revision. Undoubtedly the question could have been raised when the appeal was heard. But the appeal was decided on 21st January 1929, before the question was ever raised. We are not a Court of appeal, reference or revision in respect of this question and the Court which decided the matter is now functus officio. In these circumstances we can take no action in the matter.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage. The plaintiffs' case, as originally put forward in the plaint, was that their predecessor-in-interest Pahalwan Singh had on 10th June 1869, made a mortgage with possession in favour of Moti, the predecessor-in-interest of the defendants, for Rs. 99 and they claimed to be entitled to a decree for redemption of the said mortgage. The defendants denied the existence of the mortgage set up by the plaintiffs. They pleaded that they were in possession of the property in suit under two other deeds of mortgage, one for Rs. 32 dated 6th September 1863 (Ex. A-1) and the other for Rs. 36-14-0 dated 21st October 1866 (Ex. A-2). Both these deeds were executed by Jodhan Singh the predecessor of Pahalwan Singh. The explanation offered by plaintiffs with regard to the two mortgages, Exs. A-1 and A-2 was that the mortgage deed in in suit dated 10th June 1869 was executed in lieu of them and that these earlier deeds had merged in the latter deed. However, in order to be on the safe side they also applied for an amendment of their plaint and asked for permission to add an alternative relief for redemption of the two mortgages set up by the defendants in case the existence of the mortgage deed set up by the plaintiffs was not established. This application for amendment was at first opposed by the defendants but subsequently the opposition was withdrawn and the amendment was made accordingly. The defendants were given an opportunity to meet the alternative case introduced into the pleadings by means of the amendment and they sought to meet it by pleading that the plaintiffs' claim for redemption of the two mortgages, Exs. A-1 and A-2 was barred by limitation. The plaintiffs answered the plea of limitation by setting up an acknowledgment said to have been made by Moti on 14th May 1869.

The parties went to trial on these pleadings and the learned Munsif found that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the existence of the mortgage, dated 10th June 1869. He, however, found the alleged acknowledgment by Moti of two mortgages dated 6th September 1863 and 21st October 1866 established and as a consequence of this finding he gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession by redemption of the two mortgages aforesaid. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. He bases his decision on two grounds, namely, (1) that the Munsif was wrong in allowing amendment and decreeing the claim on the basis of the two mortgages set up by the defendants and (2) that no valid acknowledgment was proved and therefore the claim for redemption in respect of the two mortgage deeds was barred by limitation.

The plaintiffs-appellants have come here in second appeal They impugn the findings of the lower appellate Court on both the points mentioned above. As regards the question of amendment I am constrained to say that the view taken by the lower appellate Court is astonishing. It is true, as pointed out by the lower appellate Court on the authority of Sheo Prasad v. Lalit Kuar (1) and Salik Ram v. Ramanand (2), that in a suit for redemption the plaintiff can get a decree only on foot of the mortgage set up by him and if he fails to prove such mortgage he cannot be given a decree for redemption on any other mortgages which might be found to subsist between the parties. But this, in my opinion, affords all the more reasons why the plaintiff in such a case should be allowed to amend his plaint if he wishes to do so. O. 6, R. 17, Civil P. C, gives wide discretion to the Court in the matter of amendment of pleadings.

(2) [1900] 3 O. C. 179.

As pointed out before the objection raised against the amendment on behalf of the defendant was subsequently withdrawn by them. Under the circumstances I find myself wholly unable to follow the process of reasoning by which the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the trial Court was not justified in allowing the amendment All that Mr Hyder Hussein, the learned counsel for the defendants-respondents could say in support of the judgment of the lower appellate Court was that the amendment was improper as it had the effect of introducing a new cause of action. However, he had to concede that he could not object to such amendment, if the relief for redemption of the two mortgages was claimed in the alternative. Para 2 (b), which was added as a result of the amendment clearly shows that the plaintiffs in the first place asked for redemption of the two earlier mortgages set up by the defendants. I must, therefore, accept the contention of the appellants and hold that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in questioning the amendment which was made in the trial Court.

Next as regards acknowledgment. It is admitted that the present suit was instituted more than 60 years after the execution of the two mortgages, Exs. A-1 and A-2. The plaintiffs seek to bring their claim within limitation by relying upon an acknowledgment made by the mortgagee Moti on 14th May 1869. The acknowledgment is said to be contained in the plaint of a suit to contest a notice of ejectment which was instituted by Moti in the revenue Court Ex. 4 is the copy of the said plaint. It appears that one Durga issued a notice of ejectment against Moti alleging him to be a mere tenant. Moti instituted a suit to contest the notice setting up his rights as a mortgagee under the two mortgages in question. Moti was ultimately successful in his suit and the notice of ejectment issued against him was cancelled. The judgment and decree passed in the said suit are the defendants' own Exs.A-2 and A-4 of this case. The plaintiffs produced Ex. 4 which is a certified copy of the aforesaid plaint on 26th September 1928, which was the date fixed for the framing of issues. The trial Court on that very day presumed it to be genuine under S. 90, Evidence Act. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the genuineness of Ex. 4 could not be presumed because no presumption under S. 90, Evidence Act, can be made in favour of a copy when the original has not been produced before the Court. The learned counsel for the defendants-respondents laid great stress upon the fact that it was a matter in the discretion of the lower Courts whether the genuineness of Ex. 4 should be presumed or not and the lower appellate Court having in the exercise of its discretion refused to presume its genuineness, the discretion of the lower appellate Court cannot be questioned in second appeal. It might be remarked in passing that obviously the principle emphasised by the learned counsel for the respondents has been violated by the learned Subordinate Judge. It might also be pointed out that the genuineness of the document having been presumed by the trial Court on the very date when the document was produced in evidence, there was hardly any occasion for the plaintiffs to summon the original of the document before the Court. Under the circumstances, if the view of the lower appellate Court, that it was essential for the Court to have the original before it in order to enable it to make a presumption under S 90, is correct, the proper course for that Court to have adopted would have been to give an opportunity to the plaintiffs to summon the original before the Court, rather than to throw out the claim on that ground. However, apart from all these circumstances I am satisfied in the present case that there has been no exercise of discretion by the lower appellate Court. The learned Subordinate Judge took a certain view of law and held in accordance therewith that no presumption could be raised under S. 90 because the original had not been produced before the Court.

The whole question, therefore, which requires consideration is whether the view of law taken by the learned Subordinate Judge is correct or not. The lower appellate Court has never approached the case from the standpoint that if the terms of S. 90 permitted the Court to presume the genuineness of a copy whether the present case was a fit one or not for the raising of such presumption. For these reasons I think that I am free to consider the validity of the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge in light of the law on the point. The words used in S. 90, Evidence Act are : " When any document ... .. ... is produced." These words as they stand do not confine the application of the section to cases in which the original document is actually before the Court. It is admitted by the learned counsel for the defendants-respondents that the certified copy of the plaint filed in Court was admissible as secondary evidence of the original which formed part of a public record. In my opinion, therefore, there was nothing in S. 90 to prevent the Court from making a presumption of the genuineness of the original. If authority were needed I may refer to the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court reported in P. Subramanya Somayajulu v. Seethayya (3) It will suffice for me to quote the relevant portion of the head-note which is as follows:

" The presumption under S. 90, Evidence Act, with regard to documents 30 years old arises in the case of copies as well as originals. If the copy is proved to be a true copy a presumption may be made in favour of the genuineness of the original."

I am, therefore, of opinion that the second ground relied upon by the learned Subordinate Judge is also untenable. Before leaving this part of the case it might be mentioned that the learned counsel for the defendants-respondents contended that the lower appellate Court was justified in refusing to presume the genuineness of Ex. 4 because there was evidence before it which went to show that Moti was illiterate. This is answered by what I have said before that in my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge has not applied his mind at all as to whether it was a fit case for the exercise of discretion or not. Reference to the illiteracy of Moti was made only in support of the view that it was the duty of trial Court to insist on the production of the original before it.

For the above reasons I allow the appeal, set aside the decision of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. The plaintiffs-appellants will get their costs in this Court as well as in the lower appellate Court.

First Appeal No. 87 of 1928, Decided on 8th May 1929, against order of Sub-Judge, Unao, D/- 15th May 1928.

(a) Pre-emption—Suit for—Fictitiousness of consideration—Burden of proof.

(c) Pre-emption—Suit for—Criterion for determination of market value of property in dispute is amount actually paid under sale deed.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a pre-emption suit. One Akhtar Ali who is defendant 3 in this suit sold two annas nine pies share out of the entire village situate in Patti Salabat Khan of Village Bhugaita, District Unao, to Pandit Har Prasad and Pandit Ganga Sewak, alias Manni Lal for Rs. 12,500 The sale deed was executed on 14th August 1926. The consideration as stated in the deed was made up of the following items :

1. Due under a mortgage deed dated 24th July 1924, executed by Akthar Ali in favour of Har Prasad and Ganga Saran ... Rs. 4,804-5-3
2. Due under 5 pro-notes of different dates executed by Akhtar Ali in favour of those very gentlemen ... ... Rs. 2,052-0 0

| 5. Costs of stamp and registration expenses | ... ... | Rs. 293-10-9 |
| | Total | Rs. 12,500-0-0 |

The plaintiff-appellant Abid Ali Khan is a cosharer in patti Salabat Khan of Village Bhugaita and therefore has brought the present suit claiming pre-emption in respect of the share sold. The main allegation on which he brought the suit was that the consideration entered in the sale deed was fictitious, and denied that the first item was actually due on the mortgage deed dated 24th July 1924. He admitted the genuineness of that item of the consideration to the extent of Rs. 2,713-12-0 but denied the pro-notes alleging that they were all fictitious and therefore denied the genuineness of the entire item shown in the sale deed as due on that account. The rest of the items were admitted The result was that he admitted the genuineness of the consideration entered in the sale-deed to the extent of Rs. 8,063-12-0. He alleged that that was the real price for which the property had been sold. He further alleged that the third item consisted of Rs. 2,350 which was due to the plaintiff under a pro-note executed in his favour and which had not been paid by the vendees and out of the first item he also alleged that Rs. 1,000 shown in the mortgage deed dated 24th July 1924, to be payable to one Chandika Singh, who was in possession of a portion of the property as a prior mortgagee, had not been paid and consequently the plaintiff was entitled to deduct that amount also. In all he claimed a deduction for Rs. 3,350 leaving a balance of Rs. 4,713-12-0 on the payment of which amount he said he was entitled to claim pre-emption.

The vendees who are defendants respondents in this case contended in their defence that none of the items was fictitious and that the price entered in the sale deed was actually the price which was settled between the parties. They said that Rs. 12,500 was also the market value of the property in suit and even if any portion of the consideration money was found to be fictitious the plaintiff-appellant could not claim pre-emption on payment of any sum less than Rs. 12,500. It is not necessary to mention other pleas taken in defence since none of them were pressed in the trial Court and all of them were therefore overruled.

The two main points around which the contest raged in the trial Court were the questions of fictitious nature of the consideration and the market value of the property sold. The learned Subordinate Judge of Unao who tried the case found that no item of the consideration was fictitious, but he held that the sum of Rs. 1,000 payable to Chandika Singh under the mortgage-deed dated 24th July 1924, had not been paid nor had the item of Rs. 2,350 payable to the plaintiff been paid. The learned Subordinate Judge also found that Rs. 12,500 was the market value of the property sold. He therefore passed a decree for pre-emption in favour of the plaintiff-appellant on payment of the entire consideration money, minus the sums mentioned above The result was that he allowed pre-emption on payment of Rs 9,150 The date of his decree is 15th May 1928

In appeal the same two points have again been urged and we have heard arguments in this case at considerable length. We now proceed to give our findings in respect of both these two points.

As to the fictitiousness of the consideration it is a settled rule of law that a very slight proof will shift the burden to the vendees to prove the actual payment of the price entered in the deed : vide Dwarika v. Ludar (1).

As to item 1 entered in the sale deed due on account of the deed dated 24th July 1924, we are clearly of opinion that the amount entered in the sale deed was a fictitious item. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant contended that the sum actually due on account of the mortgage deed at the time when the sale deed was executed was only Rs. 2,713-12-0. He arrived at this sum by calculating the compound interest from 24th July 1924 to 14th August 1926, and by adding it on to the principal amount. We have ourselves calculated the amount and it appears to us that the compound interest on Rs. 2,500 at as. 9 per cent per mensem compoundable yearly, calculated from the 24th July 1924 to 14th August 1926 comes to Rs. 358 total Rs. 2,858; but it is admitted by the parties that out of the sum of Rs. 2,500, Rs. 1,000 payable to Chandika Singh had not been paid. The sum due to the defendants-respondents under the mortgage deed was Rs. 1,500 plus compound interest thereon at as. 9 per cent per mensem compoundable yearly which comes to Rs. 215. The total sum therefore due to the mortgagees was Rs. 1,715. In place of this the mortgagees entered Rs. 4,803-5-3 as due to them under the deed. We are therefore clearly satisfied that this item of the consideration is a ficititious one, not being due on the date when the sale deed was executed

The learned counsel for the respondents admitted that no interest should have been charged on Rs. 1,000 payable to Chandika Singh nor should that item have been included in the principal sum due under the mortgage deed. He, however, contended as was contended on behalf of his clients before the trial Court that his clients were entitled to charge interest for 10 years, the period fixed in the mortgage deed. The argument put forward was that if the property had been sold to a third person the mortgagees were entitled to claim interest for the entire period fixed in the mortgage deed. We do not think that the mortgagees were entitled to claim interest for this period when they themselves had purchased the property, the fact of their purchasing the property having in our opinion the effect of extinguishing the mortgage. If the mortgage was extinguished we fail to see how it could be kept alive for the purpose of calculating interest. We are therefore of opinion that the item of Rs. 4,804-5-3 was a fictitious item not having been due on the date when the sale took place.

As to the item due under the five pronotes we are not inclined to disagree with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge. We think that the fictitious nature of the item of consideration due on these pro-notes is not established. We have not thought it proper to go into detail in regard to the items due on account of these five promissory notes, because our finding in regard to item 1 makes it unnecessary for us to deal at length with the said item. If one item of the consideration is proved to be fictitious the entire consideration entered in the sale deed of which this item forms part must be deemed to be fictitious. Our finding therefore on the first point is that the consideration entered in the sale deed dated 14th August 1926, is a fictitious item, and that the sale consideration entered in the deed was not bona fide.

Having arrived at this conclusion it is necessary for us to determine the market value of the property in suit. In order to determine the market value we proceed first to determine what amount was actually paid under the sale deed. According to our finding all the items of consideration under the sale deed are genuine except item 1 under which head only Rs. 1,715 had been paid. If the item payable to Chandika Singh be added, it would come to Rs. 2,715. The item actually entered in the deed on this account was Rs. 4,804 5-3. The excess which was not due and which was entered in the deed therefore comes to Rs. 2,089-5-3. Deducting this from the entire sum of Rs. 12,500 we got the figure at Rs. 10,410-10-9. We have only tried to ascertain this sum since it will be a guide to help us in determining the market value, if it is not otherwise fully established: vide Abilakh v Rabban Singh (2)

On the question of the market value the learned Subordinate Judge has principally relied on the sale transaction embodied in Ex. A-32 which is dated 28th January 1924 A suit for pre-emption was lodged by the plaintiff himself in respect of this sale deed and the decree passed in his favour is Ex A-20. The sale deed was in respect of a 3 annas 3 pies share in patti Salabat Khan and was for a sum of Rs. 13,500 Calculating the price according to the rate entered in this sale deed the price of 2 annas 9 pies' share would come to Rs. 11,423. It was urged by the learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant that the price entered in this sale deed was also a fancy price and should not be considered as a true criterion for determining the market value of the share in dispute, and in support of his contention he relied upon a counter claim for pre-emption put forward by the defendants-respondents in respect of this very sale, as will appear from Ex. 4 In this document the defendants-respondents alleged that the market value of the property sold was not more than Rs. 11,500. Although a decree was passed in this case in favour of the plaintiff-appellant in preference to the defendants-respondents on payment of Rs. 13,500, it does not appear from the record as to whether the question of the market value of the share sold was actually determined, or whether the decree was passed merely on confession or compromise of the parties. In the absence of any such material to help us we think that it would be safe for us if we put the market value of the property in suit at Rs. 11,000 which comes roughly to about 50 times the profits of the property The sum of money actually paid under the deed according to our finding on the first point comes to Rs. 10410-10-9 and the price according to the rate entered in Ex. A-32 comes to Rs. 11,123. We, therefore, prefer to take a rough average and fix the market value of this property in suit at Rs 11,000.

The learned Subordinate Judge has also relied in this connexion upon a mortgage-deed executed by the plaintiff-appellant in respect of this very property but in our opinion that can be no test for determining the market value of the same. The mortgage may be a mortgage to the very hilt or it may be with a little margin Under these circumstances we do not consider it safe to reply upon that transaction as a guide for determining the market value.

On behalf of the respondents reliance was placed on two other sale deeds which were executed on 22nd March 1919 and 7th July 1923 and which were in respect of a 2 annas 8 pies share of patti Wali Muhammad. They are Exs 2 and 3 respectively. As they belong to a different patti altogether and as there is no definite proof before us as to what is the difference in the quality of land of patti Wali Muhammad and patti Salabat Khan we discard these documents from our consideration.

Our finding, therefore, is that the market value of the property in suit is Rs. 11,000.

We, therefore, modify the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge to this extent that the plaintiff-appellant will be entitled to pre-empt the property in suit on payment of Rs. 11,000 instead of Rs. 12,500 as decreed by the Subordinate Judge. Out of this sum of Rs. 11,000 the plaintiff-appellant will be entitled to deduct Rs. 3,350, i. e., Rs. 2,350 on account of the sum payable to the plaintiff-appellant himself which has not yet been paid by the vendees and Rs. 1,000 which they have not paid to Chandika Singh under the mortgage deed dated 24th July 1924. The total sum to be deposited by the plaintiff will thus be Rs 7,650.

Regarding costs our order is that as both parties have partially succeeded and partially failed and as the pre-emptive right of the plaintiff-appellant is not questioned we direct that the parties should bear their own costs in the lower Court as well as in this Court.

If there is a grove land belonging to a cosharer standing in the joint land and the said land either wholly or partially falls at the time of the partition into the share of another cosharer, the latter becomes entitled to both the land and the trees, unless the former's title to the trees and his status as a grove-holder is secured to him by the partition proceedings. In absence of such evidence of the partition proceedings it cannot be held that the rights as a grove-holder were preserved to the cosharer claiming them.

(b) Limitation Act, Arts. 142 and 144—In case of parti land possession follows title.

In the case of parti land the presumption of law is that possession must follow title. Where, therefore, certain cosharer got title after partition possession is presumed to have passed to him and suit for possession brought by him long after partition is not barred. [P 491 C 1, 2] ate in village Lakhra, District Partabgarh. At the time of the First Regular Settlement there was a plot of land No. 349, measuring 5 bighas 11 biswas 12 biswansis situate in that village, which was recorded as a grove in possession of two persons Parag Singh and Dwarika Singh who were ancestors of the defendant This plot was the joint land of all the cosharers in the village including Parag Singh and Dwarka Singh having been recorded as shamlat deh (common to the whole village.) In the year 1885 there was a partition between the cosharers of the village with the result that a portion of the plot No. 349 was allotted to the share of Jagannath Singh, the father of plaintiff 1. The number of the plot was 349-3 and its area was 1 bigha 7 biswas. In the second Settlement which took place in 1300 Fasli (1893-94) this number 349-3 was converted into No. 1107 The total area of number 1107 was recorded as 1 bigha 12 biswas 17 biswansis, the excess belonging to one Mt. Sukh Raj Kuar.

It appears that shortly after the partition proceedings the defendant constructed his house on the portion of plot No. 1107 belonging to the the said lady with her permission. The portion of No. 1107 which belongs to the plaintiffs now bears Nos 1020 (Be) and 1023 (Alif) according to the recent Settlement. Two mahua trees belonging to the defendant are also to be found on the land in dispute. It further appears that the defendant has recently brought a portion of the land in dispute under his cultivation. The plaintiffs brought a suit against the defendant for rent in respect of this land under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act, but his suit was dismissed on 29th August 1927. This has given the plaintiffs their cause of action to bring the present suit. The plaintiffs now claim possession of the aforesaid land, that is, plots Nos 1020 (Be) and 1023 (Alif) of the current Settlement corresponding to plot No. 1107 of the second Settlement. They have also claimed damages and injunction restraining the defendant from cultivating the land in suit.

The defendant denied the plaintiffs' title and their possession within limitation but contended that he was in adverse possession of the said land and had become owner thereof. His case in the alternative was that the land having been recorded at the First Regular Settlement as the grove of his ancestors was his own grove and that the plaintiff was not entitled to the possession of the land since his trees still stood on the said land.

The learned Munsif of Partabgarh who tried the suit held that the land in suit had been allotted to the share of Jagannath Singh father of Chhaterpal Singh plaintiff 1 and was, therefore, the property of the plaintiffs but held that the land prior to its having been cultivated by the defendant was parti (fallow) and that the defendant had begun to cultivate it only a few years prior to the suit. Their possession within limitation was held to have been established and in this view of the case he decreed the plaintiff's suit exempting the land on which the defendant's house stood. He, however, did not award any damages to the plaintiffs, since none were proved.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareli has reversed the decree of the learned Munsif on the ground that the land in suit constituted the grove land of the defendant and that the plaintiffs were not, therefore, entitled to the possession thereof. He has, however, passed a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiffs to the effect that they are the owners of the land in suit.

The plaintiffs have now come up to this Court in second appeal and the main point urged on their behalf is that the status of the defendant in respect of the land in suit cannot be treated in law as that of the grove-holder and that the plaintiffs are entitled to the actual possession of the land in suit. They have, however, given up their claim to the two mahua trees standing on the said land which they have admitted are the property of the defendant-respondent. I have heard the arguments in this case at length and have come to the conclusion that the contention raised on behalf of the appellants is sound and the plaintiffs' suit must be decreed

I now proceed to give my reasons for this conclusion.

It appears to me to be clear that if there is a grove land belonging to a cosharer standing on the joint land and the said land either wholly or partially falls at the time of the partition into the share of another cosharer, the latter becomes entitled to both the land and the trees, unless the former's title to the trees and his status as a grove-holder is secured to him by the partition proceedings. The ordinary presumption of law is that the trees pass along with the soil on which they stand. The case of a tenant holding a grove on a plot of land allotted to a cosharer is a quite different one. The cosharer to whose share that land is allotted cannot in such a case become the owner of the trees since the trees did not belong to the person, who was the owner of the land. In such a case the possession of the tenant as a grove-holder cannot be disturbed by the cosharer in whose share the land has fallen. No such position, as stated above can be attributed to a cosharer who is the owner of the land as well as of the trees. None of the parties in this case has chosen to produce the partition proceedings I cannot, therefore, in the absence of such evidence hold that the rights of the defendant-respondent as a grove-holder were preserved to him. There is no dispute regarding the two mahua trees which still exist on the lands in suit because the plaintiffs-appellants have admitted the right of the defendant-respondent to hold these trees. That does not, however, mean that they ought to be deemed to have admitted the status of the defendant-respondent as a grove-holder in respect of the land in suit. I am, therefore, unable to take the view which the learned Subordinate Judge has taken, namely, that the defendant-respondent ought to be treated as a grove-holder of the land, which has fallen into the share of the ancestors of the plaintiffs-appellants.

During the course of arguments the learned advocate for the defendant-respondent contended that the plaintiffs-appellants' suit was barred by limitation since they had brought the suit for possession long after the partition of 1885. I regret I cannot accept that contention. It is clear from the evidence on the record that the nature of the land was parti and that it has only been recently brought under cultivation by the defendant-respondent. The nature of the land being parti the presumption of the law is that in such a case possession must follow title. The claim of the plaintiffs-respondents, therefore, cannot be thrown out on the ground that they have brought their suit for possession long after the partition

I may just point out that the plaintiffs-appellants did not claim the land on which the house stands since it was constructed by the defendant with the permission of Mt Sukhraj Kuar. The learned advocate for the defendant-respondent urged that his client's right to possess land on which the house stands must not be disturbed and that he should also be given free right of access to that house. This position is quite a reasonable one and the plaintiffs cannot claim possession of any portion of the land on which the house of the defendant-respondent stands. They must also allow him a right of free egress and ingress. The plaintiffs-appellants will, however, be declared to be the owner of the land on which the house stands if any portion of it belongs to them

I am, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to a decree for actual possession of the land claimed by them on condition that they will not be allowed to take possession of the land on which the house of the defendant-respondents stands, if any portion of it, be the property of the plaintiffs-appellants.

I therefore, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and restore the decree passed by the learned Munsif with costs in all the three Courts.

First Appeal No. 38 of 1929, Decided on 8th August 1929, from decree of Sub-Judge, Mohanlalganj, D/- 20th March 1929.

Court-fees Act, S. 7 (iv) (c)—Suit for declaration that certain deeds are voidable with prayer for their cancellation—Ad valorem fee must be paid.

Where a person not only asks for a declaration that certain deeds are voidable against him because his consent to their execution has been caused by fraud or misrepresentation but also asks that the deed should be cancelled and delivered up. The suit is distinctly a suit for declaration with a prayer for consequential relief and ad valorem fee must be paid under the provisions of S. 7 (iv) (c) and stamp of Rs. 10 is insufficient: 29 Bom. 207, Rel. on ; 5 All. 331 (F. B.) and 1 O. C. 129, not Foll. [P 493 C 1]

Daya Kishen Seth—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The facts are as follows: The appellant Kuber Saran instituted a suit on 10th November 1928, asking for the cancellation of three deeds dated 23rd August 1928, 12th September 1928, and 15th September 1928 executed by him in favour of other persons on the ground that the execution of these deeds had been caused by fraud and misrepresentation. He valued the property covered by these deeds at Rs. 6,000 and valued the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 6,000.

He paid a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10 on the relief on the ground that this was a suit of declaratory nature The learned trial Judge considered that this was a suit under S. 39, Specific Relief Act (1 of 1877). It clearly was such a suit. It was a suit for a declaration and also for consequential relief by cancellation of of the document in question. The learned trial Judge taking this view directed the appellant to make up the deficiency of Rs. 295. The appellant did not take exception to this order. He was granted time within which to make up the deficiency. He did not make up the deficiency but applied to amend his plaint. The amendment of the plaint altered to a large extent the character of the suit and the learned trial Judge refused to allow the plaint to be amended. The learned trial Judge says

"Instead, however, of paying court-fees on the valuation, plaintiff has applied for amendment of the plaint by asking for a relief that the plaintiff's possession be maintained. And it is argued now that the suit has been converted into one for possession and court-fee is therefore payable on five times the land revenue. I am unable to accede to the argument The device is transparent Plaintiff is in possession. He does not state even now that he has been dispossessed. He does not ask for a decree for possession. He only states that his possession be confirmed and maintained. This relief does not make the suit one for possession."

The learned trial Judge then passed a final order and fixed a date on which the deficiency was to be made up and stated that he would grant no extension in any circumstances. On that date the deficiency had not been made up. The learned Judge then rejected the plaint under the provisions of O. 1, R. 11 (c) of the Code which provides that where the relief claimed has been properly valued but the plaint has been written upon paper insufficiently stamped and the plaintiff on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper within a time to be fixed by the Court fails to do so, the plaint may be rejected. It is to be noted that in these circumstances the provisions of O. 7, R. 13, may apply in future. The plaintiff-appellant has now presented an appeal here and has taken a somewhat peculiar position. It is to be noted that in the lower Court his counsel first argued that this was a suit for a declaration only but when the order was finally passed against him to the effect that it was a suit for a declaration and consequential relief he accepted that order and asked for time to pay the money. Having failed to pay the money within the time allowed he now contests the validity of the order In our opinion it is the duty of a plaintiff, who is ordered to pay a certain court-fee, to obey the order or to take consequence of the rejection of his plaint. He suffers no real hardship thereby for a door is open to him to take up the matter in appeal afterwards and in event of his success the money will be refunded. This circumstance affects the position of the plaintiff-appellant here, but apart from that we are of opinion that the view of the learned Judge is correct. An examination of S. 39, Act 1 of 1877 leads us to the following conclusions.

In the case in which a person alleges that the execution of a written instrument can be challenged on the ground that the instrument is voidable because his consent has been obtained by coercion, fraud or misrepresentation the person taking this position can adopt more than one course. He can ask for a declaration that his consent was obtained by coercion, fraud or misrepresentation. If he obtains that declaration, the declaratory decree may afford him sufficient relief in certain circumstances. But if he wishes to go further he can ask for the consequential relief of having the document delivered up and cancelled, and in the case of a registered document relief can be given by correcting the entries in the books of the registering authority These reliefs do not follow automatically as a consequence of the granting of a declaratory decree and it appears to us that in these circumstances, while in cases where a declaration alone is sought a stamp of Rs. 10 is sufficient, in a case under S. 39, Act 1 of 1877, in which not only is a declaration sought but it is further asked that the document shall be delivered up, cancelled, and its registration set aside, an ad valorem fee must be paid under the provisions of S 7 (iv) (c), Court-fees Act 7 of 1870. This conclusion appears to us to follow from the words of the section itself. The point has not so far been decided by the authority of this Court. There was a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in 1883 Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh (1) where it was decided that a suit for cancellation of mortgage was a simple declaratory suit Unfortunately the terms of S. 39 are not discussed in that case All that Straight, J. said in his reference to the Full Bench is as follows·

" Upon careful consideration the case now referred appears to me to be one exactly of the kind mentioned in S. 39 of that Act and to be in the nature of a simple declaratory suit. "

The Act in question is the Specific Relief Act. The order of the Full Bench is in two lines.

" We concur in the opinion expressed in this reference that the case is in the nature of a simple declaratory suit. "

Our view is that certain cases falling under S. 39, Specific Relief Act, are simple declaratory suits and others are declaratory suits in which consequential relief is desired. The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh in a Bench case : Durga Baksh Singh v. Mirza Mohammad Ali Beg (2) followed the Allahabad view. The question again was not discussed. The point came up before a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Parvati Bai v. Vishvanath Ganesh (3). In this case a Bench of the Bombay High Court decided against the Allahabad view. The suit in question was a suit under S. 39 for a declaration that a sale deed was fraudulent and for an order to have it cancelled and a copy sent to the Sub-Registrar as provided by S. 39, Specific Relief Act. Sir Lawrence Jenkins said at page 210 ·

" The first question is whether this is a suit to obtain a declaratory decree without a prayer for consequential relief or whether consequential relief is prayed. On this point we are in complete agreement with the District Court. We think there can be no doubt that the suit is one in which there is distinct prayer for consequential relief, and we come to that conclusion notwithstanding the ruling in Karam Khan v. Daryai Singh (1) of the Allahabad High Court to the contrary. "

Here the question was not discussed but the opinion is emphatic. In deciding this point we have looked more to the wording of S 39 than to the weight to be given to the conflicting authorities. Our opinion is that where a person, as here asks for a declaration that certain deeds are voidable against him because his consent to their execution has been caused by fraud or misrepresentation and not only ask for a declaration that those deeds are voidable but also asks that the deeds should be cancelled and delivered up, the suit is distinctly a suit for declaration with a prayer for consequential relief. We have not thought it necessary to issue notice on the other side. To do so would only have added to the costs. The point appears to us sufficiently clear to be determined after hearing the argument of the learned counsel for the appellant Further in his own interests it is better to decide the matter as quickly as possible in order to enable him to decide whether he will choose to institute further proceedings We dismiss this appeal under O 41, R. 11, Civil, P. C.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 29 of 1929, Decided on 2nd September 1929, from order of Addl. Sub-Judge, Lucknow, D/- 6th April 1929.

Civil P. C., S. 115—No revision lies in respect of order setting aside arbitration award.

Where the Court passes an order setting aside an arbitrator's award and resumes hearing of the suit for decision no application for revision can lie in respect of such order as there has been no decision of a case and the order is clearly an interlocutory order: *A. A. P. Sen and Hakimuddin—for Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—This is an application under S. 115, Civil P C, to set aside an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Lucknow passed in the following circumstances. A suit for partition was pending before the learned trial Judge. An application was made to refer the matter to arbitration. The matter was referred to arbitration. The arbitrator finally made an award The learned Judge set aside the award on the ground of technical misconduct by the arbitrator and has resumed cognizance over the suit which is now proceeding towards decision. The plaintiff who is the applicant asks us to set aside under the provisions of S. 115 the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and to pass a decree in terms of the award. Mr. Sen on behalf the opposite party took a preliminary objection that no application for revision lay as there has been no decision of a case. He based his objection on a decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Chatter Singh v. Lekhraj Singh (1). The Bench there laid down that under the provisions of S. 622 of the old Code, which corresponds to S. 115 of the present Code, no action could be taken in respect of an order setting aside an arbitrator's award and resuming the hearing of the suit for decision. He futher quoted the decision in Damodar Trimbak v. Raghunath Hari (2) in which a Bench of the Bombay High Court arrived at a similar conclusion. He referred finally to a rent decision of the Bombay High Court in Chiman Bhai v Keshav Lal (3), in which the same view was affirmed in respect of S. 115 of the present Code. Sir Norman Macleod, C. J., at p. 723 (of 47 Bom.) said:

"It cannot be said in this case that there has been a decision of the suit by the Subordinate Judge. He only decided not to pass a decree in terms of the award but to continue the hearing of the suit by the Court. There is no appeal from that decision and as it is clearly an interlocutory order, an application to revise it is not competent."

The learned counsel on the other side has referred us to two decisions of this Court as authority for the proposition that a revision lies The first is a decision in Usuf Khan v. Riasat Ali (4) This is a decision of a Bench of this Court. There the Bench was asked to interfere under the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C. with an order of an Assistant Collector setting aside an arbitrator's award. It is true that no objection was taken before that Bench that no application lay against that order inasmuch as it was not an order deciding a case. But the decision of the Bench is no authority for the proposition that a revision lay, for we find that the Bench refused to interfere. The next decision is a decision of a single Judge of this Court in Chandrika Dat Ram v. Shyam Lal (5) Apart from the fact that this is a decision of a single Judge the point now in dispute was not before him. It is true that he reversed an order setting aside an award but he reversed that order under the provisions of S 25, Provl Sm. C Courts Act and did not have to consider the provisions of S. 115 We consider that the preliminary objection must succeed. The view which we take of the matter is the view taken by Sir Norman Macleod in Chiman Bhai v Keshav Lal (3). We accordingly dismiss this application with costs

A will was executed by a proprietor of a taluqdari estate under S. 11, Act 1 of 1869, by means of which the testator appointed his nephew, his executor and successor of all the taluqdari estate with all the very same powers of possession and enjoyment as the testator himself. The will further provided for three consecutive legatees after lifetime of the first legatee. It further provided for the creation of a fourth estate by the last legatee and if he died without nominating his successor authorising the male descendants of each of the three legatees to appoint as successor whomsoever they considered fit and superior amongst themselves. It was further provided that in the event of disagreement the Government would have power to appoint as successor anyone amongst the descendants of each of the three legatees whom it considered the fittest. It was also provided that the line of successors was to continue according to the above rules.

Stuart, C J. — Appeals Nos. 116 and 147 of 1927 are against the judgment and decree of a single Judge of this Court presiding over a Court of original jurisdiction in original suit No. 6 of 1925. The main appeal is No. 116 preferred by the defendant Sardar Nisar Ali Khan against the plaintiff Khan Bahadur Muhammad Ali Khan C. S. I. The minor appeal No. 147 is preferred by the plaintiff against the defendant. It is necessary to state in detail the uncontested facts relating to events which preceded the institution of the suit. In nearly all instances there is evidence on the record supporting these facts. Where the evidence is deficient, the deficiency is supplied by the agreement of the learned counsel for the parties. We have had the advantage of having the arguments presented to us by learned counsel who could not have done, in my opinion (which is shared by my learned brother) more to assist the Court in bringing out the questions of law and fact which required determination.

I here give a pedigree of the family to which I shall refer again in the course of this judgment.

(For pedigree see p. 496) :

The history of this family is accepted by the learned counsel as having been detailed with reasonable accuracy in a volume prepared with the approval of the Government of the Punjab called "Chiefs and Families of Note." The first name upon the pedigree which I have given is that of Nawab Ali Raza Khan. He was the son of Sardar Hidayat Khan, who was the son of Sardar Ali Khan. Sardar Ali Khan was a nobleman who resided in the province of Sherwan on the West Coast of the Caspian Sea. He was a Turk belonging to the Qizilbash tribe. Qizilbash means "Red Cap." The tribe was apparently so called because the male members wore as a distinctive part of their head gear a red "lungi" or cap round which the turban was tied. Sardar Ali Khan accompanied Nadir Shah in the expedition to India, which resulted in the capture of Delhi. After the Indian campaign was over, he was appointed by Nadir Shah, Governor of Kandahar. He was murdered in 1770. He left three sons of tender years. Gul Muhammad Khan was the eldest, Hidayat Khan was the second and Ali Muhammad Khan was the youngest. Hidayat Khan had many sons. Nawab Ali Raza Khan had at least three elder brothers. When Hidayat Khan died in 1836, Sardar Ali Raza Khan resided in Afganistan where he posessed considerable estates. In 1839 when the British forces invaded Afghanistan in order to place Shah Shuja on the throne, Ali Raza Khan was appointed their chief agent in the commissariat department, and became attached to the British authorities. When the subsequent insurrection deprived Shah Shuja of his throne and disasters which are well-known overtook the British forces, Ali Raza Khan remained faithful to his allegiance. He made every effort to assist the British captives and enabled some to effect their escape. When the British forces retired to India, Ali Raza Khan accompanied them. His allegiance to the British resulted in the confiscation of the whole of his property in Afghanistan. After his arrival in India he performed signal services for the British Government. He

    - Nisar Ali Khan, born 1901, and Defendant, three other sons younger.
- Barkat Ali Khan, born 1856, died 11th April 1902.
  - Ali Muhammad Khan, born 1879, died 14th October 1926.

*He had also a daughter Zohra Begam who was the second wife of Fateh Ali Khan. She died in 1912. Fateh Ali Khan's sons were born from another wife. Nasir Ali Khan's widow Fatima Begam who was not the mother of Muhammad Ali Khan and Zohra and was childless at the time of the death of her husband died at Karbala in 1916.

raised armed forces for them, and himself commanded them. He fought on the side of the British at Mudki, Ferozeshah, and Sobraon and in 1857 he raised at his own expense a troop of cavalry which became embodied in "Hodson's Horse." His youngest brother Muhammad Taki Khan was killed in 1858 fighting for the British. Another brother Muhammad Raza Khan was distinguished by his exceptional gallantry. As a reward for his eminent services Sardar Ali Raza Khan was granted a pension of Rs 800 a month, and was awarded a confiscated estate in Oudh. This estate is described in the Lists attached to Act 1 of 1869 as the estate of Nawabganj in the Bahraich District. Sardar Ali Raza Khan was created a Nawab. He died in 1865. By an oversight—not unusual to those who are acquainted with the proceedings of the period—his name was entered after his death in the Lists prepared in accordance with the provisions of Act 1 of 1869. It is entered at No. 161 in List 1 and No. 39 in List 5. The grant of Nawabganj was thus according to S. 8, Act 1 of 1869, a grant to a grantee, declaring that the intestate succession to the estate should thereafter be regulated by the rule of primogeniture On the death of Nawab Ali Raza Khan on 24th June 1865, he was succeeded by his eldest son Nawazish Ali Khan Nawab Nawazish Ali Khan attained great distinction. He was created a Nawab. Like his father he resided continuously in the Punjab. He became an Honorary Assistant Commissioner and President of the Lahore Municipal Committee. In 1835 he was created a Companion of the Indian Empire and in 1888 he was created a Knight of the same order. He became also an additional member of the Legislative Council.

Here the history may be continued in greater detail. It has already been stated that a pension of Rs. 800 a month had been conferred by Government on Nawab Ali Raza Khan. On the death of the latter the authorities gave in lieu a pension of Rs. 200 a month for life to each of the widows of Nawab Ali Raza Khan. Before 1866 one of the widows had died. Ex. CA-35 shows that the Government of India in that year had considered the advisability of giving in lieu (provided the surviving widow Mt. Khadija Begam consented to forego her pension) a grant of the land in the Lahore District, not to be held by the lady but to be held by the members of the family, from the income of which grant the lady could be supported. Ex. CA-35 is a translation of the vernacular order from the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore dated 10th August 1866, asking that the lady should be approached and her consent obtained, if possible, to such an arrangement and that the senior male members of the family should be asked to state their views as to the form which the grant should take. Ex. CA-36 is a report of the Tahsildar dated 27th August 1866 in which it is stated that the lady had consented, and that the family had put up proposals as to the form which the grant should take.

It appears from a decision of the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore in mutation proceedings (Ex. 7 dated 9th March 1925) that on 23rd August 1866, the three senior members of the family Nawazish Ali Khan, Nasir Ali Khan and Nisar Ali Khan signed a joint vernacular document, in which they asked that the grant in question should be made in the following form. Three successive estates for life were to be created ; the first in favour of Nawazish Ali Khan, the second in favour of the second brother Nasir Ali Khan and the third in favour of the third brother Nisar Ali Khan. On the termination of the life estates the three brothers desired that a series of life estates should continue to be given to a person appointed by the surviving members of the family themselves. This document is quoted in the decision in question. It has not been brought on the record of this case but the learned counsel agreed to its acceptance in this Court for the purpose of explaining how the grant came into being.

After certain other preliminaries with which I am not concerned the actual grant was made. The terms were not in exact accord with the desires of the members of the family. This grant (which is in English) is Ex A-13 dated 9th May 1868. The property — the subject of the grant—was 2753 acres (more or less) in what was known as "Rakh Khamba" in the Lahore District. A "Rakh Khamba" in the Punjab in a tract for the most part of reclaimable forest and jungle land. At the time that the grant was given the property granted was of value sufficient to provide for the maintenance of Khadija Begam with some surplus. In the last forty years this grant has become of considerable value, and the present income is stated to us to be as much as Rs. 1,00,000. The deed is on the record. It may be described shortly as follows· Nawab Nawazish Ali Khan was to hold the estate for life. On his death it was to devolve on his brother Nasir Ali Khan, and on Nasir Ali Khan's death it was to develve on Nisar Ali Khan. If one brother predeceased the other the survivor would take the grant. There can be no doubt that it commenced thus with three life estates. The Crown disposed of the remainder in the following manner. On the death of the last survivor it was directed that :

"the said estate shall go and belong to whichever of the lawful male heirs of the said Nawab Ali Raza Khan shall be chosen by the said male heirs as the fittest person to succeed to the said estate, his heirs and successors. It is thus clear that on the termination of the life estates a heritable estate was to be created."

"In the event of the said male heirs being unable to agree within a reasonable time then to such one of the lawful heirs of the said Nawab Ali Raza Khan as His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor may consider fittest to succeed to the said estate, his heirs and successors."

There is little room for controversy here. On the termination of the life-estates, the surviving heirs were directed to choose out of their own body the heir whom they considered the fittest person to succeed, and to such person was granted a heritable estate If the heirs did not choose such a person within a reasonable time, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab was directed himself to appoint such a person and such person would obtain a heritable estate. The estate thus created was not, however, an absolute estate for the deed laid down afterwards:

"No transfer of proprietary rights in the said estate will be valid until it shall have received the sanction of His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor and shall have been duly registered."

There were other conditions. The holder was at all time required to make due provision for the maintenance of the family of Nawab Ali Raza Khan. It was explicitly laid down, that provision should be made for the maintenance of Mt. Khadija Begam and the Local Government reserved to itself the right to fix the amount of maintenance and to require the holder to set aside a specific sum from the income to provide the requisite amount. Further it was laid down that the holder should, if required, be bound to furnish twenty-five troopers for the service of the Government. There are other conditions which are immaterial. The property described in this grant was afterwards called the Ali Razabad property and I shall in future refer to it under the latter name. The legality of the disposition in the Ali Razabad property cannot be called in question in view of the provisions of the Crown Grants Act (Act 15 of 1895). We have here to give effect to the grant.

There are two more grants to be considered. The first of these is what is referred to in the judgment as the second Rakh Khamba grant. The deed will be found in Ex. 11, dated 23rd September 1871. This is a grant of 207 acres also in Rakh Khamba in the Lahore District. This is a grant giving full proprietary title to Nawab Nawazish Ali Khan alone. This property is known as the Khalikabad property, and I shall refer to it under that name in future On 17th June 1892 Nawab Nasir Ali Khan made this grant the subject of a wakf under Ex. 4. The remaining grant was a grant of what was known at first as the Juliana property, but what is now known as the Musalla property. I shall call it in future the Musalla property. This grant was made by the Crown on 25th June 1886. The deed is Ex. 12. It is a grant of 1126 acres in the Lahore District and confers full proprietary right on Nawazish Ali Khan. This suit relates in the main to the four properties already enumerated:

(1) The Nawabganj property in Oudh now called Nawabganj-Aliabad.

(2) The Ali Razabad property in Lahore

(3) The Kalikabad property in Lahore.

(4) The Musalla property in Lahore.

After this digression I return to the history of the family. It has already been mentioned that Nawazish Ali Khan had two brothers This second brother Nasir Ali Khan entered Government service in the Punjab as an Extra Assistant Commissioner. He retired in 1888, being then about the age of fifty-five, having attained the position of what was then known as a District Judge. The duties of a District Judge, as he then was, in the Punjab corresponded in the main with the duties of what is known as a Subordinate Judge in the United Provinces. The next brother Nisar Ali Khan resided in Oudh and looked after the Nawabganj-Aliabad estate. He died in 1878. Sir Nawazish Ali Khan left India in 1889. He went to Europe, where he resided for some time, and on his return from Europe did not come back to India He proceeded from Europe to Karbala where he died in 1890. He had executed on 14th February 1882 a registered will (Ex. 1) under the terms of which he appointed his brother Nasir Ali Khan his successor in respect of the Nawabganj-Aliabad property in Oudh. We are not concerned with the construction of this will, as both parties are agreed for the purposes of this case that it conferred an absolute estate on Nasir Ali Khan.

It is to be noted that at the time this will was executed Hidayat Ali Khan who was born in 1878, was a boy of four years old. No provision is made in this will by the testator for his only son. It was further set up that before Sir Nawazish Ali Khan proceeded to Europe, he made an oral gift of all his properties other than the Nawabganj-Aliabad property to Nasir Ali Khan. The learned trial Judge has found against this oral gift, but on the evidence I am unable to agree with his conclusion I find on the evidence that the oral gift was made. On the death of Sir Nawazish Ali Khan, Nasir Ali Khan succeeded to all the four properties mentioned. I have referred to Sardar Ali Raza Khan and Sir Nawazish Ali Khan as Nawabs. Apparently they had obtained the title of Nawab but it is not clear how they had obtained it. On 1st January 1892 Nasir Ali Khan was created a hereditary Nawab by the Viceroy Lord Lansdowne. Under the provisions of Ex. A-39 a sanad was granted to him. As this creation has a bearing upon the subsequent history of the case I give it in full:

"Having regard to the memory of Nawab Ali Raza Khan, your father, and of Nawab Sir Nawazish Ali Khan, K. C. I. E. your brother, and their loyal services, I confer upon you by this sanad the title of Nawab."

"This title will henceforth be hereditary in your family, and will descend to the fittest member of the family by the same rule as that by which the estates devolve according to your family custom, provided that such member shall on each devolution of the title be formally approved of by the Viceroy and Governor-General of India as a deserving representative of the family, and the said title shall not descend to him until such approval has been accorded."

On 15th July 1896 Nawab Nasir Ali Khan while residing in Lahore at a house in the Empress Road executed two wills Ex. 2 and Ex. 3. Both these wills were registered. On 19th November 1896 Nawab Nasir Ali Khan died in Lahore. He was buried the same day His death was reported for the purpose of mutation proceedings in one instance on the following day. On 21st November 1896 two ceremonies took place in the family residence, the Mubarak Haveli-at Lahore. In the morning there was held what is known as the Soem ceremony. The family are Shia Muhammadans governed by the Imamia law Amongst Shia Muhammadans it is customary to hold a ceremony in commemoration of the death of one of their number on the Soem, that is to say, the third day after the death. The Soem ceremony was held in the morning. In the afternoon was held a ceremony known as the Dastarbandi, which means the tying of the turban ceremony, the nature of this ceremony its significance, and its legal effect are amongst the most controversial questions in these appeals. I here note that it is accepted by both sides that such a ceremony was held. Nawab Fateh Ali Khan succeeded to the whole of the property owned and possessed by his uncle Nawab Nasir Ali Khan to the exclusion of Nasir Ali Khan's own son, the present plaintiff, and to the exclusion of Nawab Fateh Ali Khan's elder brother Barkat Ali Khan. These facts are admitted The nature of his title is in question but the fact that he succeeded to possession and enjoyment is accepted on both sides. It has already been mentioned in the pedigree that Nawab Fateh Ali Khan had married Zohra Begam the daughter of Nawab Nasir Ali Khan. At the time of Nawab Nasir Ali Khan's death he had no son by Zohra Begam. He never obtained a son from Zohra Begam. This point, as will be seen later, is of importance. On 6th July 1897 the Assistant Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, addressed the Chief Secretary of the Punjab Government in a communication a copy of which is Ex. A-22. I quote this in full:

"I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 238, dated 29th April 1897 reporting that Fateh Ali Khan has succeeded to the estate of his uncle, the late Nawab Nasir Ali Khan and has been recognized by the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab as head of the family.

2. His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General formally approves of Fateh Ali Khan, as a deserving representative of the family. The title of Nawab consequently descends to him in accordance with the terms of the sanad granted to the late Nawab on 1st January 1892."

Fateh Ali Khan was thus recognized by the Punjab Government as head of the family. Although he was not the eldest member, and although he was not the son of the last holder, the hereditary title of Nawab which had been conferred on Nasir Ali Khan and his successors was conferred on him. After certain attempts on the part of Barkat Ali Khan, Fateh Ali Khan's elder brother, to obtain more favourable treatment these attempts will be referred to again : Nawab Fateh Ali Khan was accepted as in possession and enjoyment of Nawabganj-Aliabad, Ali Razabad and Musalla properties and as mutawalli of the Khalikabad property. It is admitted that up till at any rate 1898 or 1899 his relations with the present plaintiff were cordial. He does not appear to have granted the plaintiff any fixed allowance but in its place it appears that he allowed the plaintiff to draw such sums as he required from the family treasury. On 7th March 1898, Nawab Fateh Ali Khan then intending to leave India, executed Ex. 116 a general power-of-attorney in favour of the plaintiff It was under this general power-of attorney that the plaintiff made the statements Ex. 117 dated 17th August 1898 and Ex. 118 dated 1st September 1898 before the revenue authorities.

In 1898 or 1899 occurred an event which has been largely responsible for the unfortunate acerbity of feeling which has tinged the subsequent conduct of the parties. Nawab Fateh Ali Khan married again. It appears that subsequently he contracted a fourth marriage. The details of the marriages are unimportant. The important facts are that in 1901 a son was born to him, Zohra Begam still remaining childless, and since then three other sons have been born to him. It is common to the parties that after the birth of these sons Nawab Fateh Ali Khan curtailed the plaintiff's expenditure and also that he commenced to make dispositions out of the income of his property in favour of his children. The plaintiff and he became estranged, and the plaintiff admittedly commenced to borrow money and incur debts We find that on 8th October 1905 Nawab Fateh Ali Khan issued a notice (Ex. A-30) warning the public that he would not be responsible for any debts contracted without his written authority. Nawab Fateh Ali Khan did not reside in the family house—the Mubarak Haveli. In 1906 he was living in a house known as the Sabz Kothi (Green House) The plaintiff resided there with him. That year the plaintiff left the Nawab's house, and took up his residence in another house in the Empress Road, Lahore. They never resided together again The plaintiff continued to incur debts. In Christmas 1910 three leading gentlemen of the Punjab, Nawab Sir Khuda Bakhsh Khan, Raja Hari Kishan Kaul and Iftikhar Uddin waited on Nawab Fateh Ali Khan and asked permission to lay before him the hardships of the plaintiff.

The fact is clear from a portion of the Nawab's letter to Mr. Humphreys, the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore (Ex. A-37), dated 30th January 1913. Nawab Fateh Ali Khan refused to discuss the question with these gentlemen, but later on called on Mr. Butler (now Sir Montague Butler) who was then Deputy Commissioner of Lahore and stated the case to him. On 10th January 1911 Nawab Fateh Ali Khan appears to have communicated with Sir Louis Dane, the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, and asked Sir Louis Dane to arrange certain differences. Unfortunately a copy of the letter is not on the record, but the fact is admitted by the learned counsel for the parties and is clear from Ex. CA-161 a letter of 24th January 1911 written by Nawab Fateh Ali Khan to Col. Parsons, the then Commissioner of Lahore. This gentleman is now dead. There is on the record an official note of Sir Louis Dane, dated 9th April 1911 (Ex. A-35). On 30th August 1911 a precis of facts was submitted on behalf of Nawab Fateh Ali Khan to Sir Louis Dane. This is Ex. 152. On 18th August 1912 Sir Louis Dane issued an award (Ex. A-78). This award fixed an allowance for the plaintiff to be paid by Nawab Fateh Ali Khan and provided for the payment of the plaintiff's debts by Nawab Fateh Ali Khan. Nawab Fateh Ali Khan clearly did not agree to accept this award. This is shown by his letter Ex. A-36 dated 9th November 1912 sent to Sir Louis Dane.

On 8th January 1913 Mr. Humphreys, the then Deputy Commissioner of Lahore (this gentleman is now dead) wrote to Nawab Fateh Ali Khan. The letter is not on the record but is referred to in Nawab Fateh Ali Khan's reply to which we have already referred (Ex. A-37) dated 30th January 1913. What happened afterwards can be discovered from a letter (Ex. A 38) written by Nawab Fateh Ali Khan to Mr. Humphreys. This is dated 14th March 1913 From this it appears that Sir Louis Dane took strong exception to Nawab Fateh Ali Khan refusing to accept his decision, and that he directed Mr. Humphreys to inform Nawab Fateh Ali Khan that in consequence of his attitude, Sir Louis Dane refused to see Nawab Fateh Ali Khan, and that Sir Louis Dane ordered that neither the Commissioner of Lahore nor the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore were to receive him in their houses. Nawab Fateh Ali Khan then wrote Ex. A-38, in which, while still refusing to accept any determination as to the succession to his property, he agreed to pay off the plaintiff's debts to the extent of Rs. 36,000 and to pay him in future an allowance of Rs. 1,600 a month. From this date to the date of Sir Fateh Ali Khan's death 28th October 1923 the relations between him and the plaintiff were clearly never cordial, although they appeared in public together on certain occasions The history of the intervening year is more or less controversial. But certain facts stand out clearly which may be mentioned now. Nawab Sir Fateh Ali Khan followed his predecessors in a career of public activities. In 1897 he was nominated a member of the Legislative Council. In 1902 he proceeded to England as one of the representatives of the Punjab at the time of the Coronation of his Majesty King Edward VII.

In 1903 he was an official guest at the Delhi Darbar, and was created a Companion of the Indian Empire. In 1904 he became an additional member of the Governor-General's Legislative Council. In 1921 he was advanced to the dignity of a Knight of the Order of the Indian Empire. It is admitted that he took a leading part in public and religious matters and was a strong adherent to his own side. Such men make many friends and many enemies. In a variety of public matters such as elections he was an adherent of one candidate. It is noticeable that the plaintiff, who also is a man who has taken part in public life, was frequently on the other side to that taken by Sir Fateh Ali Khan The plaintiff has also attained a considerable position. He is an Honorary Magistrate. In 1910 he became a Khan Bahadur. He was Vice-President of the Chiefs Association of the Punjab and President of the Anjuman Islamia of the Punjab. For many years he had been a member of the Municipal Board, Lahore, and has been its Vice-President for 18 years. In 1921 the same year when Nawab Fateh Ali Khan obtained this Knight Companionship of the Indian Empire, the plaintiff was created a Companion of the order of Star of India. It is necessary to state these facts here to prepare the way for the subsequent discussions of the evidence in the case. The statement of the facts is now nearing conclusion. Sir Fateh Ali Khan died on 28th October 1923.

After the death of Sir Fateh Ali Khan the plaintiff at once claimed succession to the properties. Sir Fateh Ali Khan's eldest son Sardar Nisar Ali Khan opposed this claim. The first contest was (as is usual) in the revenue Courts to obtain recognition as a person entitled to engage for the land revenue or as a person entitled as a grantee. In the Punjab revenue Courts the plaintiff was successful. In the Bahraich revenue Court the defendant was successful. As the revenue Courts refused to give the plaintiff possession the plaintiff has been obliged to file the suit out of which the present appeals proceed. The possession in no circumstances has been actual possession. It has only been constructive possession. The plaintiff's suit has been decreed by the learned trial Judge almost in entirety.

I now proceed to the questions involved in these appeals. As has already been stated, on the death of Sir Nawazish Ali Khan in 1890 his brother Nawab Nasir Ali Khan, the father of the present plaintiff, succeeded to all the properties owned and possessed by his elder brother. He succeeded to the Nawabganj-Aliabad estate in this province according to the terms of the will Ex. 1. It is agreed between the parties that under the terms of this deed he obtained a full estate. He succeeded to the Ali Razabad property as the holder of the second life-estate under the terms of Ex. A-13 He succeeded as mutwalli to the Khalikabad property under the terms of the deed of wakf Ex. 4. With regard to the Musalla property and the remaining property the plaintiff's case was that Nasir Ali Khan succeeded under an oral gift. The learned trial Judge has found against the oral gift I am, however, of opinion that the oral gift is established and I find accordingly. I base my finding upon the following facts. There is admittedly no written transfer from Sir Nawazish Ali Khan to Nawab Nasir Ali Khan in respect of the Punjab property. This property is not covered by the will Ex. 1. But we have it as a fact that Nawab Nasir Ali Khan did succeed to that property. It appears that in 1884 the Deputy Commissioner of Bahraich wrote to the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore, asking the Deputy Commissioner of Lahore to ascertain from Nawab Nawazish Ali Khan who was his heir and successor to the Ali Razabad Taluqa. It was in accordance with the practice of the period that the inquiry was made. The Deputy Commissioner of Lahore wrote to Nawab Nawazish Ali Khan asking him for the necessary information. There is on the record Nawab Nawazish Ali Khan's reply Ex A-16 dated 15th April 1884. He replied that he had made a will in 1882, declaring his brother Nasir Ali Khan to be his heir and successor. The letter concludes with the following words according to the translation :

"Let it also be mentioned that with the sanction of the Government Nasir Ali Khan has further been appointed to be the owner and heir after me of the Jagir Muafi held in perpetuity as well as of other properties of mine in the Punjab."

This letter is sufficient proof of a gift and as the gift is not in writing it can be taken to be an oral gift. Under the Imamia Law to which the parties are subject a gift cannot be effected without possession; but Ex 14 shows that possession was granted in Sir Nawazish Ali Khan's lifetime This is a letter to the Tahsildar of Lahore written by Sir Nawazish Ali Khan on 5th April 1889, before he started on his voyage to Europe. In this he states again, that all his Punjab property has been transferred to Nasir Ali Khan and directs the Tahsildar to record Nasir Ali Khan's name and to put him in possession. Nasir Ali Khan was put in possession accordingly.

I now come to the construction of the wills Exs. 2 and 3. The rules of construction of wills in India have been laid down on several occasions by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. An attempt to discover the correct construction of a particular testamentary disposition by a lengthy search through a variety of decided cases English and Indian was not approved by Lord Macnaughten in Norendra Nath Sircar v. Kamal Basini Dasi (1):

"To construe one will by reference to expressions of more or less doubtful import to be found in other wills is for the most part an unprofitable exercise. Happily that method of interpretation has gone out of fashion in this country. To extend it to India would hardly be desirable. To search and sift the heaps of cases on wills which cumber our English Law Reports, in order to understand and interpret wills of people speaking a different tongue, trained in different habits of thought and brought up under different conditions of life, seems almost absurd."

He again said in Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (2):

"It is no new doctrine that rules established in English Courts for construing English documents are not as such applicable to transactions between natives of this country. Rules of construction are rules designed to assist in ascertaining intention, and the applicability of many such rules depends upon the habits of thought and modes of expression prevalent amongst those to whose language they are applied. English rules of construction have grown up side by side with a very special law of property and a very artificial system of conveyancing, and the success of those rules in giving effect to the real intention of those whose language they are used to interpret depends not more upon their original fitness for that purpose than upon the fact that English documents of a formal kind are ordinarily framed with a knowledge of the very rules of construction which are afterwards applied to them. It is a very serious thing to use such rules in interpreting the instruments of Hindus, who view most transactions from a different point, think differently, and speak differently, from Englishmen, and who have never heard of the rules in question."

The same remarks were quoted with approval by Lord Parmoor in a comparatively recent case Dinbai v. Nusserwanji Rustomji (3) in reference to a will made by a Parsi and they are applicable equally to a will made by a Shia Muhammadan governed by the Imamia Law. In a previous decision of mine which is quoted in Jagmohan Singh v. Sheoraj Kuar (4). I stated that the actual intention of the testator should be sought from the words of the document keeping in mind the circumstances in which it has been prepared, and I shall endeavour to apply those principles of construction to Ex. 2 and Ex. 3. The testator Nawab Nasir Ali Khan was a gentleman of position and of culture. He belonged to an aristocratic family. He had clearly a good knowledge of Urdu. He had also some claims to understand the law as he had been an Extra Assistant Commissioner in the Punjab and had retired holding the office of the District Judge. But both the learned counsel have informed us (although there is no evidence on the record in this respect) that he did not know English and his knowledge of testamentary law can be best illustrated by the fact that, as will be seen later, he assumed a disposing capacity over certain property which he ought to have known he did not possess. The evidence as to how he came to make these wills is unsatisfactory. The main evidence on this point is that of the plaintiff himself and that of the scribe of the wills. The plaintiff was P. W. 29 and the scribe was Abdul Karim P. W. 31. Some points are clear enough from their evidence. Nawab Nasir Ali Khan was living in the house in Empress Road in which the plaintiff now lives, and it was in that house that the wills were written. On 14th July 1896, according to this evidence, Nawab Nasir Ali Khan who had previously contemplated making these wills sent for Abdul Karim and dictated to him what he calls a draft and what presumably were two drafts as there are two wills which varied in terms. It is agreed that Abdul Karim did not suggest the drafts. The drafts were the unaided composition of Nawab Nasir Ali Khan. He does not appear to have taken any legal advice and he does not consult Abdul Karim in respect to the wording of the dispositions Abdul Karim is now dead. He gave evidence in 1927 when he was a man who, according to himself, was nearly a hundred years of age. His evidence and that of the plaintiff can be accepted as to the fact that Nawab Nasir Ali Khan dictated the wills. He was not likely in any circumstances to have consulted Abdul Karim who was a Mukhtar in small practice in Lahore. Abdul Karim was called in to write to the testator's dictation, because he was one of the numerous persons who call regularly at the house of an important man. Another reason may have been that he wrote a very good hand. The evidence of these witnesses as to how these drafts were prepared conflicts with the internal evidence afforded by the contents of the wills themselves. The witnesses would have it that Nawab Nasir Ali Khan dictated the contents of the wills without preparation and with no hesitation. From their evidence it would appear that he dictated them as a man would dictate a business letter. Abdul Karim stated that the Nawab had no written documents in front of him. He added that perhaps he had some sanads in front of him while he was dictating. Perhaps he had one or two books. The books were about the Oudh property and Rakh Khama property.

It is clear to me (and my learned brother agrees with me upon this point) that the drafts could not possibly have been prepared in this way. I have studied the wills closely and have read them many times It is apparent to me that the drafts from which these wills were prepared were based upon a draft not mentioned in which the testator had copied words from the will of Nawazish Ali Khan Ex. 1. He altered those words, but he was using those words as a structure upon which he based his own wills and it would be practically an impossibility that any man could have produced such an excellent piece of Urdu composition if he had not previously worked it out in the rough. This is, I believe, what happened. He had already worked out in the rough what he intended to say in the two wills and then proceeded to dictate them to Abdul Karim. Abdul Karim then took away the drafts, went through them and brought them back the next day. The Nawab examined them and finding them correct (or perhaps after making verbal corrections in them) gave them back to Abdul Karim to copy fair. The final copies are Ex. 2 and Ex. 3 These witnesses have shown that their evidence is not reliable in itself by the fact that they have given an account as to how these wills came into being which cannot be correct on the face of the wills themselves. This is not to their discredit. They were deposing to events that had taken place more than thirty years before and their memories could hardly have been trusted on details This, however, is a reason for not accepting their evidence when they speak as to conversations and undertakings given by Fateh Ali Khan, and the like. My finding as to this portion of the case is that it is proved that Nawab Nasir Ali Khan, a man of over sixty, of considerable ability, with a slight knowledge of law which was more likely to prove an obstacle than an assistance to him, prepared himself the wills which he executed. He was in full possession of his faculties, and was clearly doing what he desired to do. I find that he had before him and was using as a model the will Ex. 1 made by Nawazish Ali Khan in his favour and that he had before him the disposition of the Ali Razabad property which had been made after he had been consulted, and which embodied, (it is true with important variations) a scheme of inheritance which he favoured. The similarity in the two wills Ex. 2 and Ex 3 and the will in Ex. 1 can best be appreciated by a comparison of the originals and not the translations. Whole sentences are reproduced. There are, it is true, variations. I have directed the office to prepare transliterations in Urdu of the three wills Exs. 1, 2 and 3 and a comparison of the transliterations will assist. I now come to the wills themselves.

Exhibit 3 affects the Nawabganj-Aliabad property in Oudh. I give the essential particulars eliminating superfluous words:

"I am..... Nasir Ali Khan..... owner and taluqdar of Nawabganj Aliabad, Bahraich district in the province of Oudh. Whereas this borrowed life is transitory, therefore considering the appointment of an executor (the word "wasi" means "executor" and does not mean "legatee" as given in the official translation) and my successor a matter of necessity and duty I do hereby affirm in writing that whereas the estate comprising Taluqdari Nawabganj-Aliabad .... with all property and articles moveable and immovable and all external rights and rights of user which were given to me by my older brother the late Sir Nawab Haji Nawazish Ali Khan .... by means of a registered will dated 14th February 1882 made under-S. 11, Act 1 of 1869, and in 1889 the said Nawab Sahib in his lifetime having got this above-mentioned Taluqdari estate, with all rights and interests entered in my name made me like himself owner without any one else's partnership. Accordingly I have been continuously and am still in possession and owner of this very Taluqdari estate from the date of mutation till today."

"Now, under S.11, Act 1 of 1869, A. D., I by means of this will do hereby appoint Nawab Fateh Ali Khan son of my late brother Nawab Nisar Ali Khan my executor and successor of all this Taluqdari estate with all the rights and interests aforesaid and do hereby authorize the legatee that whatever Taluqdari powers over the above mentioned Ilaka and over all the properties moveable and immovable, I the said declarant have, my legatee, to wit Nawab Fateh Ali Khan, after my life shall have like myself the very same powers with powers of possession and enjoyment as owner provided he be alive."

Up to this point the effective portion of the will is strikingly similar to the effective portion of Ex 1. We have the same words wohi ikhtiarat ba kabzi-tasarrufe malikana. If the will stopped here it would be difficult to arrive at a finding that it did not give an absolute estate to Nasir Ali Khan. It is true that nowhere does the testator call him his heir. He does not use the word waris in describing him. It is true that there are no words such as naslan bad naslan, generation after generation. There is no express devise of a heritable estate. There is nothing to indicate explicitly that there is a power of transfer. But the statement that whatever Taluqdari powers the testator possesses shall be possessed like himself by Nasir Ali Khan would go far to indicate that the estate was absolute. Though the word malik is never used, there is a reference to powers of possession and enjoyment as owner. But when it is remembered that the testator was taking large portions of his wording from Ex. 1 the use of particular words has not the same significance and further the testator might well have been misled as to the use of words denoting ownership if he possessed a translation of the Government grant Ex. A-13. Although the deed of 1868 (Ex. A-13) was presumably prepared by a Legal Adviser to the Government of India it grants what on the face of it is a life estate as an estate

"for the term of his life in full proprietary right."

The difficulties in construing Ex. 3 are rendered the less by the subsequent contents of that document. Although Nawab Nasir Ali Khan cannot be considered to have had any clear ideas as to the rules of testamentary disposition it is not an unfair presumption that he would have appreciated the impossibility of devising full proprietary title to more than one devisee. The will continues :

"Similarly after the lifetime of the legatee Nawab Fateh Ali Khan, my son Nawab Muhammad Ali Khan shall, if alive, be his successor. He shall also have the very same powers as have been bestowed upon Nawab Fateh Ali Khan by means of this deed of will."

Then follows the third provision :

"After the lifetime of my son Nawab Muhammad Ali Khan Nawab Hidayat Ali Khan, son of the late Sir Nawab Haji Nawazish Ali Khan, shall be his successor provided he be alive."

We now come to the fourth provision. After the termination of these three estates the testator then provides for the creation of a fourth estate and here he was clearly considering the arrangements which he and his two brothers had proposed to Government in 1868. On the termination of the third estate he laid down :

"After all these three successors the fit amongst the descendants of the successors shall succeed."

But here he added something that had never been suggested before.

"The last legatee shall have power to nominate as his successor any one whom he considers fit from amongst the descendants of each of the three successors."

Thus there was not to be selection by the heirs but an appointment by the last holder of the first three estates. This is how he provides for the devolution in event of the last legatee failing to make an appointment. He here goes back to the original plan :

"If the last legatee die without nominating a successor the male descendants of each of the three successors shall have power to appoint as successor whomsoever they consider fit and superior amongst themselves."

Next comes a very obscure condition :

"The line of successors shall continue according to this very rule."

Whether this means that the next successor should have power to appoint and on failure there should be a selection by the heirs, or whether it means that after the fourth successor there should invariably be selection by the remaining heirs, I have not to determine so need not discuss the question. Next comes a clause to provide for failure to select which makes the same provision as in the Ali Razabad grant :

"In the event of disagreement the Government shall have power to appoint a successor any one amongst the descendants of each of the three successors whom he considers the fittest."

This is the will. It is made under the provisions of S. 11, Act 1 of 1869. It is urged by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru on behalf of the defendant that on the proper construction this will gives an absolute estate to Fateh Ali Khan with an attempt to determine succession after his death which is void on the ground of repugnancy. He argues that the words at the commencement show that an absolute estate was created, and that anything following is an attempt to restrict the owner of the absolute estate and divert the succession in a manner unauthorized by law. I think it is permissible in the circumstances of the case first to read the will without paying any attention to legal rules for the purpose only of seeking the testator's intention. To my mind the intention is very clear. Nawab Nasir Ali Khan had in his mind as his main intention the intention of preserving the estate intact. Although on the words he used it is possible to arrive at a finding that the holder had a power of transfer, it is clear to me that he did not intend any holder to touch the corpus of the property. The whole of the will read together convinces me that his one intention was to preserve the property intact. The estate was to be considered sacred. It was never to diminish. It was to continue from holder to holder and never to be less than the estate that came into his hands. I cannot reconcile the creation of three exactly similar estates to be held in turn by Fateh Ali Khan, Muhammad Ali Khan and Hidayat Ali Khan as compatible with an intention to grant to Fateh Ali Khan a full proprietary estate and then divert the succession firstly to Muhammad Ali Khan and secondly to Hidayat Ali Khan

Thus it appears to me that Fateh Ali Khan obtained nothing more than a limited estate which terminated with his death How far he had powers of transfer it is not necessary for me to decide. It is not suggested that he ever made any transfers. But the estate devised to him in my opinion fell far short of an absolute estate It was a limited estate It seems academic to discuss the limitations beyond the main limitation that it terminated with his life. This being the case, the decision of this portion of the appeal can proceed in the following manner. Either the disposition was only effective to convey a limited estate to Fateh Ali Khan, and the disposition then ceased to be effective or the disposition was sufficiently effective to convey a similar limited estate to the plaintiff It is of no consequence which view is taken for the decision of this portion of the appeal, for in either case, the plaintiff has become absolute owner of Nawabganj-Allahabad on the death of Sir Fateh Ali Khan. Hidayat Ali Khan having died in 1925 and thus having predeceased the plaintiff, his limited estate (if it ever existed), has disappeared. In whom would the remainder vest ? According to the terms of the will the remainder never vests The line of succession laid down by the testator is obviously one to which Act 1 of 1869 cannot give effect. It offends against the law forbidding perpetuities. It creates interests in person unborn and is in every way objectionable The remainder must clearly vest in Nasir Ali Khan's heir-at-law Muhammad Ali Khan is now his sole heir-at-law There were at the time of Nasir Ali Khan's death three heirs, his widow Fatima Begam, his daughter Zohra Begam the wife of Sir Fateh Ali Khan, and the plaintiff. The widow being a childless widow was under the Imamia law entitled to no share in the immovable property. But apart from that, she died in 1916. Zohra Begam died in 1912. Thus Muhammad Ali Khan is the sole heir-at-law. It is unnecessary to discuss whether in addition to being sole heir under the Imamia law he is also sole heir under the rule of primogeniture by virtue of the retrospective effect of Local Act 3 of 1910 If he obtained a limited estate on Sir Fateh Ali Khan's death he also obtained the remainder, and thus became full proprietor. If the disposition became inoperative on Sir Fateh Ali Khan's death he succeeds as heir-at-law. In either case he becomes full proprietor.

I now come to the will Ex. 2 It affects the Punjab property. The dispositions are so similar to the dispositions in Ex. 3 as not to require a detailed examination It is sufficient to say that there are again the three successive estates in favour of Fateh Ali Khan, Muhamad Ali Khan and Hidayat Ali Khan with the power given to the last holder to nominate a successor and the power of selection in certain circumstances. But this is not a will which the testator was competent to make under the provisions of S. 11 Act 1 of 1869, but the will of a Shia Muhamadan governed by the Imamia law. It is thus only effective to the extent of one-third of the dispositions unless the heirs-at-law consented to its provisions I shall come to that point later.

For the same reasons on which I have based my finding in respect of the will Ex 3, the plaintiff must succeed to the full estate in all the property covered by it over which the testator had a power of disposition after the death of Sir Fateh Ali Khan. As I shall proceed to show later the testator had not the power of disposition over the Ali Razabad property and as I shall show later the appeal must succeed in respect of that property. But in respect of the Musalla property the disposition was a good disposition in so far as it gave a limited estate to Fateh Ali Khan. It might be argued (although it was not argued at the Bar) that under the Imamia law a series of limited estate can be created "ad infinitum" see Tyabji's Principles of Mahomedan Law, Ed 2, p 516, para 449. But even if this be so, the rule of succession on the termination of the limited estates cannot be effective. The limited estate in favour of the plaintiff may be a good estate. What then ? Hidayat Ali is dead The limited estate in his favour fails and the plaintiff is left again as holding both the limited estate and the remainder On the facts there was consent of the heirs I need not go into this matter in detail. It is sufficient that I accept the findings of the learned trial Judge to the effect that the plaintiff and Zohra Begam consented explicitly to the will Ex. 2 and that Fatima Begam consented impliedly. She received maintenance from Sir Fateh Ali Khan and clearly took no objection to the disposition.

Before I proceed to the contentious questions as to the rights to the Ali Razabad property I note certain objections taken by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru in respect of the property as a whole. He has taken a general objection that in any circumstances Sir Fateh Ali Khan had obtained full title by adverse possession. He did not press this plea strongly but he put it forward. The learned trial Judge has discussed the question of adverse possession under issue 16. The case put up here was that at a certain period about 1910 Sir Fateh Ali Khan asserted adverse possession He certainly did not assert it in respect of the Nawabganj Aliabad and the Musalla properties for we find that in the precis of facts (Ex. 152) prepared on 30th August 1911 which was submitted to Sir Louis Dane on his behalf it was stated that Sir Fateh Ali Khan had only a life interest in these properties. I consider that the defendant's appeal must succeed in regard to the Ali Razabad so it is not of importance to consider the question of adverse possession there. Another point was taken that the plaintiff by signing Ex. 3 as an attesting witness has forfeited all benefits under the will in accordance with the provisions of S. 54, Act 10 of 1865 read with S. 19, Act 1 of 1869 I am in agreement with the learned trial Judge that the acceptance of the will shown by the plaintiff's signature to Ex. 3 did not involve the voidness of the bequest. I note here that the decision of the Judicial Commissioner's Court on which he relies has since been approved by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Shiam Sundar v. Jagannath (5). But the plea fails for another reason. It cannot affect the title of the plaintiff. If he had a life estate under Ex. 3 and forfeited it he succeeds as heir-at-law.

(5) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 248.

I now come to the question of the Ali Razabad property. Here the disposition in Ex. 2 made by Nasir Ali Khan stands out as extraordinary. There can be no doubt as to the fact that he had before him the exact conditions of the grant Ex. A-13. As I have already noted he had been consulted before that grant was made. He had put in writing the terms that he desired. It is true that the Government had not made the grant exactly in the terms that he desired, but in so far as three life estates were created the Government had complied with his own wishes and the wishes of his brothers. He and his brothers had asked that a life-estate should be created first in favour of Nawazish Ali Khan, next in favour of Nasir Ali Khan and after that in favour of Nisar Ali Khan.

Whether the next estate was to be a heritable estate the holder of which was to have a right of transfer subject to the permission of the Lieutenant Governor and subject to the execution of a registered deed as laid down by Government, or whether the estate was to be a life estate as desired by the three brothers, Nawab Nasir Ali Khan had no power to dispose of the Ali Razabad property. He had no power to appoint a successor to it It could not have been the case that he had forgotten the conditions for in Ex. 2 he refers to the grant Ex. A-13 in explicit terms. He does not quote the grant but he quotes something showing special knowledge of its conditions. He refers to the letter of the Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to the Secretary of the Punjab Government on which the grant was based. He gives the number of the letter correctly, and he gives the date of the letter correctly, and he gives in Ex. 2 the exact terms of the grant. He did not know English So he must have had a correct translation of the grant before him. Knowing, as he did that he had no title to dispose of these properties stating, as he did, the fact that he had no title to dispose of the property, he nevertheless disposed of it and proceeded to grant in property over which he had no power of disposal three successive life-estates followed by a line of succession. Whether he was or was not ignorant of the terms he clearly had no disposing capacity. The remarkable fact is that he was not ignorant of the terms. It is clear that Ex. 2 gave no good title in Ali Razabad to any one and that in so far as it purported to give title not only had it no effect but the fact that it had no effect was palpable to any person who read Ex. 2 intelligently. The consequences of the death of Nawab Nasir Ali Khan were in no way affected by the execution of Ex. 2. Nawab Nisar Ali Khan having predeceased him, the last life estate terminated, and the male heirs were called upon under the terms of Ex. A-13 to choose as the holder of the estate male heir whom they considered the fittest person. If they did not agree to the appointment within a reasonable time, it was the duty of the Lieutenant-Governor to appoint. The learned trial Judge has stated that the Lieutenant-Governor could only exercise this power when the heirs disagreed. I do not read Ex. A-13 in that manner. An inability to agree is not the same as a disagreement. An omission to exercise their powers without expressing agreement or disagreement can only be construed as an inability to agree. The distinction is real. As I read the terms unless the heirs arrived within a reasonable time at an unanimous decision to appoint one of their number it was the duty of the Lieutenant-Governor himself to make the appointment The point as will be seen later is of importance.

At the time of the death of Nasir Ali Khan there were five male heirs in existence whose opinions could be taken. They were in order of age Barkat Ali Khan, who was then a man of forty, Fateh Ali Khan who was then a man of about thirty six, the plaintiff who was then a man of 26, Hidayat Ali Khan, who was a young man of eighteen, and Ali Muhammad Khan son of Barkat Ali Khan, who was a young man of seventeen. The only other male descendants of Nawab Ali Raza Khan were Ali Raza Khan aged four and Ali Khan and Mansur Ali Khan each aged two years old Every one of the adults if he had seen the will was in a position to know the necessity of making the appointment. It is the case for the defendant appellant that they did make such an appointment and that they selected Fateh Ali Khan under the terms of Ex. A-13 as the holder of the estate. It is on this question that there has been controversy and a conflict of evidence.

The events of 21st November 1896, were events not uncommon in the families of noblemen in the Punjab. There are always gatherings in such families at times of birth, marriage, and death and the ceremonies of condolence are as important as the ceremonies of rejoicing. When a man of the position of Nawab Nasir Ali Khan dies, there would ordinarily assemble a concourse at the house on the occasion of the third day ceremony, and amongst those assembled would ordinarily be relatives and highly placed friends of the family, and those of humbler position who were on visiting terms with the family. There would also be present many attracted by a desire to see and hear what was happening In such a gathering in a Shia family there would ordinarily be not only Shias. There would be Sunnis and there would be Hindus.

Thus the field from which witnesses could be drawn in this suit was a large field Several hundred people would ordinarily be present on such an occasion Against this it is to be remembered that the events occurred in 1896 and that the suit came on for hearing thirty years afterwards As I have already stated in an earlier part of this judgment at the time that the suit came on for hearing there were in existence partisans on both sides. The differences between the late Sir Fateh Ali Khan and the plaintiff were well known in Lahore. There were in existence two parties, a party which supported Sir Fateh Ali Khan and a party which supported the plaintiff. Sir Fateh Ali Khan's public life had made him friends and had made him enemies. It is clear that even in public matters Sir Fateh Ali Khan and the plaintiff were frequently on the opposite sides When evidence is conflicting, as this evidence is, the difficulties in arriving at a correct appreciation of its value are considerably enhanced by the fact that the events described occurred thirty years before. It is difficult to cross-examine effectively in regard to events so distant. The difficulty is greatly enhanced when the details in themselves are comparatively simple. In this case there has been a further difficulty A small portion of the evidence in the case was recorded by King, J. before whom the suit was. When he left this Court for the High Court of Allahabad the hearing continued before the learned trial Judge who has decided the suit. The great mass of the evidence was recorded on commission in the Punjab. Thus it has happened that the learned trial Judge did not actually hear any of the witnesses himself. He has referred to the loose manner in which evidence on commission was recorded. He has referred to the unsatisfactory methods adopted before the commissioner—methods for which the commissioner is in no way to blame. The learned trial Judge has felt the difficulty. He has arrived at the conclusion that the evidence is strongly partisan, and has preferred to select amongst witnesses those who are not Mahomedans and those of high ancestry and position as being most reliable. I am unable myself to rely upon the evidence of any particular witness for such reasons. I agree with the learned trial Judge that the evidence is usually the evidence of partisans, and when it is not the evidence of partisans it is the evidence of persons easily procurable who are ready to state anything. Any witness in this case who was endeavouring to give an accurate account of what happened on 21st November 1896 would, unless he were a man of remarkable memory, have had to admit that he had no more than a somewhat vague recollection. It is to be observed that very few of the witnesses took that position. Where the witnesses are partisans there is always a tendency to strain a point in favour of a friend. It is doubtful whether such a witness would conceive that he was thereby doing anything improper. The attitude of mind is often a self deception produced subconsciously by an outside cause. In these circumstances it appears to me that the best method of arriving at a correct conclusion is to look at the inherent probabilities of the case.

I need not dwell on what the witnesses assert occurred at the Soem ceremony. The Soem ceremony would ordinarily take place in the morning. We are told that it did take place in the morning. It would consist of readings from the Quran, of what is known as the Majlis observed invariably by Shias and what is known as the Fatiha. There would be prayers for the deceased and there would be eulogies on his virtues after the ceremony food is distributed. It may be taken that this is what occurred at the Soem ceremony. It is agreed that there was present at the Soem ceremony a retired Extra Assistant Commissioner by name Barkat Ali Khan. This gentleman is now deceased. He is to be distinguished from Barkat Ali Khan the brother of Sir Fateh Ali Khan. I see no reason to refuse to accept the evidence that he took a prominent part in the proceedings but as far as I can see that part was confined to eulogia, and to an announcement of the ceremony with which I am mainly concerned—the Dastarbandi or the tying of the turban ceremony. It may be taken that after the food at the Soem ceremony had been distributed some one announced, there is no reason why the announcer should not have been the retired Extra Assistant Commissioner Barkat Ali Khan, that the Dastarbandi ceremony would be held in the afternoon. The following are the two conflicting versions as to what occurred at the Dastarbandi ceremony.

According to the defendant's version the retired Extra Assistant Commissioner took very little part in the afternoon ceremony. Sir Fateh Ali Khan's brother Barkat Ali Khan according to him presided over that ceremony. Put shortly, his version is that Sir Fateh Ali Khan's elder brother called on the heirs to select a successor according to the provisions of Ex. A-13, that the heirs selected Sir Fateh Ali Khan and that his elder brother then tied the turban round his head to signify his selection as head of the family. After an acclamation the other members of the family kissed Sir Fateh Ali Khan's hand. Then there were refreshments and the gathering dispersed. This is the defendant's version. The plaintiff's version is that the retired Extra Assistant Commissioner took charge of the proceedings, that he informed the audience what were the contents of Nawab Nasir Ali Khan's wills, and that he informed them that the family had accepted those wills. Then Fateh Ali Khan's elder brother brought three shawls and the retired Extra Assistant Commissioner tied one shawl round the head of Fateh Ali Khan, one shawl round the head of the plaintiff and either placed the third shawl on the shoulders of Hidayat Ali Khan or presented it to him. I digress to refer to a document to which the learned trial Judge has made reference. This is Ex. 60 which purports to be an extract from an issue of the Civil and Military Gazette dated 23rd November 1896 The Civil and Military Gazette is a newspaper published in English in Lahore. The learned trial Judge was of opinion that both sides wished this extract to be placed on the record in evidence. We have, however, been informed by Mr Bisheshar Nath who appeared for the defendant in the lower Court and who appeared again before this Court that he never agreed to the reception of this document in evidence. We asked Mr. Hasan Imam who propounded this document on behalf of the plaintiff how an extract from a newspaper could be admissible in evidence. He could not put it higher than that it was part of the res gestae. I am of opinion that this document is inadmissible. If the writer had been called he could have produced it to corroborate his statement or it could have been produced by the other side to contradict his statement Standing by itself it appears to me inadmissible in evidence. Even if it were admissible it would not afford any evidence of a satisfactory nature as to the correctness of its contents.

To return to the conflicting stories given on behalf of the defendant and the plaintiff. It appears to me that they should be examined in the light of the facts which are established. The Dastarbandi ceremony is not a ceremony of a religious nature. Its meaning is clear from its name The head of a family or a tribe has on his succession a turban tied round his head to signify his accession to the position. Such a ceremony is not uncommon in certain families in this province Here it is usually known as pagribandhan which has the same meaning in Urdu as Dastarbandi in Persian. The first thing to be noted is that such a ceremony is a ceremony of installation. The selection or the recognition would ordinarily take place before. It is difficult to conceive how an election which might be contested could be combined with the Dastarbandi ceremony. The parties would have surely settled before, who the successor was to be The successor would then be installed as being recognized by them. It would not be in accordance with the dignity of such a family as this Qazilbash family to proceed to elect, and to risk the possibility of a dispute in the presence of a mixed gathering amongst whom the majority would be persons not of their own social status. The second point is this. I do not understand how the recognition of the successor could be accompanied by the recognition of the persons who were to succeed him. According to the plaintiff's story the retired Extra Assistant Commissioner Barkat Ali Khan not only tied a shawl on the head of Fateh Ali Khan to denote his immediate succession, but tied a shawl on the head of the plaintiff to denote that he would be the successor of Fateh Ali Khan, and then put a shawl round the shoulders of or presented a shawl to Hidayat Ali Khan to show that he would be the successor of the plaintiff. The delicate distinction in not tying the shawl round the head of Hidayat Ali Khan, because he was the successor only to the third estate, is noticeable The next point which is difficult to understand is why the retired Extra Assistant Commissioner should be deputed to perform the ceremony of installation He was not a member of the family. The defendant's story is better here. Barkat Ali Khan, the elder brother of Fateh Ali Khan, as the senior in age might well perform the installation. The introduction of a reference to wills and the title deeds appears to me to have been singularly out of place in such a ceremony. The learned trial Judge has criticized the defendant's story where it is said that reference was made to the terms of Ex A-13 The criticism is just. An equally strong criticism may be directed to the reference to the terms of the wills.

It is also noticeable that the reference to the terms of Ex. 2 involves a reference to the terms of Ex. A-13, as Ex A-13 is discussed explicitly in Ex. 2. But my finding is that there was no necessity to refer to any of these documents at such a ceremony as the Dastarbandi If it had been considered necessary to obtain the assent of the heirs of Nasir Ali Khan to the terms of the will (Ex. 2) this occasion would hardly have been selected, and the method in which the assent is stated to have been obtained is unconvincing. In respect of Ex. 3 the assent of the heirs was immaterial The provisions of Act 1 of 1869 did not require the assent of the heirs of Nasir Ali Khan. Ex. 2 which was a will made by a Shia bound by the Imamia law did require the assent of Nasir Ali Khan's heirs but of no one else. Fateh Ali Khan, his elder brother Barkat Ali Khan, Barkat Ali Khan's son Ali Muhammad Khan, and Hidayat Ali Khan were not the heirs of Nasir Ali Khan. The heirs of Nasir Ali Khan were his widow Fatima Begam who was in Karbala, the plaintiff, and the plaintiff's sister Zohra Begam. The two latter had already assented to the will. My finding on the probabilities of the case is that this Dastarbandi ceremony was performed by Fateh Ali Khah's brother and not by the retired Exra Assistant Commissioner of the same name. As the eldest member of the family he obviously would perform the ceremony. The suggestion in the plaintiff's story that the retired Extra Assistant Commissioner performed the ceremony and that Fateh Ali Khan's brother fetched the shawls does not commend itself to me The suggestion that Fateh Ali Khan's brother who was excluded from all benefit under the wills should in the circumstance have gone to fetch the shawls for the retired Extra Assistant Commissioner seems impossible of acceptance. Any servant could have fetched the shawls I further find that the turban was tied on the head of Fateh Ali Khan and that no other member of the family was recognized in any way as successor. Shawls may have been presented by Fateh Ali Khan as khilats to other members of the family. I do not believe that there was any reference (except perhaps in the most general way) to the wills or to Ex. A-13. There was no place for such reference. I thus accept neither story as it stands.

What then was the legal import of what happened? I can give this best in a quotation from the evidence elicited under cross-examination from the plaintiff himself. The reference is to o-p. 396 at p. 61 of Part 1 of the Printed Book :

"No one raised any objection to Fateh Ali Khan being owner and successor of the estate. At that time I approved the arrangement that Fateh Ali Khan should succeed to the property in place of my father. Barkat Ali Khan, the elder brother of Fateh Ali Khan, also approved of Fateh Ali Khan's succession. Hidayat Ali Khan also approved. I considered Fateh Ali Khan to be the most suitable successor in preference to Hidayat Ali Khan, who was young, and Barkat Ali Khan, who had left the world. I consented to the succession of Fateh Ali Khan, who was older than I, and who had been appointed by my father."

There is reason to suppose that Barkat Ali Khan, the elder brother of Fateh Ali Khan had not abandoned the world. But that point is of no importance. Nor can anything useful be derived from a discussion as to the relative characters or relative suitability of the various male heirs who had then attained maturity. It is unfortunate that as a result of the acerbity which the parties have introduced into the contest of the case many unpleasant remarks and many unpleasant suggestions have been made I find that there is no foundation for many of these suggestions and even if there had been foundation the suggestions should not have been made, as they are painful and in no way assist the determination of the case. Whether Barkat Ali Khan had abandoned the world as the plaintiff would have it, or whether he was a man of dissolute character as the defendant would have it, whether Hidayat Ali Khan's mental condition approached imbecility or whether he was a comparatively normal man do not affect the questions. It is sufficient that on the plaintiff's own statement Fateh Ali Khan was accepted as the head of the family. It is true that Barkat Ali Khan, as is clear from the evidence of Mr. Hallifax (D.W. 38), quarrelled with the head of the family shortly afterwards, but he accepted him as head. Barkat Ali Khan's son Ali Muhammad Khan clearly accepted him. He gave evidence in the mutation proceedings in Lahore which will be found in Ex. A-113. He died before he could be called as a witness in the present case. I do not rely upon his evidence as it stands, as the officer who heard it did not consider him reliable, but it is clear that he accepted Fateh Ali Khan as the head of the family.

I do not find that there was any formal selection with direct reference to Ex. A-13. If there had been such a formal selection I should have accepted intimation to have been given in writing to the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab. There is no evidence that such intimation was given. I am, however, of opinion that the recognition of Fateh Ali Khan as the head of the family in preference to his elder brother, Muhammad Ali, Khan and Hidayat Ali Khan was a sufficient choice within the meaning of Ex A-13. This directed the male heirs to make a choice from among themselves when the last life estate terminated The words are :

" Upon the death of whichever of the three persons aforesaid shall longest survive the said estate shall go and belong to whichever of the lawful male heirs of the said Nawab Ali Raza Khan shall be chosen by the said male heirs as the fittest person to succeed to the said estate. "

Fateh Ali Khan was distinctly chosen as the fittest person and from this it can only be implied that he was the fittest person to succeed to the said estate. The circumstance that Nasir Ali Khan had assumed a power of devise over the Ali Razabad property which he did not possess does not affect the selection of Fateh Ali Khan as the fittest person.

If, however, it be considered that the said male heirs were unable to agree within a reasonable time another point arises. Reference has already been made to the confirmation of the title of Nawab upon Nasir Ali Khan Under the provisions of Ex. A-39 the title of Nawab was to be conferred in future in the following manner :

" This title will henceforth be hereditary in your family, and will descend to the fittest member of the family by the same rule as that by which the estates devolve according to your family custom provided that such member shall on each devolution of the title be formally approved of by the Viceroy and Governor-General of India as a deserving representative of the family. "

Before the title could descend it then had to be determined that the new holder should be the " fittest member " of the family and he had to be recognised by the Viceroy and Governor-General as a deserving representative of the family. There was unfortunately superadded a qualification which is meaningless that the estates would devolve " according to the family custom " to the fittest member There was no much family custom and the estates held by Nasir Ali Khan were held under a variety of titles In Nawabganj-Aliabad he held as a devisee in an estate governed by Act 1 of 1869. In Musalla he held as the devisee of a full proprietary estate granted to Sir Nawazish Ali Khan. In Khalikabad he held as mutwalli and in Ali Razabad he held a life estate under a special grant. But rejecting this qualification this much is clear. Before the title could descend it had to be shown that the new title holder was the fittest member of the family and a deserving representative of the family. On 6th July 1897 more than seven months after Nawab Nasir Ali Khan's death the Assistant Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, wrote Ex. A-22 and in Ex -22 it is noted that the Government of India accepts the Punjab Government's recognition of Fateh Ali Khan as head of the family (in other words according to Ex. A-39 " the fittest member of the family ") and further accepts him as a deserving representative of the family. The title of Nawab in consequence was declared to descend to him in accordance with the terms of Ex. A-39. This recognition can only be looked at in two ways. It is either a ratification of the choice of the heirs or, assuming that the choice of the heirs had not been made, it is an appointment by the Lieutenant Governor under the terms of Ex. A-13

I cannot agree with the learned trial Judge that the Lieutenant Governor merely accepted the position under the belief that he was carrying out the wishes of the family. This would imply that the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, who in April 1897 was Sir Mackworth Young, was ignorant of the terms of the grant Ex. A-13. Nor do I understand the force of the argument advanced by the learned trial Judge that the Lieutenant Governor took a different view in 1911. It was for Sir Mackworth Young to decide the matter finally. Sir Louis Dane could not reopen the matter in 1911. It is not proved that either Sir Mackworth Young or his predecessor Sir Dannis Fitzpatrick (Sir Mackworth Young succeeded Sir Dannis Fitzpatrick on the 6th March 1897) made a formal selection of Fateh Ali under the provisions of Ex. A-13 There was no necessity for this to be done if the heirs had already made the choice, and the circumstance that no formal selection was made would indicate that the heirs had made a choice. But if the heirs had not made the choice I consider that Ex. A-22 was a sufficient selection by the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab.

These findings dispose in effect of the appeal in so far as it relates to the Ali Razabad property. It was, however, urged on this Court by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru that even if his case fails on the question of choice by the heirs of selection by the Lieutenant Governor the appeal must succeed on the ground that the plaintiff had not made out any title in the Ali Razabad property. The plaintiff had of course to succeed on the strength of his own title not on the weakness of the defendant's title and if the heirs have not made a choice and the Lieutenant Governor has not made a selection the question as to who should succeed to the Ali Razabad property has still to be determined. The heirs not having made the choice within a reasonable time it would be for the Lieutenant Governor to make the selection now. The plaintiff has no title and so the appeal should succeed on this point. This was the argument of Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru. I think it desirable to arrive at a decision on this plea although on my previous findings the plea does not arise The learned trial Judge decided against this plea on the ground that the defendant was estopped from setting it up. He relied on the decision in Board v. Board (6). This was a decision of a Bench in 1873. A certain Robert Ameshbury was "tenant by the Court" of certain property. When he died he had nothing to devise therein. His son Joseph Amesbury was heir-at-law. Robert Amesbury, however, made a will leaving the property to Rebecca Amesbury for life and to a certain William Board in fee Joseph Amesbury did not claim the property within twenty years. On Rebecca's death William Board claimed as Rebecca's representative. Rebecca's representative asserted that Rebecca had acquired independently of the will a prescriptive title to the property. It was held that he was estopped from taking this plea.

The view taken was that the holder of the life estate and the remainder man must be considered as one and that the holder of the life estate who had entered under the will could not against the will assert an adverse title derived independently against the remainder man. If the facts in this case were as the facts in Board v. Board (6), the decision of the learned Judges therein would be of great importance. But here the facts are different. If there is a finding that there has been no choice by the heirs and that there has been no selection by the Lieutenant Governor the Ali Razabad estate will have vested in no one. There can be no assertion of adverse possession by Fateh Ali Khan or his heirs for we find from the precis of facts to which reference has already been made (Ex. A-152) that Fateh Ali Khan asserted in 1911 that he had been duly elected by the family. He accepted the terms of the grant without demur. I agree that it is not open to the defendant to assert a title by adverse possession as against the plaintiff. But he is certainly not estopped from pointing out that neither he nor the plaintiff has any title except under the provisions of Ex. A-13. That is all which he says. Before an estoppel can take place it would be necessary for the plaintiff to establish that he had been led to do something detrimental to his own interests owing to the action of Sir Fateh Ali Khan. It has not been established that he did anything detrimental to his interests and he has to meet the position that Sir Fateh Ali Khan all along claimed under Ex. A-13. It has further been urged that it was not competent for Sir Fateh Ali Khan while taking advantage of the terms of the will Ex. 2 to repudiate any portion of it I do not find, however, that there has been any attempt to repudiate the will. I thus find that that the Ali Razabad property was acquired by Fateh Ali Khan under the terms of Ex. A-13. Mr. Hasan Imam suggested that in any circumstances the plaintiff should succeed here under a family arrangement, apart from the absence of registered deeds. How could the family make an arrangement except according to the provisions of Ex. A-13 ? I decide against this plea. The appeal should therefore succeed in respect of the property in Sch. 3.

I now come to the portion of the appeal which has reference to the Khalikabad property. This property formed the subject of an admittedly valid wakf created by Nawab Nasir Ali Khan on 17th June 1892 The defendant had from the commencement asserted that this Court had no jurisdiction to decide the plaintiff's claim in respect of the wakf property. He repeats the plea here. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru on his behalf, while recognizing that the plaintiff had a right under the provisions of S. 17, Civil P. C. to ask for possession of the Punjab property other than the Khalikabad property argued that the Court has no jurisdiction to declare the plaintiff mutwalli of the Khalikabad property as the Punjab Courts alone would have jurisdiction to decide that point. His case was that is so far as the Khalikabad property was concerned the suit was not to obtain relief in respect of property but to obtain a declaration of title as mutwalli under the terms of Ex. 4 which this Court has no jurisdiction to grant. In order to determine whether this Court has or has not jurisdiction to grant that relief it is necessary to look closely at the conditions of appointment of mutwalli under the terms of the deed of wakf Ex. 4. The translation gives the conditions as follows :

"I have for my life time fixed the trusteeship to my own person without any partner. And after me the question of trusteeship will devolve upon the person who will succeed after me."

The question which I have to consider is whether this Court can determine this question. Nawab Nasir Ali Khan was certainly succeeded by Nawab Sir Fateh Ali Khan in every respect and as such a successor (janashin) Sir Fateh Ali Khan became mutwalli. But the question is, is the successor to Sir Fateh Ali Khan in this sense of the word who will become mutwalli? What this Court has decided so far is that the plaintiff must succeed in respect of the Nawabganj Aliabad property—if in no other manner—by intestate succession as the heir of Nawab Nasir Ali Khan and that he must succeed in respect of the Musalla property if in no other manner by intestate succession as heir of Nawab Nasir Ali Khan. His suit fails in respect of the Ali Razabad property as the estate, according to the terms of the grant Ex. A-13 vested as heritable estate in Sir Fateh Ali Khan But it has not decided and cannot decide the question of succession as mutwalli for the question of succession to the office of mutwalli is inseparably connected with the question of succession to the title of Nawab. Ex. A 39 was executed on 1st January 1892. Ex 4 wasexecuted on 17th June 1892.

The Viceroy and Governor-General has not yet determined who is to be hereditary Nawab and in accordance with the terms of the sanad (Ex. A-39) the successor must be the fittest member of the family who is also a deserving representative of the family. According to my view it is that successor who is entitled to obtain the post of mutwalli. If the view be taken that the future holder of the Nawabganj-Aliabad and the Musalla estates is to be considered the successor of Nasir Ali Khan it would be possible for a transferee of those estates unconnected with the family to obtain the appointment of mutwalli. We have here a clear line of guidance. It is for the Viceroy to determine who is to be head of the family provided he be a deserving representative ; and so long as a deserving representative can be found, the head of the family will be created a hereditary Nawab, and it is that hereditary Nawab who will be the mutwalli in respect of the Khalikabad property. I therefore consider that apart from the question of jurisdiction the appeal must succeed in respect of the property in Sch 5.

The next question for determination is in respect of a portion of the under-proprietary rights in a village called Ramnagar Simra No 23, Sch. 1. This is a village in the Bahraich District the superior rights of which appertain to the Nawabganj-Aliabad property. On 21st August 1906, Nawab Fateh Ali Khan purchased a portion of the under-proprietary rights in that village. The sale certificate is Ex. A-7. The learned trial Judge decided at o. p. 54 that under the rule of merger stated in S. 101, Act 4 of 1882, these under-proprietary rights merged in the estate of Nawabganj-Aliabad It appears to me that they did not do so. On the construction which I have placed on Ex. 3 Sir Fateh Ali Khan obtained only a life-estate in Nawabganj-Aliabad. He never became absolutely entitled to the property. Thus it must be held that there is no merger The appeal must succeed on this point.

There is another point. Nasir Ali Khan during his lifetime acquired a house adjoining the Mubarak Haveli. It is the case for the defendant that this house was absorbed in the Mubarak Haveli and in the division of the Mubarak Haveli this house should be included. But on the facts I find that although this house adjoins the Mubarak Haveli it has never become amalgamated with the Mubarak Haveli It remained the property of Nasir Ali Khan and has rightly been held to devolve upon the plaintiff as his heir by intestate successions The appeal therefore fails upon this point. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru did not argue on ground 24 of appeal in reference to mesne profits. I find the decree correct on this point. But the amount will be varied according to the variation in the appellate decree. As a result I should allow the defendant's appeal No. 116 to this extent. I should exclude from the relief awarded to the plaintiff all the properties in Schs. 3 and 5 and the under-proprietary rights in Ramnagar Simra No. 23 in Sch. 1. The costs should be borne according to success and failure.

I now come to the plaintiff's appeal. This can shortly be disposed of The plaintiff objects to having received only a declaration in respect of one-third of the Mubarak Haveli. He asks for possession Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru on behalf of the defendant did not oppose this prayer. He agreed that possession should be given to the plaintiff over one-third of the Mubarak Haveli. The plea is a good plea and the appeal is accepted to this extent. The remaining plea relates to relief in respect of certain land covered by the deed of wakf Ex 4. As I have previously found that this Court is not competent to determine who should be the mutwalli the appeal must fail on this ground On my finding the plaintiff is not the mutwalli at present. He may subsequently be held to be the mutwalli. When he has obtained that position it will then be open to him to seek for relief under this head The failure of this plea will not operate as res judicata. As the plaintiff has succeeded in respect to about half the relief sought in his appeal and has failed in respect to about half of his relief I consider that the plaintiff and the defendant should pay their own costs in respect of the Appeal No. 147 of 1927.

Raza, J.—I entirely agree, I have nothing to add to the judgment which has been delivered by the Hon'ble the Chief Judge. I adopt the judgment

WAZIR HASAN, J.

Panchu—Applicant.

v.

Jumman—Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 16 of 1929, Decided on 18th July 1929, from order of Dist. and Sess. Judge, Gonda, D/- 21st November 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 195 (3)—Court of Subordinate Judge exercising power of Judge of Small Cause Court is subordinate to District Judge.

Under sub-S (3) the Court of the District Judge is the principal Court having original jurisdiction within the local limits in which a Court of Subordinate Judge exercising powers of a Judge of Small Cause Court is situate and the Court of Subordinate Judge is subordinate to it. Therefore, the District Judge has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge passed under S 476-B 20 O. C. 223, Ref., 1 Pat. L. J. 203; 2 Pat. L. J. 1, Dist. [P 516 C 1]

Though it may be conceded that according to S. 7 the Chief Court of Oudh has original jurisdiction in civil matters over certain classes, yet it cannot be considered to be Court of "ordinary" original civil jurisdiction as required by S. 195 (3), Criminal P. C., because jurisdiction conferred by S. 7 is not an "ordinary" original civil jurisdiction. [P 516 C 2]

Judgment.—This is an application under S. 115, Civil P. C The circumstances are as follows:

The respondent held a decree against the applicant passed by the Court of the Munsif of Qaiserganj. On an application being made by the applicant to the said Court for recording full satisfaction of the decree notice was issued to and effected on the respondent in respect of the certification proceedings but the respondent did not appear and an ex parte order recording the full satisfaction of the decree was made on 5th Augnst 1926 In February 1928 the respondent made an application for execution of the decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich exercising powers of a Judge of Small Cause Court. The execution proceeded to certain stage but finally the case was consigned to records. The applicant then presented a petition to the Subordinate Judge, praying that the respondent be prosecuted under S 210,

I P. C. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the prayer of the petitioner and took proceedings under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. From the order of the learned Subordinate Judge the respondent preferred an appeal to the Court of the District Judge of Gonda. The learned Judge considered the appeal on its merits and held that no good purpose would be served by instituting a prosecution. He accordingly allowed the appeal and ordered the withdrawal of the complaint made by the Subordinate Judge. Against this order of the learned District Judge the present application in revision is made

On the merits of the case I am not prepared to interfere with the order of the learned District Judge but a point of law was raised to the effect that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge passed under S 476-B, Criminal P. C In support of this contention two cases decided by the High Court at Patna were cited: Ambika v Emperor (1) and Sukhdeo v Dist. Mag., Muzzafferpur (2) The first mentioned case purports to follow a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Ajodhia Prasad v Ram Lal (3). I do not propose to consider these cases on two grounds. Ground 1 is that since the decision of those cases the law has been materially altered and ground 2 is that the decision in those cases was not accepted as applicable to Oudh in the case of Ram Dayal v Dwarka (4).

In my opinion according to S. 195, sub-S, (3), Criminal P. C., there can be no question that the Court of the District Judge is the principal Court having original civil jurisdiction within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Court of the Subordinate Judge exercising powers of a Judge of Small Cause Court is situate and this is so under the second portion of sub-S (3) mentioned above. I further hold that even according to the first part of sub-S (3) the Court which originally initiated proceedings under S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., is the Court subordinate to the Court of the District Judge because though a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge in the exercise of his powers of a Judge of Small Cause Court is not an appealable decree yet an appeal from such of his decrees as are appealable in law would ordinarily lie to the Court of District Judge. Again if certain appeals were to lie to the Chief Court, according to proviso (a), sub-S. (3), the Court of the District Judge would be competent to entertain an appeal from proceedings initiated under S 476-B, Criminal P C In this connexion the definition of the expression " District Judge " in the General Clauses Act, 1897, and of " District " in S. 2 (4), Civil P C., is helpful and leads to the same conclusion at which I have reached.

It was argued that after the passing of the Oudh Courts Act 1925, the Chief Court of Oudh is a Court possessed of original civil jurisdiction and, therefore, the decision in Ram Dayal v Dwarka (4), is no longer relevant. Now the original jurisdiction of the Chief Court of Oudh is conferred by S. 7, Oudh Courts Act 1925, and it may be conceded that according to that section the Chief Court of Oudh has original jurisdiction in civil matters over a certain class of cases but sub-S. (3), S 195, Criminal P. C., speaks of " ordinary " original civil jurisdiction and to my mind the jurisdiction conferred by S. 7, Oudh Courts Act 1925, is not an " ordinary " original civil jurisdiction.

The application is dismissed with costs

Umrao—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 363 of 1929, Decided on 26th July 1929, from order of Addl. Sess Judge, Bahraich, D/- 6-7-1929.

Penal Code, S 302—Death under circumstances compatible with little else than irritant poisoning— Medical evidence also testifying to same effect—Conclusion that death was due to poisoning by accused held to be good conclusion

The accused who was greatly displeased with the wife of his brother, came to get her child from her. He took away the child without her consent. Later on he was overpersuaded by other men to let the child remain. He then proceeded to give the child some sweets. Directly afterwards the child was taken ill and died. The child's viscera was sent to Chemical Examiner who deposed that an extract from viscera produced tingling sensation when rubbed on the tongue and killed frog on injection. He gave as his opinion that death was due to aconite poisoning. The Civil Surgeon was of opinion from the condition of the mucous membrane of the stomach and the points of haemorrhage that death was due possibly to irritant poisoning. There were other symptoms which pointed to aconite poisoning.

Held : that child died under circumstances which would be compatible with little else than aconite poisoning and that the child was poisoned by the accused was a good conclusion [P 519 C 1,2]

Judgment.—Umrao Dafali, a man of thirty years of age, a resident of Bhitya in the Bahraich District, has been convicted by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich of an offence of murder under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court. He appeals The reference in confirmation is also before us The facts are these : Hafizan, the daughter of Raddu Dafali and Mangala, residents of a hamlet called Ghuraupura or Jignia Mahpal Singh in the village of Bhabharpur, Bahraich District, married about 1919, Abdulla the brother of the appellant and went to reside in the house in which he and the appellant lived in the village of Bhitya. At first her marriage with Abdulla was successful Subsequently Abdulla became incapacitated by lameness and was unable to work Umrao then apparently had to keep them While ready to keep his brother he was not ready to pay for the support of his brother's wife. In 1926 Hafizan was turned by Umrao out of the house. She went back to her father's house. She was then pregnant Her son Mohammad Husain known by the pet name of Chummun is the deceased child with whose murder Umrao has been charged. This child was born about July or August 1926 After his birth Hafizan returned to Abdulla. After a short time she was divorced and turned out of the house once more, Abdulla retaining the custody of the child. She went back to her father On 5th February 1929, she returned to Bhitya which is eighteen or nineteen miles from Bhabharpur. She clandestinely removed the child and brought him back to her father's house on 6th February 1929. On 7th February Umrao and a man called Ghafoor arrived at Jignia Mahpal Singh They went to the house of Rahmat Ruddu's brother. Ghafoor came to Ruddu's house where he found Mangala. He asked Mangala to give back the child The child was at that time with Hafizan who was in the fields When Hafizan returned, Mangala took the child to Rahmat's house where the appellant was The appellant took the child upon his knee and apparently fondled it After a time he returned the child to Mangala, who took him home. On 8th February 1929, Umrao and Ghafoor went away to another hamlet whence they returned with Rahim Bakhsh the brother of Umrao's mother. At that time Mangala and Hafizan were away but the child was in the house. Umrao and Ghafoor took the child up and were taking him away when Mangala and Hafizan returned. We continue in the words of the witnesses themselves. Mangala has deposed as to what happened subsequently.

"Then I requested Umrao to let the boy remain with us till the Id. Umrao said he would by no means give the boy, and carried him away. I then asked Umrao to let my daughter suckle the child. He gave the child to me. I gave the child to my daughter. On account of shame from the presence of her husband's elder brother Umrao, my daughter turned round to suckle the boy. Umrao rushed and snatched away the boy. Then my daughter began to weep and cry Then I began to cry too. My daughter then said that he would be no better than a man who had connexion with his sister and his mother if he took away the boy. Umrao started off with the boy saying that he would be no son of his father if he did not get us all sitting in the police station at Sonwan. Then he went away with the boy up to a grove called the Hidia grove. Behind him went I and my younger daughter Nissa, beseeching him to leave the boy. Fakiroy tailor who was coming in the noon from his fields to his house and Ratan who was splitting wood in the grove met there. I told them that they had the previous night made Umrao give the boy to me and now he was taking away the boy. Fakiroy and Ratan entreated Umrao to give the boy till the Id. Then we all sat down in the grove."

"Umrao made the boy sit on his legs and gave him sweets which he untied from the corner of an angaucha. The sweets were two peaces of gur, half a chattak in weight. While the boy was eating gur Umrao kept him seated on his legs. When he had finished, Rahim Bakhsh and Gappu said that the boy should be given to me to be taken away.

Umrao said that day he was giving me the boy and if anything untoward happened he would take another boy in return for the boy given me."

Note :—Gappu is Ghafoor.

"I said I had nourished the boy for two years with care and nothing untoward had happened and that now if any such thing should happen I would give a boy to Umrao in return for that boy. Then the three started off. Myself, my daughter, the boy, Fakirey and Ratan Lodh started for our village. As we had gone a little distance the boy's head hung down. When we went a little further the boy lost consciousness. I made my daughter Nissa run to call back Umrao and his companions. My daughter followed them to Hariharpur but they took rapid strides and disappeared By the time my daughter came back the boy expired. When I reached home the boy vomitted. I thought he was possessed and I went to a wizard. I told my daughter Hafizan to lay the boy on the square of Imam Sahib, while I was going to call the magician. When I came back I found the boy stark dead. I saw the boy. His teeth, lips and nails were all black."

Hafizan's account of the affair is this. She says she did not accompany her mother to the grove She says :

"The three men went away with the child and my mother and my sister Nissa went behind them beseeching. My mother then came back with the child. The boy was unconscious and hung his head down. He was perspiring. I put the boy on the chabutra of Fakirey tailor. The boy vomitted six or seven times and expired there before my mother came back from the magician's house to which she had gone His nails and teeth became black and his lips blue and his stomach got bulged out."

Nissa a little girl of nine corroborated. Fakirey the tailor said

"The next day when Umrao was going with the baby I met him at Hiddabagh. Ghafoor was with him. Mangala was behind them. She was entreating Umrao to leave the boy behind. I interceded and Umrao agreed. All of us sat there on the ground. Umrao gave the boy two lumps of gur about half a chhatak in weight. The boy ate up the gur. The three men started towards their village and we started towards our village. I did not hear any condition imposed by Umrao as to the boy when giving him to Mangala. I did not hear him saying that if the child did not fare well Umrao would take another boy from her. In the way the child became unwell. Mangala asked me and I said the boy was either possessed by something or there was poison in gur.

Ratan said :-

"Umrao with the child, Ghafoor and Rahim Baksh came to Hidda grove followed by Nissa and Mangala entreating them to leave the boy till Id. I was splitting wood in that Hidda grove. Fakirey came there. I and Fakirey admonished Umrao and he acceded to our request. We all sat down on the ground. Umrao from his dhoti's corner took out two lumps of gur and gave them to the boy who ate it up. Then Umrao gave the boy to Mangala. Umrao said if the boy should be unwell or die he would take back a boy in return. Mangala said she had nourished the boy 2½ years and he had not come to grief."

We have in places altered the translation in the printed book. We have corrected the translation from the Vernacular. Thus according to this story the boy who was apparently in good health was given some sugar by the appellant. Almost directly after he had eaten it he was taken violently ill and he died in a very short time afterwards Before we go any further we should dispose of a plea in defence which, while recognizing that the child was poisoned, suggests that he was poisoned not by the appellant but by his own grandmother Mt. Mangala. We have already referred to Ghafoor and Rahim Bakhsh. Ghafoor was arrested in connexion with the murder but as there was not sufficient evidence against him he was discharged. He has given evidence for the defence So has Rahim Bakhsh. According to these witnesses Mangala at first agreed that the appellant and Ghafoor should take the boy away. Ghafoor says .

"When Umrao started with the boy Mangala said that ten koses had to be travelled and the boy might cry in the way and so Umrao should take with him sweets to give the boy. So saying she tied a piece of gur to the corner of Umrao's angaucha. The gur was about a chhatak. Umrao started with the boy Mangala and Nissa came along with us entreating Umrao to let the boy remain till the Id. Umrao did not heed So the two followed us to the Hidda grove. There Ratan and Fakirey tailor were cooling themselves in the grove."

"Mangala said to Fakirey that Umrao had brought her daughter's son and was not listening to entreaties Fakirey and Ratan recommended to Umrao that he should let the boy remain till the Id. Umrao said that it was wrong for Hafizan to steal away the boy. Then at the request of myself, Rahim Bakhsh, Fakirey and Ratan, Umrao gave the boy to Mangala and made the boy eat the gur (mithai) which was tied at the corner of his angaucha."

Rahim Bakhsh said

"Mangala took the boy from Hafizan and gave him to Umrao. Mangala tied gur in Umrao's angaucha while Hafizan was suckling the boy and said that " whenever the boy should cry Umrao should give him the gur as a distance of ten koses had to be covered. Umrao started homeward with the boy. I and Ghafoor were with him. Mt. Mangala and Hafizan came along with us in the way making entreaties. After a short distance we came to a grove called the Hidda grove. Then Ratan Lodh and Fakirey tailor met us. Mt. Mangala said to them that she was entreating Umrao to let the boy remain with her for a month but Umrao did not heed. Fakirey and Ratan Lodh also asked Umrao to leave the boy for a month which was not a long time. We too said that the boy might be allowed to remain. Umrao gave back the boy to Mt. Mangala. Umrao then untied the sweets (mithai) that is the same gur and gave it to the boy. The boy began to eat gur."

Here is a sharp conflict of evidence. If Mangala, Nissa, Fakirey and Ratan are telling the truth the gur was with the appellant and the appellant gave it to the boy to eat. If Ghafoor and Rahim Bakhsh are telling the truth it was Mangala who was responsible for giving the gur to the boy. It is noticeable that Fakirey and Ratan appear to be independent witnesses. It is also noticeable that neither of them was cross-examined on this point Ghafoor was the appellant's associate all through the matter. Rahim Bakhsh is his mother's brother. It is true that the families are inter-related. There is further this fact. Hafizan has deposed that while she was at Bhitya the son of Sarfaraz, another brother of Umrao was drowned and that she was charged by Umrao and the family with having drowned the boy. She says that Umrao told her (here we are correcting the English of the record) that he would deal with her in such a manner that she would not be able to let her liver go because she would be gripping it in agony. Both Ghafoor and Rahim Bakhsh deposed to the drowning of Sarfaraz's son but both deposed a complete ignorance of Hafizan having been charged with complicity in the child's death. We do not wish to strain the point but there may be some connexion between the death of the son of Sarfaraz and the present affair. The learned Sessions Judge and the assessors all found the appellant guilty and they thus found that Mangala, Nissa, Fakirey and Ratan were telling the truth and that Ghafoor and Rahim were not telling the truth We are of the same opinion. The case then stands as follows: The appellant was greatly displeased with Hafizan. He came to get the child back. He took away the child without the consent of the mother. Later on he was over-persuaded by other men to let the child remain. He then proceeded to give the child some sweets. Directly afterwards the child was taken ill and died The child's viscera was sent to the Chemical Examiner who deposed that an extract from the viscera produced a tingling and numbing sensation when rubbed on the tongue and killed a frog on injection He gave it as his opinion that the death of the child was due to aconite poisoning. In Taylor's well known work on Medical Jurisprudence, 8th Edn. Vol. 2, p. 718 it is stated

"Aconite may be extracted from organic liquids by means of Stas's process for the separation of the alkaloids. In this way and by applying the test of taste and that of physiological action on animals (mice or frogs) a very minute trace of aconitine may be detected."

We hold that the child died in circumstances which would be compatible with little else than irritant poisoning. The Civil Surgeon was of opinion from the condition of the mucous membrane of the stomach and the points of haemorrhage that death was due possibly to an irritant poison. There were other symptoms which pointed to poisoning with aconite. We have been unable to ascertain that the discolouration of the nails or teeth after death is a necessary symptom of poisoning by aconite but this discolouration might well follow intense irritation. Even in the absence of the medical evidence a conclusion that the child was poisoned could be a good conclusion, but when the other evidence is read with the medical evidence it appears to us that we are not justified at arriving at any conclusion other than the conclusion on which the Court arrived. The question of motive is difficult. In the first place it was not easy for the Court to ascertain every aspect of the case from the witnesses. The people who had the most intimate knowledge of the facts were all Dafalis. Dafalis anywhere are not an intelligent class and in the particular part where they reside would probably be most unintelligent This much, however, is clear. Umrao hated Hafizan and was apparently ready to do anything to injure Hafizan. We believe her evidence when she says that Umrao attributed the death of the son of his brother Sarfaraz to her. It may have been that he wished to deprive her of her son. It may have been that he had hoped being an ignorant man that if he poisoned the deceased child Hafizan might be suspected of murder It is noticeable that his witnesses have endeavoured to implicate Hafizan's mother. The learned counsel who appeared for the appellant put up as good a case for him as was possible. The gentleman in question is a very experienced counsel in criminal cases. He was, however, unable to put the case any higher than this He said that even if the Court took the view on the evidence that the appellant gave the sugar to the child it appears to us impossible to take any other view—there was a possibility that the appellant was unaware of the fact that the sugar contained poison. He did not endeavour to contest the finding of the Sessions Judge that the boy had been poisoned This plea is altogether insufficient. We accordingly find that the appellant has been rightly convicted The offence was particularly cruel and there can be no question of mitigation. We accordingly dismiss the appeal, uphold the conviction, confirm the sentence and direct that Umrao be hanged by the neck till he be dead.

Judgment.—This is the plaintiff's appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Rai Bareli dated 17th February 1928 affirming the decree of the Munsif of Dalmau dated 12th November 1927. The plaintiff is the wife of one Abdul Wahab, who was arrayed as defendant 2 in the suit out of which this appeal arises Shaikh Muhammad Ibrahim defendant 1 holds a decree for simple money debt against Abdul Wahab In execution of that decree he desires to attach and bring to sale the property which is the subject matter of the present suit. The plaintiff intervenes in execution proceedings with a claim that the property in question had been gifted to her by her husband, Abdul Wahab, in lieu of a portion of her dower debt by a registered deed executed on 23rd December 1926. This claim was rejected by the Court seized of the execution proceedings. In consequence of this the present suit was brought. The relief claimed is a declaration that the property in question is not liable to be sold in execution of the decree held by defendant 1 as against Abdul Wahab defendant 2 The ground on which the relief is claimed is the same which was urged by her in the execution proceedings to which reference has already been made. The only defence to the suit with which we are concerned was that the deed of gift is a fictitious transaction in the sense that there was no dower debt subsisting on the date of its execution in favour of the plaintiff and if that was true the deed was clearly voidable at the option of the creditor in virtue of the provisions of S. 53, T. P. Act, 1882. The Courts below have given effect to this defence both in the premises and in conclusion.

The judgment of the lower appellate Court is primarily founded on conjectures and suspicions and with the aid of counsel on both sides we endeavoured to extract any definite finding on the question as to whether the dower debt had been paid up before the execution of the deed of gift in question. The judgment at best can be interpreted to mean that it has not been proved that the wife's dower subsisted as a debt on the date of the execution of the deed of gift. But if there is no finding and indeed there is no evidence, which could have supported such a finding, had it been given that the dower debt had been satisfied the learned Subordinate Judge's surmises that it might have been paid up before because it was not shown to have been subsisting on the date of the gift is of no consequence whatsoever. The facts which are not disputed are that the plaintiff is the married wife of Abdul Wahab and that a dower of at least Rs. 10,000 was fixed either at the marriage or at a subsequent period by the husband. The evidence furnished by the recitals in the deed of gift, which deed was proved by formal evidence as against the respondent, though not conclusive in its nature is certainly admissible It recites the fact of marriage, the fixing of dower at the figure of Rs 10,000 and it recites the further fact of the husband discharging his obligation in respect of the dower debt to the extent of Rs. 1,000 by making transfer of a portion of his immovable property. That the dower could be fixed at a period later than the celebration of the marriage is a proposition which cannot be disputed A Bench of this Court to which one of us was a party had occasion to consider this matter in case of Bashir Ahmad v Zobaida Khatun (1). On the authority of a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Kamarunissa Bibi v. Hussaini Bibi (2), it was held in that case that if no dower is fixed at the marriage it may be fixed later.

We must, therefore start with the initial fact that at least a sum of Rs 1,000 was the amount of dower fixed in favour of the wife by the husband. The liability to discharge this dower debt rests on the husband and will continue to rest till he satisfies it. There is no evidence on the record, indeed there was no positive case to that effect, that he had ever satisfied it at a date earlier than the date of the execution of the deed of gift. It follows that the dower debt to that extent was subsisting on the said date . By means of the transfer of a portion of his immovable property under the deed of gift in question, the husband discharges his liability for his dower debt. If there were nothing else the transaction of gift must be upheld in favour of the wife but it is said that it cannot be so upheld because Abdul Wahab was heavily indebted on the date of execution of the deed of gift It is true and that is the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that Abdul Wahab was so indebted. That however, is no ground for refusing to give effect to the gift In those circumstances the provisions of S. 53, T. P. Act, 1882, are also not applicable. It is admitted that Abdul Wahab is still possessed of large immovable property The share of his annual profits from zemindari, according to the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, is about Rs. 2,000. Abdul Wahab's act of transferring a small portion of his immovable property to his wife in lieu of a portion of her dower debt in the circumstances of this case amounts to no more than paying one creditor in full and leaving others unpaid Such an act is not regard in law to be voidable at the instance of a creditor. We may here with advantage quote a passage from a decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Musahar Sahu v Hakim Lal (3):

"As a matter of law their Lordships take it to be clear that in a case in which no consideration of the law of bankruptcy or insolvency applies there is nothing to prevent a debtor paying one creditor in full and leaving others unpaid, although the result may be that the rest of his assets will be insufficient to provide for the payment of the rest of his debts."

The result is that the appeal is allowed the decree of the Courts below are discharged and the plaintiff's claim is decreed with costs in all the three Courts.

Mumtaz Ali — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 298 of 1928, Decided on 9th November 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, Sultanpur. D/- 23rd May 1928.

Trusts Act, S. 90 —Partition—Suit for—Person acquiring certain right by virtue of being in possession of entire property cannot resist coheirs' claim for partition.

Persons inheriting property as heirs from a common ancestor are deemed as cosharers and possession of one is deemed to be the possession of the other. If one of them while in possession of the entire property derives an advantage, namely, tenancy and under-proprietary rights in respect of some plots by virtue of being in such possession, he cannot appropriate that advantage exclusively for himself but must be deemed to have derived it both for himself and his cosharer. He, therefore, cannot resist a coheir's claim for partition in respect of the plots.

M. Wasim—for Appellant.

Naimullah—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal out of a suit for partition. The parties to the suit are brothers, sons of one Sheikh Amjad Ali, resident of village Nandaura, district Sultanpur. The plaintiff-appellant filed a suit for partition in respect of the property which had been inherited by them either from their father Amjad Ali or from their grand-uncle Ramzan Ali. The dispute in this appeal relates to certain plots of land situate in village Nandaura which have been proved to have been in possession of the aforesaid Ramzan Ali, who died in 1890 and after whose death the parties to the suit inherited it These plots of land are Nos 161 old 196 new, old 187/1/new 219, old 187/2/new 221, old 188/new 222, old 265/new 318, old 315/new 390, old 316/new 391, old 334/new 408 old 466/new 555, and old 541/new 657, which were recorded at the time of the regular settlement in the possession of Ramzan Ali himself free of rent and certain other numbers, which were old 163/new 198, old 183/new 216 and old 510/1/new 618, which were recorded in the cultivation of tenants but had subsequently come into the possession of Ramzan Ali. There were certain other numbers, namely, old 325/new 350, old 318/new 393, old 321/2/new, 396, old 322/new 396, old 324/new 399 and old 321/1/new 401 which were recorded as parti. In 1915 the taluqdar of Kurwar, who is the owner of the village in which these plots of land are situate, instituted in the rent Court a suit for resumption in respect of these plots. The suit was filed against the defendant-respondent Mumtaz Ali who then happened to be in possession of all these plots of land. On 17th September 1915 a compromise was arrived at between the parties to this case under which tenancy rights were decreed in respect of three plots of land namely 198 (recent) 216 (recent) and 618 (recent) subject to the payment of an annual rent of Re. 1-4-0 and under-proprietary rights in respect of 196, 219, 221, 222, 318, 350, 390, 391, 393, 396, 397, 399, 400, 408, 555 and 657 on the payment of under-proprietary rent of Rs. 17-0-3. All the plots of land are now admittedly in possession of the defendant-respondent, and the plaintiff-appellant claimed a half share in them.

The learned Munsif of Musafirkhana at Sultanpur who tried the suit held that the property was joint property of the parties and by his decree dated 6th February 1928 decreed the plaintiff's suit for partition of a half share in respect of these plots

On appeal, however, a different view was taken by the learned Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur, who by his decree dated 23rd May 1928, had dismissed the plaintiff's suit

On appeal it is contended before me that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong and that the plaintiff is entitled to a half share in the plots in suit. After hearing the parties I have come to the conclusion that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is erroneous and cannot be upheld. I will now proceed to give my reasons for arriving at this conclusion

It has not been contested before me that all these plots of land were in the possession of Ramzan Ali. Indeed this was admitted by the defendant-appellant in the resumption case (vide Ex. 2). It is also admitted before me that these plots of land came into the possession of the defendant-respondent as heir of Ramzan Ali It, therefore, appears to me that if any right had been obtained by the defendant-respondent in respect of these plots of land by virtue of a compromise with the taluqdar, such rights must be ascribed to the rights of Ramzan Ali whose heir he happens to be If such be the position, as it must be, the benefit derived by Mumtaz Ali must be considered as benefit derived by him not for his exclusive advantage but for all the heirs of Ramzan Ali. When after his death the defendant-respondent came into possession of these plots of land, his possession must be considered not only on his own behalf but on behalf of all the heirs of Ramzan Ali. It is not necessary to cite authorities in support of the proposition since it has not been contested before me that both the plaintiff and the defendant being the heirs of Ramzan Ali will be deemed as cosharers and the possession of one will be deemed to be the possession of the other Under these circumstances if the defendant-respondent while in possession of the entire property derived any advantage by virtue of being in such possession, he could not appropriate that advantage exclusively for himself, but must be deemed in law to have derived it both for himself and his cosharer. In this view of the case the defendant cannot now resist the plaintiffs' claim for partition in respect of these plots.

I, therefore, set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and restore the decree of the learned Munsif. The plaintiff's suit will stand decreed with costs in all the three Courts.

Second Rent Appeal No. 65 of 1928, Decided on 13th February 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, Rae Bareli, D/- 2nd August 1928.

(a) Oudh Rent Act (1886), Ss. 108 and 127—Transfer of occupancy rights—Only right to trees planted passes—Transferee does not acquire grove right and is liable to be ejected when trees cease to exist.

An occupancy tenant who had planted trees conveyed his rights. The trees ceased to exist but the transferee raised the plea in a suit under S. 127 that he was a grove holder.

Held: that the sale conveyed only the right to trees and did not convey grove rights to the transferee. When the trees ceased to exist the landlord was entitled to treat the purchaser as trespasser and could sue him under S. 127. [P 524 C 1]

Under-Proprietary rights cannot be obtained by prescription unless they have been asserted against a landlord. [P 523 C 2]

Moti Lal Saxena—for Appellant.

H. D. Chandra—for Respondent

Judgment.—These two cases have been decided in Court below by a single judgment and the same procedure may be adopted in diposing of the second appeals. The plaintiff sued each of the defendants who are appellants for arrears of rent under S. 108, Cl. (2), Oudh Rent Act, and as a consequential relief prayed for ejectment under S. 127 of the same Act. The finding of the Courts below was that these persons were holding the land without any title and that they were liable to be treated as tenants under the terms of S. 127, Cl. (1), Oudh Rent Act. The finding was based on the evidence of the patwari and also a decision in each case by the Assistant Record Officer of the year 1925 from which it appears that the land is tenant's land and is held by the respective appellants without any assessment of rent In the first Court the defence set up was that each of these persons had obtained a title as an under-proprietor either by sale or by prescription. The sale was in the case of Altaf Ali of the year 1897 and in the case of Bhagirathi of 1908. It appears that in each case the sale was by an occupancy tenant and the rights which were transferred were qubzedari of occupancy rights. They were not under proprietary rights and under proprietary rights cannot be obtained by prescription unless they have been asserted against a landlord. Neither of these parties ever asserted under-proprietary rights against the landlord. After the evidence had been finished in the first Court one of these appellants Altaf Ali raised the plea that he was a grove-holder. The Court refused to entertain the plea, but it was argued in the Court of the learned District Judge in appeal. That being so I have heard the argument on behalf of Altaf Ali but I can see no ground whatever for hearing any such argument on behalf of Bhagirathi who never raised the plea at all until he came up in appeal

As far as Altaf Ali is concerned I am satsified with the decision of the Court below. The land is occupancy land and under the old law a tenant could plant trees without permission on his occupancy land and could sell those trees. He could not sell the land and he could not sell the occupancy rights. Consequently the sale deeds on which the appellants rely were sales of the trees only and these sales did not carry with them the rights of grove-holders. The trees no longer exist and the position of the appellants now is as found by the Court below, that of trespassers on agricultural land and as such they may be dealt with under S. 127, Oudh Rent Act In my opinion there is no force in these appeals and they are both dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 112 of 1929, Decided on 23rd September 1929, from decree of Addl Sub-Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 18th December 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100—Finding of fact not vitiated by error of law or procedure is conclusive.

(b) Landlord and Tenant — Proprietary right—Proprietor has no right of re-entry on under-proprietary land even though it is in possession of trespasser—He is entitled to rent only.

To entitle a superior proprietor to bring an action for recovery of possession of land he must have a right of entry either legal or equitable. A superior proprietor has no right of re-entry on the under-proprietary tenure. He cannot bring a suit for ejectment even though persons in possession are trespassers. The fact that the under-proprietors have no title is no ground for holding that the proprietor has a right of re-entry. He must succeed on his own title and not on the weakness of the defendants. The proprietor's only right is to receive rent and no more. This right of his is not in any way affected by the change in possession. But because trespassers have come into possession, the original under-proprietary tenure is not affected in any manner in relation to the proprietor. That tenure carries with it both transferability and hereditability, the two essential elements of ownership which vests in original under-proprietors . 35 All. 273 (P.C.), Rel. on; 10 Cal. 1076, Dist. [P 525 C 1, 2]

Ali Zaheer and Mohd. Ayub — for Appellants.

A. P. Sen and Hyder Husain — for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This is the defendant's appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad dated 18th December 1928 substantially affirming in its entirety the decree of the Munsif of Akbarpur, dated 31st March 1928.

In the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiff asked for the relief of possession in respect of a large number of plots of land situate in the village of Ajmeri Badshahpur in the district of Fyzabad. The plaintiff's case is that the lands in suit fall within the boundary of his village mentioned above and that he is the proprietor of the village and therefore also of those lands. The defendants are under-proprietors of an adjoining village of Rampur Benipur and their case is that the lands in suit form part of their under-proprietary tenure in the village of Rampur Benipur. On those pleadings the issue which arose for decision was as to whether the lands in suit form part of the plaintiff's village or they are included in the defendants' village The Courts below have decided, with reference to the documentary evidence on the record, that the lands in suit appertain to the plaintiff's village of Ajmeri Badshahpur

At the hearing of the appeal before us some attempt was made to reopen the finding arrived at by the Courts below in favour of the plaintiff's case as stated above but it was soon discovered that the attempt must prove futile. We hold that the finding is conclusive in second appeal as not being vitiated by any error of law or procedure.

The second point taken in support of the appeal is that the plaintiff being the proprietor of the village and not entitled to actual possession of some of the lands in suit which were held by third parties in the right of under-proprietary tenure, was not entitled to a decree in ejectment against the defendants though they were trespassers without any title. Before deciding this question of law it is necessary to clear the ground in relation to the facts. The total area of the lands in suit as given in the plaint is 29 bighas 9 biswas 4 biswansis. This area is covered by a large number of plots the details of which are given in the list attached to the plaint In this list each plot is described by its number and area. There are twenty plots. The first ten are as follows: 1167, 1168, 1169, 1206/1, 1370, 1377, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1382.

It has been found by the Court of first instance, and the finding was not reversed in the lower appellate Court that these plots are held by persons, who are not parties to this suit, in under-proprietary right and it has further been held that the defendants are in actual possession of these plots of land without any title. This finding has been accepted before us in so far as the question now being decided is concerned.

On the facts stated above we are of opinion that the argument advanced on behalf of the plaintiff in respect of the ten plots above mentioned must be accepted The relief which the plaintiff prayed for and which the Courts below have granted to him in respect of these plots is the same as the relief prayed for in the matter of the other plots. Indeed there is no distinction made in the relief in respect of any plot of land The relief is for a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff against the defendants. The purpose of the relief is quite clear and it is this, that the plaintiff wants the aid of the Court for ejecting the defendants from the possession of the ten plots of land mentioned above, and also for the plaintiff being put into possession thereof in place of the defendants. This obviously is a relief of re-entry on the under-proprietary lands. It is unquestionably true that the plaintiff in the character of a superior proprietor has no right of re-entry on the under-proprietary tenure, It follows that he cannot bring a suit against the defendant for ejectment. The defendants are trespassers according to the finding of the lower Court but the fact that they have no title is no ground for holding that the plaintiff has a title of re-entry. The plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title and not on the weakness of the defendants. This principle of law is as old as the hills. If it is necessary to refer to any authority in this connexion we may point to a recent decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Basant Singh v. Mahabir Prasad (1):

"To entitle a plaintiff to bring an action for the recovery of possession of land he must have a right of entry either legal or equitable. A right of entry means a right to enter and take actual possession of lands tenements, or hereditaments, as incident to some estate or interest therein". (The Law of Ejectment by H. J. Witliams and W. B. Yates. second edition page 1).

(1) [1913] 35 All. 273=19 I. C. 310=10 I. A. 86 (P.C.)

The proprietor, as the plaintiff is, has the right to claim rent in respect of these under-proprietary plots of land. That right of his is not in any manner affected by the change in possession. But because trespassers have come into possession, the original under-proprietary tenure is not in any manner affected in relation to the plaintiff. That tenure carries with it both transferability and hereditability the two essential elements of ownership. The ownership of these plots therefore also vests in the original under-proprietors and not in the plaintiff whose only right is to receive rent and no more. The learned counsel for the plaintiff placed before us a decision of the High Court of Calcutta in Bissessuri Dabeea v. Baroda Kanta (2). and asked us to interpret it to mean that in a case of this nature a decree in ejectment could be passed in favour of the superior proprietor. We are unable to interpret the judgment in that case in the sense contended for. In the first place we are not informed of the nature of the tenure in respect of which the plaintiff was decreed possession "as before" and in the second place the relief for actual possession was distinctly held in that case not to be open to the plaintiff. The decree for possession "as before" was therefore merely a declaration of plaintiff's title in respect of the lands in dispute in that case. We would have been prepared to grant this relief to the plaintiff in the present case as well but we refrain from doing so for two reasons. firstly, such a decree may have the effect of creating a relationship of proprietor and under-proprietor between the parties to this suit which is not certainly desirable to do in the absence of the original under-proprietors and in face of the finding that the defendants are trespassers and, secondly, at no stage of the proceedings has the plaintiff's title as proprietor been disputed. Even in the issue relating to the boundary, the defendants did not claim more than the status of under-proprietors.

We accordingly allow the appeal and modify the decree of the Court below in respect of the ten plots previously mentioned in this judgment and dismiss the plaintiff's suit as regards those plots The rest of the decree of the lower appellate Court is maintained As the result of our judgment is half in favour of the plaintiffs and half in favour of the defendants, we think that the proper order as to costs whould be that the parties should bear their own costs throughout and we accordingly make that order.

Criminal Ref. No. 46 of 1929, Decided on 3rd October 1929, reported by Deputy Commissioner, Partabgarh.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 145 (4)—Object of S. 145 is retention of possession to avoid breach of peace—It has no reference to title.

The provisions of S 145 are directed to enable a Magistrate to pass orders as to retention of possession with the object of preventing a breach of the peace. These orders have no effect as to title, but a special exception is made in favour of persons who have been very recently dispossessed. [P 526 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C, S. 145 (4) — "Two months" are to be calculated from date of order.

"Two months" from the date of the order mean two months from the date of the order and not two months from the date of the complaint : A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 198, Diss. from. [P 526 C 2]

M. H. Kidwai—for the Crown

Radha Krishna—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The question which has been referred to this Court is this :

Baijnath was on the facts dispossessed from possession of a house on 28th March 1929 The Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed his preliminary order under S. 145 (1), Criminal P. C., on 10th June 1929. At that time Baijnath had been out of possession for more than two months. It is accordingly suggested by the District Magistrate of Partabgarh, who has referred the case, that the order restoring Baijnath to possession is not justified by law The normal procedure is to declare in possession and to retain in possession the person who is in actual possession on the date of the preliminary order. But this rule is relaxed to the following extent. Where it is found that a man has been dispossessed within two months or less of the date of the preliminary order he is treated, as though he were in possession on the date of the preliminary order. But the period is two months and no more. The learned counsel who appears against the reference relies upon a judgment of Devadoss, J., sitting singly reported in R. Srinivasa Reddy v. M. Dasaratha Rama Reddy (1), where the learned Judge decided that the period of two months should be taken from the date of the application made to the Magistrate and not from the date of the Magistrate's order. The learned Judgs says that :

"Though the words of the proviso are capable of the interpretation, that the dispossession must be within two months of the preliminary order, yet the intent and object of the section must be taken into consideration before such an interpretation is put upon it."

With all due respect to the learned Judge I am unable to agree with him. Where the section says "two months" I am unable to find that the period can be extended, whatever view may be taken of the intent and object of the section. As far as I understand, the provisions of S 145 are directed in the first place to enable a Magistrate to pass orders as to retention of possession with the object of preventing a breach of the peace. These orders have no effect as to title The law considers that it is desirable in order to prevent a breach of the peace to retain in possession the person who is in possession whatever his title may be but a special exception is made in favour of persons who have been very recently dispossessed. This exception may have been made on the view that person recently ejected might endeavour to take forcible possession again. But whatever the reason may have been the law lays down as the period, the period of two months from the order. If the law meant to lay down a period of two months from the complaint it should have said so. It does not say so. I cannot see that any case arises of balancing the advantages of liberal interpretation against the advantages of a literal interpretation. To my mind the words two months from the date of the order mean two months from the date of the order and not two months from the date of the complaint In these circumstances agreeing with the learned District Magistrate I set aside the order.

Mahomedan Law—Divorced wife is entitled to maintenance during period of Iddat.

A who was married to B applied under S. 488, Criminal P. C, for maintenance. B proceeded to divorce her before Court. The question arose as to whether A could be granted maintenance and for what period.

Judgment — The question for decision in this case is as follows :

The applicant Mt Mariam was married to Kadir Bakhsh She applied under S. 488, Criminal P. C. for maintenance. Kadir Bakhsh proceeded to divorce her before the Court The question is whether she can in these circumstances be granted maintenance against him, and if so for what period and at what rate ? I have no doubt as to the fact that she can obtain maintenance against him during the period of Iddat. The question was discussed at length by the late Mahmood, J. in the matter of the petition of Din Muhammad (1) and again before a Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad in Shah Abu Ilyas v Ulfat Bibi (2) The decision in Emperor v. Jadu (3) does not determine the question as to whether maintenance is payable for a period of Iddat. In any circumstances it is not a decision which is binding on me I consider the Allahabad view correct. Thus Mt. Mariam is entitled to maintenance during the period of Iddat and not after that period has expired She is thus entitled to a maintenance for three months. I fix the rate of maintenance at Rs. 10 per month.

Criminal Ref. No 3. of 1929, Decided on 17th October 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Bahraich.

Criminal P. C., S. 339 (3) — No sanction can be given in absence of certificate by Public Prosecutor that condition of tender has not been complied with.

No sanction under S. 339 (3), can be given unless the Public Prosecutor certifies that in his opinion the person who has accepted such tender has, either by wilfully concealing anything essential or by giving false evidence, not complied with the condition on which the tender was made. In absence of such certificate no sanction can be granted. [P 527 C 2]

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment — The learned Sessions Judge has found that Ghasitey a person to whom a pardon was tendered under the provisions of S 337, Criminal P C., had given a false account of the dacoity, participation in which he had admitted, and had given false evidence. He has accordingly forwarded the record to this Court with an application that this Court should give sanction under the provisions of S. 339 (3) for the prosecution of Ghasitey on a charge of having given false evidence. The learned counsel for the Crown has represented that no such sanction can be given unless the Public Prosecutor certifies that in his opinion the person who has accepted such tender has, either by wilfully concealing anything essential or by giving false evidence, not complied with the condition on which the tender was made and that there is no certificate from the Public Prosecutor This objection must prevail In the absence of this certificate no prosecution can be sanctioned. I accordingly reject the application and direct that the record be returned.

Second Appeal No 396 of 1928, Decided on 2nd August 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, Rai Bareli, D/- 9th August 1928.

Decree — Construction — Construction of decree in suit relating to portion of same land should be followed in suit relating to other.

A's (defendant's) predecessor-in-interest obtained a settlement decree against the predecessors-in-interest of B (plaintiff). The lands which were subject matter of the decree were subsequently divided into two portions in a village partition. In a suit against A with regard to one portion of the land which was not in the possession of the plaintiff, the construction of the settlement decree was the matter in dispute and the decree was interpreted in a certain manner.

Held: that in another suit against A with regard to the other portion, the settlement decree should be construed in the same way as it was construed in the previous litigation. The fact that the plaintiffs in the latter suit were different from plaintiffs in the previous suit could make no difference when the points in issue are common to both the cases. The judgment deciding that previous suit should be followed where the Court does not think it necessary to reconsider it. [P 529 C 1]

Akhtar Husain—for Appellant.

Hyder Hussain—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Rae Bareli, dated 9th August 1929, affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the same place dated 4th February 1927.

The necessary facts of the case are these The defendant-appellant's predecessor-in-interest, Wajid Hussain, obtained a decree from the settlement Court of the District of Rae Bareli, on 3rd April 1869 in respect of 19 bighas odd lands situate in village Zer Masjid in that town of Jais as against the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs-respondents. The nature of the rights conferred by the decree is a question in the case On behalf of the plaintiffs it is contended that Wajid Husain under the terms of that decree did not obtain any title of an under-proprietor in the lands mentioned above and the object of the suit, out of which the appeal arises is to obtain a declaration to that effect in respect of a portion of those lands. The defendant's contention, on the other hand is that the decree of 3rd April 1869 conferred an under-proprietary tenure on Wajid Husain in the lands to which the decree relates.

In recent years the lands which were the subject matter of the settlement Court decree came to be divided into two portions on account of a partition of the village A portion fell into mahal Manjha Bibi and the rest in mahal Sayra Bibi.

The portion which fell in the former mahal is the subject matter of the present litigation While in respect of the portion which fell in the second mahal a previous litigation between the present defendant and the owners of that mahal was concluded by a decision of a Bench of this Court in Shujaat Haider v. Ali Akhar (1).

We have already stated the nature of the controversy between the parties in respect of the title which Wajid Husain obtained under the decree of the settlement Court as regards the lands in suit. On the side of the defendant a further plea is raised as it was raised in the previous litigation that whatever might be the construction of the decree of 3rd April 1869 he and his predecessors have held the lands in suit continuously for a period of over 12 years in the assertion of an under-proprietary title recognized by the plaintiffs and their predecessors and in judicial proceedings by the revenue Courts and thus they have acquired that title by prescription.

The Courts below have rejected the defence both as to the interpretation of the decree and the acquisition of title by prescription and have granted a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs that the land in suit is not held by the defendant in the right of a proprietor or an under-proprietor Against this decree of the Courts below the present appeal is preferred.

We have heard arguments at great length in this case. The judgment of this Court dated 22nd December 1926 delivered in the previous litigation, to which reference has already been made, covers both the points urged on behalf of the defendant in support of the present appeal As already stated, those two points are: (1) the construction of the settlement Court decree of 3rd April 1869 and (2) the plea of prescriptive title.

It will be realized from what we have stated above that the land now in suit is only a portion of the lands to which the settlement Court decree related and that the other portion was the subject matter of the previous litigation. This being so, the same decree was under construction in that case but the portion now in dispute having been allotted under the village partition to a different mahal the plaintiffs in the present case are nominally different from the plaintiffs of the previous case. This, however, can make no difference in the substance as the points in issue are common to both the cases. In the circumstances we are of opinion that the judgment of this Court dated 22nd December 1926 should be followed in the present case and this appeal should be decided in accordance with the same judgment.

It was strenuously argued and we desire to add, ably argued, by Mr. Akhtar Husain, advocate for the defendants-appellants, that the evidence adduced in this case in support of the plea of the prescriptive title is more in volume and stronger in nature than the evidence adduced in the previous case and that in the previous judgment the proper import of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pirthipal Singh v. Ganesh Din Singh (1) and Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan v Mohan Singh (2) was not fully appreciated by the learned Judges who decided the previous case. We do not, however, think that this is a fit case in which we should reconsider the previous judgment and accordingly we direct that a copy of that judgment shall be incorporated in our judgment in the present appeal.

We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—The question in this appeal is whether the plaintiff can be allowed to go back to the debts which were incurred in the year 1923 and extend the period of limitation by using an acknowledgment in writing made in 1925 or whether he must be held to have sued on a mere acknowledgment which was made on 8th January 1925. As we read the plaint he distinctly sued on the acknowlegment of 8th January 1925 and did not sue on the basis of older debts In these circumstances the suit appears to us to be a suit on a mere acknowledgment. There was no new contract, no new obligation was created and in these circumstances the suit could not succeed. The view which we take is similar to the view taken by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Ganga Prasad v Ram Dayal (1). In consequence this appeal must succeed and the suit must be dismissed We order accordingly. The plaintiff will pay his own costs and those of the appellant in all Courts.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 111—Contract of tenancy—Non-compliance of any term does not ipso facto operate as cancellation of contract unless right of re-entry or power to cancel lease is reserved

Where the order passed by the manager of an estate amounts to a contract of tenancy, the non-compliance of certain conditions of the contract would not amount to cancellation of the contract ipso facto. The party suffering from the non-compliance of any term of the contract will have a right to seek remedy in law but that cannot operate as cancellation of the contract. It would not be open to the estate to exercise the right of re-entry unless condition as to right of re-entry or power to cancel the lease is embodied in the order passed S. C. No. 240, 15 O. C. 91 and 1 O. L. J. 273, Ref. [P 532 C 2, P 533 C 1]

(b) Landlord and Tenant—Tenancy—Fact that person in possession pays rent and it is accepted supports creation of tenancy.

Where the tenant admittedly remains in possession of the land in dispute in a certain year and pays rent for that year which is accepted by the landlord, it is clear that the tenant was admitted into tenancy with regard to the land in possession [P 533 C 2]

(c) Transfer of Property Act, S. 117 — Lease of land used for growing grass is for agricultural purposes and need not be in writing, nor does it require registration—Oudh Rent Act, S. 156.

When the land let is used for growing grass which is subsequently sold, the lease of such land is for agricultural purposes and so is not required to be in writing. Nor is such lease required to be registered by reason of S. 156, Oudh Rent Act: 10 O. C 188 and 2 U. D. 510, Ref. [P 533 C 2]

It is settled rule of law in Oudh that a landlord must have recourse to the ordinary process of law if he wishes to eject a tenant or thekadar and if he does so forcibly the tenant or thekadar is entitled to recover possession of his holding on the ground of illegal ejectment. So another lessee of the same land cannot also recover possession of the land by treating the tenant as trespasser S. D. No. 9 of 1925, S. D. No. 33 of 1891 and 3 *U. (e) Oudh Rent Act (1921), S. A-52 — Omission to make S. A-52 expressly applicable to thekadars does not establish intention of legislature to justify ejectment of thekadar without having recourse to law.

Though S. A-52 has not been made expressly applicable to the case of a thekadar by reason of its not being mentioned in S. 3 (10) as one of the sections in which the expression "tenant" is to be held to include a thekadar, the omission does not establish that the intention of the legislature was to justify the ejectment of a thekadar without having recourse to law. A thekadar holding on after expiry of his term is entitled to a notice of ejectment as any other tenant included in S. 53 (1): S. D. No. 33 of 1891 and 3 U. D. 149, Rel. on. [P 534 C 2]

Misra, J.—This is an appeal arising out of a suit for possession and damages brought by a thekadar in respect of a plot of land situate in village Munimpur, District Bahraich, which is owned by the Nanpara Estate. The suit was decreed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Bahraich by his decree, dated 24th April 1928, but has been dismissed in appeal by the decree of the learned District Judge of Gonda, dated 1st August 1928.

The facts of the case are that village Munimpur had been leased out by Nanpara Estate to one Abdul Aziz Khan for the years 1330 to 1332 Fasli. The said thekadar gave a sub-lease (kitkina) of plot 180 situate in the same village to the defendant-respondent Beni Madho. It is a large plot measuring 88 30 acres, and is called "rakhauna" which means that grass grows on the said land and is preserved and subsequently sold. The sub-lease was on payment of an annual rent of Rs. 400. On expiry of the theka of Abdul Aziz Khan the defendant-respondent applied for a lease of this plot of land directly to the Nanpara Estate and succeeded in obtaining a lease for five years in respect of the said land on payment of the same sum of Rs. 400 The period for which he obtained the lease was 1333 to 1337 Fasli. The Nanpara Estate imposed two conditions: they being to the effect that the respondent was to pay one year's rent in advance as security which was to be set off against the rent of the last year, i.e., 1337 Fasli, and that he should also pay the rent for 1333 Fasli in advance. The defendant-respondent was also ordered to execute an agreement to that effect.

It appears that the defendant-respondent did not deposit a year's rent in advance as security, but only offered his immovable property consisting of groves, etc., as security for the said payment. It, however, appears that he continued to remain in possession and also rent was paid by him for the year 1333 Fasli on 22nd April 1926. The plaintiff-appellant Ambika Prasad applied to the Nanpara Estate for a lease of the village Munimpur and his application was accepted, a lease having been given to him for the years 1334 to 1338 Fasli. The order granting the lease was passed on 13th September 1926, and on the same date a registered lease was executed in his favour. It appears that the lease granted to the plaintiff-appellant makes certain exemptions, but it is admitted by the parties now that the lease in his favour includes the land in suit. After the lease had been executed by the Nanpara Estate in favour of the plaintiff-appellant, he did not succeed in getting possession of the land in suit. The matter went to the criminal Court under S. 145, Criminal P. C., and the possession of the defendant-respondent was maintained from the said Court by an order dated 1st March 1927 The plaintiff-appellant has now brought the present suit for possession of the land together with damages. His case is to the effect that his lease covers the land in suit and the defendant is not entitled to remain in possession of the said land since his lease has been cancelled by an order of the Nanpara Estate passed on 11th September 1926.

The defendant-respondent denied the lease in favour of the plaintiff and also that it included the land in suit. He contended that he was a tenant of the plot in suit having been admitted to the tenancy by an order of the Nanpara Estate, dated 17th March 1926, and that rent for the year 1333 Fasli had been paid by him and accepted by the Estate. He urged that his lease could not be legally cancelled by the Nanpara Estate and it was not open to that Estate to grant to the plaintiff-appellant a lease in respect of the same land, without his being duly ejected from the land through the revenue Courts. He also alleged that it was not open to the plaintiff-appellant to claim possession of the land in suit from the civil Courts Lastly he denied the plaintiff's claim for damages.

In replication it was urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that no lease having been executed in favour of the respondent by the Nanpara Estate, he could not be deemed to be either a tenant or a lessee of the land in suit, and could not, therefore, resist the claim of the plaintiff appellant, who was a thekadar holding under a registered lease It was also urged that the defendant's lease had been validly cancelled by the Nanpara Estate by an order dated 11th September 1926, and in the face of that order the defendant could not resist the plaintiff's claim. The plea with regard to the jurisdiction was also denied.

It would thus appear that the main points for trial in the case were :

(1) Whether any lease had been executed in favour of the plaintiff-appellant, and, if so, whether it included the land in suit ?

(2) Whether the defendant was a tenant of the plot in suit and could the alleged tenancy be created in his favour without a registered lease ?

(3) Whether the defendants' lease had been validly cancelled by the Nanpara Estate ?

(4) Whether the suit was cognizable by the civil Court ?

(5) Whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages and, if so, to what extent?

The learned Subordinate Judge of Bahraich who tried the suit came to the finding that the lease in favour of the plaintiff had been proved and that it was also established that it included the land in suit. Regarding defendant's tenancy he was of opinion that it could not be recognized in the eyes of law since a registered deed was necessary for the creation of it. He further found that the defendant's lease had been cancelled owing to his own default in not having paid the security money as mentioned in the order granting the lease to him and that the action of the Nanpara Estate in doing so was perfectly valid. As to the question of jurisdiction he decided that the suit was maintainable in the civil Court, and on the question of damages he held that the plaintiff was entitled to Rs. 1,250 on this account. The result was that he decreed the plaintiff's suit for possession of the plot in suit and also awarded him damages to the extent of Rs. 1,250

The defendant took the matter further in appeal and the learned District Judge of Gonda decided the case in his favour. He held that the lease executed in favour of the plaintiff was fully established and that it included the plot in suit. Indeed the finding of the Subordinate Judge on this point was not challenged before him He, however, held that the defendant was a lessee on behalf of the Nanpara Estate by virtue of the order passed by the manager of that Estate on 17th March 1926 and it was not necessary in law that any registered lease should have been executed. He found that the defendant had continued his possession ever since 1330 Fasli and had also remained in possession in the year 1333 Fasli on behalf of the Estate. He was also of opinion that the alleged cancellation of the lease in favour of the defendant was not valid and it was not open to the said Estate to grant a lease in respect of the land in suit to the plaintiff. He was also of opinion that if the plaintiff wanted to recover possession of the plot in suit it was open to him to do so by instituting a suit to that effect in the revenue Courts. In this view of the case he accepted the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has now come up to this Court in second appeal. It has been contended on his behalf that the tenancy in favour of the defendant-respondent has not been established, rather it cannot be recognized since no registered lease had been executed in his favour. It was argued that the tenancy, even if it could be recognized, had been cancelled by the order of the manager of the Nanpara Estate, dated 11th September 1926, and under the circumstances the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to the possession of the land in suit, since it was admitted that it was included in his theka As to the question of jurisdiction it was argued that the suit being between two rival tenants was properly brought in the civil Court. We have now, therefore, to decide three points in this appeal, firstly, whether the tenancy of the defendant-respondent is established and whether it can be recognized without any registered lease having been executed in his favour, secondly, whether the lease in favour of the defendant-respondent was validly cancelled by the Nanpara Estate and, even if it was, whether it was open to the Nanpara Estate to grant a lease of the same land to the plaintiff-appellant without having taken any steps to eject the defendant-respondent from the said land in due course of law ; and thirdly, whether the present suit is maintainable in the civil Court. The case was argued before us at great length and we have taken time to consider our judgment.

My opinion on each of these points is given below :

First point.—As to the question of the tenancy I am of opinion that the two facts on the record clearly establish that the defendant was admitted into tenancy. The first is the order passed by the manager of the Nanpara Estate dated 17th March 1926. It is Ex. 13. The order of the manager runs as follows :

"This case came up today. The theka is sanctioned for five years from 1333 Fasli to 1337 Fasli on an annual rent of Rs. 400. The purchaser shall have to deposit full one year's rent by way of advance money, which will be allowed as set-off against the rent of the last year 1337 Fasli. The amount for 1333 Fasli shall also be deposited at this very time. The rent for the remaining years shall be realized at the fixed time. It is, therefore, ordered that the officers concerned be informed and the deed of agreement be completed."

It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the theka must be deemed to have been cancelled, because the defendant respondent did not deposit a year's rent in advance, nor did he deposit the rent for the year 1333 Fasli in time. I am not prepared to accept this contention. It appears to me that this order amounts to a contract of tenancy, which was entered into between the Nanpara Estate and the defendant-respondent. If certain conditions of that contract were not carried out by a party to the contract, that would not amount to a cancellation of the contract ipso facto. The party suffering from the non-compliance of any term of the contract will have a right to seek remedy in law, but that cannot operate as cancellation of the contract. It was open to the Nanpara Estate to sue the defendant-respondent at once for the sum of Rs. 400 which he had been asked to deposit as security and also to claim the rent for 1333 Fasli, if it was not deposited in time. But if it did not do so it was not open to it to treat the contract as cancelled. As to the payment of the rent for 1333 Fasli it appears to me from the record that it was deposited by the defendant-respondent on 22nd April 1926, within the pear 1333 Fasli and was accepted by the estate. The effect of this was that the condition as to the payment of rent for 1333 Fasli in advance was waived by the Nanpara Estate. As to the deposit of Rs. 400 in advance as security it appears from the record that the defendant-respondent represented to the estate that he had no cash money to offer but could only give his immovable property consisting of groves, etc., in security. No definite order was passed by the estate in the presence of the defendant-respondent refusing to accept his offer. It appears that in the meantime the plaintiff-appellant approached the estate for a theka of the village Munimpur including the land in dispute The estate appears to have entertained his proposal with favour On 11th September 1926, we find the zilladar of the estate sending a report to the manager to the effect that the defendant-respondent had not deposited the security amount in cash as he was required to do, nor had he executed the deed of agreement and that his theka ought to be cancelled (vide Ex. 7). The manager passed an order upon this report the same day. It is to the following effect

"This file came up to-day. A lease in respect of village Rikhauna in Munimpur for five years from 1333 to 1337 Fasli on an annual rent of Rs. 400 was given to Beni Madho on a condition that the lessee should deposit Rs. 400 as peshgi money which would be allowed as a set off against rent for the last year, and that he should execute a deed of agreement, but he did not deposit the advance money nor did he execute the deed of agreement upto this time. He only deposited Rs. 400 the rent due for 1333 Fasli. It was, therefore, ordered that the lease be cancelled and the file be consigned to the records."

This order shows distinctly that the manager himself understood that a lease for five years had been given to Beni Madho, the defendant-respondent, and that he was justified in cancelling the lease because he had failed to deposit the security and had not executed the deed of agreement. It is to my mind very doubtful, as stated above, whether in the absence of a condition to that effect embodied in the order dated 17th March 1926, which created the tenancy in favour of the defendant-respondent, it was open to the manager of the Nanpara Estate to cancel the lease. No condition as to right of re-entry or power to cancel the lease was embodied in the said order. Under those circumstances it would not be open to the estate to exercise the right of re-entry I am fortified in this opinion by several decisions of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh as well as of the Board of Revenue : vide Lal Bahadur v. Mohammad Karim Khan (1). I would also mention Ali Muhammad Khan v Chheddan (2) and Bhikhari v. Manager, Court of Wards (3) which deal with this point.

The second fact which supports the creation of the tenancy is that the defendant-respondent admittedly remained in possession of the land in dispute in the year 1333 Fasli, and paid rent for that year which was accepted by the estate. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion that the defendant-respondent was admitted into the tenancy in regard to the land in dispute

It was, however, contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the tenancy in favour of the defendant-respondent could not be recognized because no registered lease had been executed in his favour. Regarding this matter I am of opinion that the learned District Judge has taken the correct view. Under S. 117, T P. Act 4 of 1882, the leases for agricultural purposes are not required to be in writing and under S. 156, Oudh Rent Act, it is provided that notwithstanding anything contained in the Registration Act of 1908 pattas granted for any term not exceeding 10 years by landlords to statutory tenants shall be deemed good and valid without their being registered. There can be no doubt that the lease granted to the defendant-respondent was for an agricultural purpose within the meaning of S. 117, T. P. Act. The word "land" is defined in S. 3, Cl. (3), Oudh Rent Act, as follows : "Land" includes the ungathered produce of land whether spontaneous or not and whether growing in earth or in water. It is clear that "khar" which is grass or straw and grows spontaneously on the land in suit and it would, therefore, fall within the definition quoted above. This view is supported by a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported as Thakur Din v. Hulas (4). The same view has been taken by the Board of Revenue in an unreported decision Babu Jitan Singh v. Harbans Singh (5). The lease given by Nanpara Estate to the defendant-respondent did not, therefore, require any deed nor did it require registration. The lease could be created orally and the order dated 17th March 1925, quoted above is, in my opinion, quite sufficient to create a valid tenancy in favour of the defendant-respondent.

Second point.—As to the second point, I may state that apart from the view that it was not open to the Nanpara Estate to re-enter upon the holding in case a breach of the condition embodied in the lease happened it was also not open to the said estate to take the law in its own hands and to eject the defendant-respondent forcibly without having recourse to the proper method of ejectment prescribed under the rent law It is obvious that the plaintiff-appellant as a lessee of the land in the suit stands in the shoes of his lessor the Nanpara Estate and if it was not legally open it to take forcible possession of the land the plaintiff-appellant could not also recover possession of the land by treating the defendant-respondent as a trespasser. It is a settled rule of law in Oudh that a landlord must have recourse to the ordinary process of law if he wishes to eject a tenant or a thekadar and if he does so forcibly the tenant or the thekadar is entitled to recover possession of his holding on the ground of illegal ejectment ; vide Nisar Hussain v. Secy. of State (6) and Prithi Nath v. Sheo Sahai Singh (7) and Sansardin v. Kalka Prasad (8). The mere fact that the term of a thekadar expires or that there is a violation on his part of any term embodied in the lease would not entitle the landlord to resume possession without having recourse to the ordinary process of law. If that were not the rule many cases of hardship would result Indeed it would not be in the interest of public policy to countenance such an action on the part of the landlord.

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that a modification in this rule had been brought about by the Oudh Rent Act, Amendment Act (4 of 1921). The argument was to the effect that the said Amending Act had introduced a new section in the Oudh Rent Act 22 of 1886 which was marked as A-52 That section provides that no tenant shall be ejected otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this Act. It was pointed out that this section was not applicable to the case of thekadars since in S. 3, Cl 10, Oudh Rent Act, where the definition of "tenant" was to be found, the new section A-52 was not mentioned as one of the sections in which the expression "tenant" was to be held to include a thekadar There is no doubt that S. A-52 has not been made expressly applicable to the case of a thekadar as would appear from the definition of the word "tenant" as indicated above. The omission does not, however, establish that the intention of the legislature was to justify the ejectment of a thekadar without having recourse to law. I am fortified in this view of the case by the two decisions of the Board of Revenue already quoted above, namely, Prith Nath v. Sheo Sahai Singh (7) and Sansardin v. Kalka Prasad (8) In the former case it was observed by the members of the Board of Revenue that the policy of the legislature in making sections embodied in the Oudh Rent Act relating to the ejectment of tenants applicable to the case of thekadars was obviously to provide that they were to be brought within the jurisdiction of the revenue Courts by making it compulsory upon the landlord to issue a notice to the thekadar before the landlord assumes possession. In their opinion any other construction would affect the interests of those classes of tenants for whose protection the sections respecting ejectment were specially designed. In the latter case Sansardin v. Kalka Prasad (8) the Board ruled that if the term of a thekadar had expired the relation between the parties still remained that of a landlord and tenant and the landlord or his mortgagee (in our present case the lessee) is not justified in summarily dispossessing the thekadar who was not ejected by the ordinary method of issuing a notice and that if this was done he (thekadar) would be entitled to sue for recovery of possession. I am, therefore, of opinion that it was not open to the Nanpara Estate to grant effectively a lease of the land in dispute to the plaintiff-appellant without having previously taken proper steps in law to eject the defendant respondent.

Third point.—As to the third point which relates to the question of jurisdiction I may state that, in my opinion, the present case relates to a dispute between the two rival tenants and as such it is cognizable by the civil Court This question has now been settled authoritatively by a decision of a Bench of this Court to which one of us was a party and which will be found to be reported as Gayadin v. Lodhi (9) In that case

(6) S. D. No. 9 of 1925.
(7) S. D. No. 33 of 1891.
(8) 3 U. D. 149.

the rule laid down by the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in several cases decided by it was followed vide Raghubar Dayal v. Chandan (10); Chandrika Bakhsh Singh v. Raghunath Kunwar (11), Kalap Nath v. Mata Din (12).

The conclusion to which I have, therefore, arrived is that the tenancy in favour of the defendant-respondent having been created it was not open to the Nanpara Estate to cancel the lease on the ground of breach of one of the conditions provided in the lease. In any case even if it was open to cancel the lease it could only do so by taking proper steps to that effect in due course of law. No such steps having been taken it was not competent to the Nanpara Estate to grant a lease of the said land to the plaintiff-appellant and in case one was granted it is not open to the new lessee to treat the defendant-respondent as trespasser and to recover possession from him through the civil Court.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Pullan, J. — In my opinion this appeal must be decided on the finding in which I agree that the respondent was put in possession by the Nanpara Estate in virtue of a contract which was never legally cancelled. I must, however, add a few words in reply to the argument which was addressed to us on behalf of the appellant to the effect that a thekadar whose term has expired is not entitled to any notice under the Oudh Rent Act, and can be ejected without any legal procedure This view is based upon the fact that S. A-52, Oudh Rent Act, does not apply to a thekadar. It is significant that this section has been added to the Oudh Rent Act in order to bring it into conformity with the Agra Tenancy Act In the Agra Tenancy Act the section enacting that no tenant shall be ejected otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act applies to thekadars. There is some meaning in the exclusion of thekadars from this section in Oudh and it is to be seen in the fact that S. 4, Cl. 1, also does not apply to thekadars. This section prohibits any contract being made between landlord and tenant to eject a tenant otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act. It follows from the omission of thekadars from this section that a landlord can contract to eject a thekadar otherwise than in accordance with the Act It will be observed that S. 53, Cl. 2, does apply to a thekadar and, therefore, a landlord may eject him by notice and it is significant that the thekadar can only contest this notice on the ground that he holds the lease under the terms of which he is not liable to ejectment This defence must be open to a thekadar in any case where the landlord wishes to eject him at the end of his term and if so it cannot be intended that the landlord by failing to give him notice, can deprive him of this right. I am, therefore, of opinion that the only occasion on which a landlord can eject a thekadar otherwise than under the provisions of the Act is when he has entered into a contract with the thekadar by which the latter agrees to vacate the land at the end of his tenancy. Such a contract is not implicit in every tenancy; otherwise the provisions of S. 56, Cl. 2 read with S. 53, Cl. 2 would appear to be futile I would, therefore, hold that a thekadar holding on after the expiry of his term is as much entitled to a notice of ejectment as any other tenant included in S. 53, Cl. 2 of the Act. I agree in the order proposed.

Civil P. C. S. 100—Finding of lower Court as regards right of privacy is finding of fact.

The finding of a lower Court that the right of privacy possessed by a householder in respect of the house which he occupies has not been interfered with by his neighbour, is a finding of fact and cannot be disturbed in second appeal : 29 All. 592, not Foll.

M. Wasim, Ali Zaheer and Ghulam Imam—for Respondent.

Judgment —The decision of the lower appellate Court is that the additional construction made by Radha Kishan defendant-respondent on his own house, so far from reducing the right of privacy enjoyed by the plaintiff-appellant, who is the tenant and occupier of the house opposite, has rather increased it Formerly the defendant-respondent's house had an open roof, and this open roof commanded a complete view of the courtyard of the plaintiff-appellant's house The defendant has now made constructions on that open roof which have restricted the view The lower appellate Court has decided that in these circumstances there has been no fresh or substantial interference with the plaintiff's former right of privacy. We consider that the qusetion is a question of fact and not of law. The question was treated as a question of law in a single Judge decision in Abdul Rahman v. Bhagwan Das (1) but it has been brought to our notice from a certified copy that this decision was revised in a Letters Patent Appeal on 17th January 1908, by a Bench consisting of the Hon. Sir John Stanley and Hon. Mr. Justice Burkitt. There is, however, no report of this reversal in any authorised law report. Be that as it may, in our opinion the question is a question of fact, whatever be the views of other Courts. As the question is a question of fact, we can only be bound by the finding, and the finding is that the right of privacy possessed by the plaintiff-appellant in respect of the house which he occupies has not been interfered with. In these circumstances the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 118 of 1929, Decided on 23rd September 1929, from decree of Third Addl. Dist, Judge, Lucknow, D/- 21st December 1928.

(a) Deed— Construction — Stipulation entitling mortgagee to recover amount and interest as well as compound in case of default — Right to sue for whole mortgage money held accrued even before period fixed for payment of whole sum had expired.

A sued B on a mortgage-deed. The deed contained a clause to the effect that "in case of the breach of contract the above mentioned mortgagee shall be entitled within the fixed period of 6 years and also after it at any time to recover the entire mortgage money and the interest as well as the compound interest through the Court by attachment and sale of the mortgaged share and my other property." A contended that the stipulation contained in the given clause related to the mortgagees (A's) right to obtain a simple money decree in respect of the unpaid interest and did not refer to his right to get a decree for sale for the entire mortgage money.

Held that the clause did not admit of this interpretation. The clause was intended to give the mortgagee the right to institute a suit for the whole of the mortgage money before the completion of the term of six years in case the mortgagor failed to pay interest regularly at the end of each year. [P 537 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act, Art. 132--Money sued for becomes due at earliest date when mortgagee can enforce payment of it.

The words "when the money sued for becomes due" refer to the earliest date on which it becomes due. Money sued for by a mortgagee must be considered to have become due at the earliest date when it is possible for the mortgagee to enforce payment of it. Where the interest is to be paid annually and there is a stipulation that in case of breach of contract the mortgagee would be entitled to recover the whole mortgage money the starting point for limitation is the date of the first default in payment of interest. 37 All. 400; *A. Srivastava, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. It arises out of a suit for sale brought by the plaintiff mortgagee on foot of a mortgage-deed dated 26th July 1912. The mortgage-deed was executed by Bikram Singh the husband of defendant 1 for Rs 900 and carried interest at twelve annas per cent per mensem. The deed provided for payment of interest annually and stipulated that in case of default the interest would be added to the principal. The entire amount of the mortgage money was to be repaid in six years. A further provision in the deed, on which the main controversy in the case is centred, was to the effect that

"in case of the breach of the contract, the above mentioned mortgagee shall be entitled, within the fixed period of six years and also after it, at any time, to recover the entire mortgage money and the interest as well as the compound interest through the Court by attachment and sale of the mortgaged share and my other property."

The other defendants in the suit, namely, defendants 2 to 6 are subsequent transferees of the mortgaged property.

The main defence with which we are concerned in this appeal was one of limitation. It has been accepted by both the Courts below and as a result of it they have agreed in dismissing the plaintiff's suit.

The first question raised on behalf of the plaintiff appellant is as regards the construction of the clause in the mortgage-deed which we have reproduced above. It has been argued that the stipulation contained in the above clause authorizing the mortgagee to recover his money before the expiration of the six years period, relates to the mortgagee's right to obtain a simple money decree in respect of the unpaid interest and does not refer to his right to get a decree for sale for the entire mortgage money. We do not think that the clause in question can admit of this interpretation. We have no doubt that the clause is intended to give the mortgage the right to institute a suit for the whole of the mortgage money before the completion of the term of six years in case the mortgagor fails to pay the interest regularly at the end of each year.

The next question is as regards the rule of limitation applicable to the case Art. 132, Sch. 1, Limitation Act, provides a period of twelve years for suits to enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property and this period of twelve years is to commence from the date when the money sued for becomes due. There has been a sharp conflict of decisions in the various High Courts in this country as regards the meaning and application of the words "when the money sued for becomes due." It will be observed that the mortgage-deed in suit fixes a term of six years which would mean that the money sued for is to become due at the end of this period. Then there is the other clause which gives the mortgagee the right to sue within six years in case of default in the payment of interest

There is one class of authorities in which it has been held that the money sued for must be considered to become due at the earliest date when it was possible for the mortgagee to enforce payment of it. In other words that, in a case like the present, the starting point for limitation would be the date of the first default in the payment of interest: see Gaya Din v. Jhumman Lal (1) and Shib Dayal v. Meharban (2). The other class of cases support the view that the money should not be considered to become due within the meaning of those words as used in Art 132 until the expiration of the term fixed, when the mortgagee is, under the terms of the deed, given the right to sue for his mortgage money and the mortgagor is given the corresponding right to redeem: see Narana v Ammani Amma (3), Rup Narain v. Gopi Nath (4) and Ramsekhar Prasad Singh v. Mathura Lal (5) It is not necessary for me to make an exhaustive survey of the entire case law on the point or to discuss the matter in detail in view of the course of decisions which has prevailed in this Court and which is binding upon me. In Pherai v. Pudai Ram (6) a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh to which my learned brother Mr. Wazir Hasan, J., was a party, decided that in the case of a bond to which Art. 80 applied and which provided for payment of interest month by month and that in the event of failure to pay in any month, the plaintiff was to have a right of suit at once, limitation began to run from the date of the first default in payment of the interest. The same view was taken by a Bench of this Court in Gaura v. Ram Charan (7). The same principle was adopted and held applicable to suits based on mortgages and governed by Art. 132, Lim. Act, by a Full Bench of this Court in Ram Koer v. Patraj Koer (8) Mr. Sen, J., the learned counsel for the plaintiff-appellant contended before us that the correctness of the view taken by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Gaya Din v. Jhumman Lal (1) and Shib Dayal v. Meharban (2) which view has been approved and adopted in this Court, has been questioned by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Pancham v Ansar Husain (9) No doubt there are observations in the judgment of their Lordships which seem to throw some doubt on the soundness of some of the observations in the Full Bench decisions above referred to but their Lordships expressly left the question open and refused to make any definite pronouncement on that point A similar argument was urged in this Court in Gaura v. Ram Charan (7) The learned Judges who constituted the Bench in that case referring to this argument observed that as their Lordships of the Judicial Committee did not decide the point, therefore :

"the decision in the Oudh case Phera v. Pudai Ram (6) should be followed so long as it is not expressly overruled by their Lordships of the Privy Council."

I feel bound by the authority of the Full Bench decision of our Court referred to above and think in accord with the opinion expressed in Gaura v. Ram Charan (7), that we must adhere to the decisions of one Court until their Lordships make a definite pronouncement to the contrary. For these reasons I must overrule the plaintiff's contention and hold that the present suit was barred by Art. 132, Lim. Act

Lastly it was argued that the Courts below were wrong in allowing separate costs to each of the three sets of defendants. The lower appellate Court has held that the awarding of separate costs in this case was justified because the defences of the three sets of defendants were different. It is admitted that they were represented by different counsel and the nature of the defences was such that they could hardly be represented by the same counsel. We do not think we would be justified in interfering with the discretion exercised by the Courts below in the matter of costs. We are satisfied that the reasons given by them for the exercise of their discretion in favour of allowing separate costs as quite reasonable.

The appeal therefore fails and I would dismiss it with costs

Wazir Hasan, J. — I agree. The ratio decidendi of the Oudh decisions to which reference has been made in the judgment of my learned brother seems to me to be quite clear. On a covenant like the one contained in the deed of mortgage on which this suit is founded the mortgagee acquires the right to recall the whole of his mortgage money on a default being made by the mortgagor in payment of the interest as it fell due at the end of one year of the date of the mortgage and before the expiry of the six years prescribed as a term certain for the mortgage. The covenant is in certain cases expressly coupled with a promise on the part of the mortgagor to pay the interest from year to year and further by an acknowledgment of liability to be sued for the entire mortgage money in case of default. But whether such a promise does exist amongst the terms of the mortgage or not is, to my mind, wholly immaterial I cannot conceive of the mortgagee's right to sue arising in the event of default without also the mortgagors' implied liability to pay the whole mortgage money in the event of such default. If that is the true construction of the covenants of this nature, it follows almost logically that the mortgagee's right to sue on default is simply a corollary of the mortgagor's liability to pay. This being so the terms of Art. 132, Sch. 1, Lim. Act (9 of 1908) as to the starting point of limitation, must be held to be fully applicable to a case like the present Those terms are: "When the money sued for becomes due." Column 3 of the schedule prescribes the point of "time from which period begins to run," and the period is clearly referable to the suit mentioned in Col. 1 of the same schedule. In this column the description of the suit " to enforce payment of money charged upon immovable propert " must connote, it appears to me, the " right " to enforce which the suit may be brought Therefore, in a suit of the nature described in Col. 1, Sch 1, the existence of the right of the mortgagee to recall the mortgage money is a condition precedent to such a suit. That condition precedent necessarily involves the mortgagor's liability to make payment of the money charged upon his immovable property There is, therefore, the mortgagee's right to call for repayment and the mortgagor's liability to repay. Thus the requirements of Col. 1 as well as of Col. 3, Art. 132. are fully satisfied.

(7) A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 539.

(9) A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 85=48 All. 457=53 I. A. 187 (P.C.).

It has been contended that the money becomes due only on the expiration of the six years and not before it in spite of the covenant already referred to and the argument in support of the contention is that nothing can be held to have become due unless the mortgagor has the corresponding right to make the payment of the money for which the suit contemplated by Art 132 may be brought and that right only arises on the expiration of six years and not before. To my mind the argument is fallacious It ignores the mortgagor's statutory right to redeem as soon as the mortgage money becomes due. Under S. 60, T. P. Act (4 of 1882) at any time after the principal money has become payable the mortgagor has a right to redeem the mortgage. It is not necessary to make a contract for the purpose of creating this right. It is a right given by law, and is not controlled even by contract to the contrary as was pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Mohammad Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal (10). In this connexion the only question to be considered is at what time the principal money becomes payable. Can it be doubted for a moment that it becomes payable as soon as the mortgagee acquires the right under the covenant to recall his mortgage money? The contrary view will lead to absurd results The mortgagee has the right to recall the whole of the mortgage money yet the mortgagor has no right to satisfy the mortgagee's claim until after a decree in a suit brought by the mortgagee is passed and the mortgagor could redeem the mortgage in terms of the decree. It appears to me that as soon as the mortgagee obtains the right to recall his mortgage money under the covenant, there arises both an implied covenant as to the mortgagor's right to redeem and the statutory right under S. 60 already referred to. In those circumstances the term of six years must be construed to have been intended to run its full course only in the absence of the default in the payment of interest as it falls due. Besides the language of the covenants, the aforementioned result must also flow from the decree in the mortgagee's suit.

I also would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

The determination of the question rests upon the intention to make a particular property, the security for payment of the debt and the intention has to be gathered from the language of the instrument.

A brought a suit against B on basis of pronote. The claim was settled by a compromise which was embodied in a decree. It was provided for payment of decretal money in easy instalments and stipulated "that the defendant will not dispose of in any way his share in the Premier Aerated Company at Hazratganj until the satisfaction of the decretal amount" Contrary to the agreement B, sold all his interest and on suit by A contended that the compromise decree did not create any charge against B's share in the factory as alleged by A.

Held : that the stipulation intended to preserve the property intact so as to be available for payment of money payable under the decree. This being the object of the clause in question it had the effect of making the property security for the payment of the decretal amount. It therefore had a charge of B's share 2 All. 449, 3 Cal. 336, and 24 M. L. J. 474, Dist. 36 All. 201, Ref. [P 540 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the defendants It arises under the following circumstances

The plaintiff-respondent Babu Murli Dhar brought a suit against Fateh Bahadur on the basis of a pro-note The claim was settled by means of a compromise which was embodied in a decree of Court dated 18th February 1925 It provided for the payment of the decretal money in easy instalments and stipulated

"that the defendant will not dispose of in any way his share in the Premier Aerated Company at Hazratganj until the satisfaction of the entire decretal amount."

It appears that contrary to the agreement embodied in the decree, the defendant Fateh Bahadur sold all his interest, which amounted to a moiety share, in the factory to two brothers Narain Das and Ram Kishen Das, defendants 1 and 2. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit for recovery of the amount due to him under the above mentioned decree, by a sale of a half share in the Premier Aerated Water Factory on the ground that he had a charge for the amount of the decree against the share of Fateh Bahadur in the said factory Both the Courts below have upheld the plaintiff's contention and decreed the claim Narain Das and Ram Kishen Das the purchasers of Fateh Bahadur's half share in the factory have come to this Court in second appeal.

The first contention urged on their behalf is that the compromise decree dated 18th February 1925 does not create any charge against the judgment-debtor's share in the factory. S. 100, T. P. Act, provides that :

"where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property."

The question therefore is, whether the clause of the decree which we have reproduced above can either expressly or impliedly be considered to make the factory a security for satisfaction of the decretal amount The law does not prescribe any particular form of words which may be necessary to create a charge. The determination of the question in all such cases rests upon the intention to make a particular property the security for payment of a debt. Of course this intention has to be gathered from the language of the instrument. The stipulation that the defendant must not dispose of his share in the factory until the satisfaction of the decretal amount, was clearly intended to preserve the property intact so as to be available for payment of the money payable under the decree. Obviously this being the object of the clause in question it has the effect of making the property security for the payment of the decretal debt. The learned counsel for the defendants appellants has relied on Bhupal v. Jag Ram (1), Gunno Singh v. Latafut Hossain (2) and P. Sivanna v. Venkatakrishna Murthi (3). The first two cases are clearly distinguishable inasmuch as they contain only general stipulations not to alienate property. In the absence of any expressions making any specific property liable, the general covenant not to transfer any property could not establish the charge with regard to any particular property. In the last case cited the construction placed upon the compromise was that it did not contain any expression of intention to create an interest in the plaintiff's favour If their Lordships of the Madras High Court mean to lay down that in order to establish a charge it is necessary

"that an interest in the property should be created in favour of the creditor to secure due payment of the debt," then we must respectfully dissent from that view. The substantial distinction between a mortgage and a charge lies in the fact that while in the case of a mortgage there is the transfer of the interest in the immovable property, there is no such transfer of interest in the case of a charge which merely secures payment of the money against specific immovable property. The present case is very similar to the case reported in Jawahir Mal v. Indomati (4). In this case there was a clause in the deed by which the executant undertook that until the repayment of the amount he would not transfer the property by sale, mortgage, gift or any other way. It was held by Richards, C. J., that the intention of the parties was to make the property mentioned therein security for the loan and that the document created a charge within the meaning of S. 100, T. P. Act. We therefore agree with the Courts below that the clause under consideration is sufficient to create a charge under S. 100, T P. Act

(1) [1879] 2 All. 449.
(2) [1877] 3 Cal. 336=1 C.L.R. 91.
(3) [1913] 24 M.L.J. 474=19 I.C. 478=(1913) M.W.N. 337.

The second contention urged on behalf of the appellants is that the above mentioned clause relates to a matter quite foreign to the scope of the suit in which the decree was passed and therefore such extraneous matter cannot be exempted from the necessity of registration by reason of its being included in a compromise which has been incorporated in a decree of Court. Sub-S. (2), S. 17, Registration Act provides that

"Nothing in Cl (b) and (c), sub-S. (1) applies to * * * * * * * * * * (iv) Any decree or, order of a Court and any award."

For a long time there had been controversy as regards the question whether the exemption above referred to extends to everything contained within the decree or must be limited to such matters as fall strictly within the scope of the suit which resulted in the decree. Dealing with this question their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Pranal Annee v Lakshmi Annee (5) remarked as follows.

"The razinamah was not registered in accordance with the Act of 1877, but the objection founded upon its non-registration does not, in their Lordships' opinion, apply to its stipulations and provisions, in so far as these were incorporated with, and given effect to by, the order made upon it by the Subordinate Judge in the suit of 1885. . . . . If the parties after agreeing to settle the suit of 1885 on the footing that they were each to take a half share of the land involved in that suit, and also a half share of the lands now in dispute, had informed the learned Judge that these were now the terms of the compromise, and had invited him by reason of such compromise to dispose of the conclusions of the suit of 1885, their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the order of the learned Judge, if it had referred to or narrated these terms of compromise, would have been judicial evidence available to the appellant, that the respondents had agreed to transfer to her the moiety of land now in dispute."

The matter is, however, clinched now by the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Hemanta Kumari Devi v. Midanpur Zamindari Co. Ltd. (6). Their Lordships referring to their decision in Pranal Annee v. Lakshmi Annee (5) observed as follows:

"Though this judgment does not in terms refer to S. 17, sub-S. 2 (vi), Registration Act, it gives full effect to the opinion that their Lordships have formed as to its interpretation. The decree in the present case is a decree which makes no difference whatever in its language between one part and another part of the compromise, it incorporates the whole, and it is, in other words, a decree which, though affecting the lands in the suit as a decree, incorporates the whole of the agreement which led to the suit being compromised. For this reason their Lordships think that the registration of the agreement was unnecessary and that the decree is sufficient evidence of its terms.

We must therefore on the authority of this decision overrule this contention also.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

PULLAN, J.

Gadadhar Prasad—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Sumer Singh — Defendant — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 186 of 1929, Decided on 4th October 1929, from decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, Sitapur, D/- 23rd March 1929.

(a) Landlord and Tenant — Transfer of grove—There is no custom allowing landlord to assert his right in case of transfer of grove.

There is no general custom which enables the landlord to step in, in the case of the transfer of a grove, although he may assert his right when the trees have been cut and the land ceases to be a grove. Under these circumstances the land certainly reverts to the landlord but he acquires no right of entry from sale by a grove holder unless there is a special custom to that effect A I.R. 1927 Oudh 207 and A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 505, Ref. A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 139 and A I R. 1925 Oudh 319, Dist. [P 542 C 2]

(b) Custom — Wajib-ul arz — Custom laid down in, not uniform and acted upon should not be accepted.

A custom is one which is uniform and acted upon. When the custom laid down in the wajib-ul-arz is not uniform and acted upon and it is doubtful whether it is general, it should not be accepted. [P 542 C 1]

B. N. Roy—for Appellant.

Rajeshwari Prasad and Raj Bahadur—for Respondent.

Judgment—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff who is a zamindar. The cause of action for his suit was a sale by a grove holder of a grove situated in a mahal of which the plaintiff is admittedly the ground landlord. The lower Courts have agreed in dismissing the suit, and the plaintiff appeals on two main grounds. The first is that there is a general custom in Oudh by which grove holders are debarred from selling their groves, and the second is that there is a special custom in that village to that effect. The view that there is a general custom in Oudh by which grove holders are debarred from selling their groves, that is to say, their rights as grove holders, was recently discussed by a learned Judge of this Court in the case of Mahomed Ali Mahomed Khan v. Madari Sah (1) The view taken in that case was that there is no such general custom as distinguished from a village custom to be proved by the wajib-ul-arz or other evidence. Reference was made to previous cases, in particular a case which has been referred to me by the appellant, namely, that of Mahabir Prasad v Uma Shankar (2), decided by a Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court That ruling, however, referred only to the sale of a grove by a tenant and the Judges held that such a sale amounted to an abandonment, but this was not a decision as to grove holders, and I doubt the correctness of a subsequent decision by a single Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Ganesh v. Suraj Baksh (3), in which the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner applied the ruling in the case of Mahabir Prasad v Uma Shanker (2) to grove holders. That there is a distinction between the two has been decided more than once, but I would refer only to the case of Mohammad Akhbar v. Lachman (4). There is some confusion as to the rights possessed by landlords both in dealing with groves and in dealing with abandonment of holdings, but as far as I am aware, there is no general custom which enables the landlord to step in, in the case of the transfer of a grove, although he may assert his rights when the trees have been cut and the land ceases to be a grove. Under these circumstances the land certainly reverts to the landlord but, in my opinion, he acquires no right of entry from a sale by a grove holder, unless there is a special custom to that effect.

There are such customs in many villages, and in the village in question there is a wajib-ul-arz dealing with groves. This section of the wajib-ul-arz has been discussed by the Courts below and I am doubtful whether, as a Court of second appeal, I could in any case interfere with the findings of the lower appellate Court that there is no custom in the mahal or in the village such as is contended by the appellant. But I have myself considered these entries in the wajib-ul-arz, and I am satisfied that the view taken by the Courts below is correct A custom is one which is uniform and acted upon. The custom laid down in this wajib-ul-arz is certainly not uniform. It is doubtful whether it is general, and I have a finding of fact of the Courts below that it has not been acted upon. It appears that there was one custom applying to a certain number of groves by which a sale by the grove holder would amount to an abandonment and the landlord would be entitled to take possession of the grove, but there were two groves which were exempted from this custom and another custom was substituted namely, that, if the grove holder transferred his grove, the landlord would be entitled to what is known as haq chaharum or one-fourth of the sale consideration. Lastly there were two groves for which no custom was prescribed at all. It has been found by the Courts below that the grove in suit now is in the very patti in which those two groves are situated for which no custom was prescribed. The grove itself was not in existence when the wajib-ul-arz was prepared. Thus, even if I were prepared to reconsider the findings of the Courts below on the evidence as to a special custom existing in this village, I would be unable to interfere on the merits of the case.

I, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Interlocutory order is open to revision.

B was charged of having committed theft of certain pieces of cloth in charge of the railway company from a goods truck at a railway station. The Station Master started an inquiry and recorded statements of four persons all of whom were railway employees; these statements were forwarded to the Divisional Superintendent who objected under S. 124 to their production before the trying Magistrate when the accused called for them in order that he might cross-examine the witnesses.

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Ruknuddin—for Accused.

Daya Shankar—for Divl. Superintendent, E. I. Ry.

Judgment—This reference in revision raises a point of interest. Bhagwati Prasad is a transhipment clerk stationed at Partabgarh railway station. Sarfaraz, Ram Prasad and Pandohi are station coolies at the same station. Criminal proceedings have commenced against these four persons on a charge of having committed theft of certain pieces of cloth in charge of the E. I. Ry. Co. from a goods truck at Partabgarh railway station on 21st April 1929. The proceedings appear to have been started as the result of a report made by a certain Parja Singh a watchman employed on the Watch and Ward staff at the same railway station. Shortly after this report Mr. Mathews, Station Master, made an inquiry. I have been unable to discover from the record the date of this inquiry but it apparently took place within one to three days of the occurrence. In the course of this inquiry Mr. Mathews is said to have recorded statements of Manzur Ahmad, Parja Singh, Dal Bahadur and Bal Bahadur persons who have been called as witnesses for the prosecution and he is said to have transmitted these statements to the Divisional Superintendent at Lucknow.

In the course of the proceedings before the Magistrate the counsel for the accused called for these statements in order that he might cross-examine the witnesses, who were said to have made them, in reference to those statements, if he discovered that the statements disclosed any ground for such cross-examination. The Divisional Superintendent at the request of the Court sent these statements to the Court in a sealed cover but at the same time took objection to their production on the ground that they were privileged. The Magistrate upheld this contention. The matter was then taken in revision to the Sessions Judge who has forwarded it to this Court for decision. The learned Assistant Government Advocate has taken a preliminary objection that no such revision lies. I do not consider that his contention is correct. It is true that I decided in Kashi Ram v. Ram Jiwan (1) that there is ordinarily no justification for taking up in revision an interlocutory matter in a criminal Court but I never found that such an application in revision did not lie. I only found that ordinarily they should not be acceded to. In this case, however, I consider that the matter should be decided on the merits. Ordinarily these statements were capable of proof before the Court.

The Divisional Superintendent has, however, taken the position that they cannot be produced under the provisions of S. 124, Act 1 of 1872. This section says that no public officer shall be compelled to disclose communications made to him in official confidence when he considers that the public interest would suffer by the disclosure. But these statements were not made to the Divisional Superintendent. They were made to the Station Master. Granting for the sake of argument that the Station Master in the State Railway is a " public officer " within the meaning of S. 124 the question remains whether these communications were made to him in official confidence.

I do not determine whether the Station Master is or is not a public officer within the meaning of S. 124, Act 1 of 1872. He is certainly a public servant for the purposes of Chap. 9, I. P. C., under the provisions of S. 137, Act 9 of 1890, the Railways Act. But it would not follow from that that he is a public officer within the meaning of S. 124, Act 1 of 1872. But apart from that circumstance, is there anything to show that these communications were made to him in official confidence? There is nothing on the record to show that they were made to him in official confidence; and the learned counsel opposing the application has been unable to indicate any reason from which it can be concluded that these communications were made in official confidence. One of the persons who made the communication was Manzur Ahmad, another transhipment clerk, and the other three were watchmen employed under the Watch and Ward.

In these circumstances I find that these communications are not protected. If they had been communications made to a public officer in official confidence the Court would not have been in a position to decide whether the public interest would suffer by their disclosure. If the public officer considered that the public interest would suffer by their disclosure such communications could not be produced in evidence. But if it is not established that they are made in official confidence the opinion of the officer before whom they were made is not relevant. I, therefore, direct that the sealed cover be opened by the Magistrate and that both the prosecution and the defence be given an opportunity of utilizing these documents in the manner permitted by the provisions of the Evidence Act. The record will now be returned. I have to note that the record is very defective. It may be that we have not made a complete examination but I notice in the English record that the evidence of Mr. Mathews terminates at the end of the first page in the middle of a sentence and that we find a similar defect in the evidence of the witnesses under cross-examination. I note this point to safeguard our office. The record is exactly as we have received it and is returned in the condition in which we received it.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

 A. I. R. 1929 Rangoon 1
Full Bench

PRATT, Offg. C. J., CUNLIFFE AND ORMISTON, JJ.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma.

v.

Phra Phraison Salarak—Assessee.

Civil Reference No. 2 of 1928, Decided on 20th June 1928.

* Income Tax Act, S. 4—Remuneration by Foreign Government paid to its servant for work done in British India is not income accruing or arising in British India.

Remuneration, not in the nature of commission, paid in Siamese territory by the Siamese Government to the credit of a Siamese Officer, who collects in British India royalties on timber extracted from Siamese forests and floated down to British India, is not income accruing or arising in British India within the meaning of S. 4: *A. Ormiston, J.—This is a reference under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act, 1922, on the application of one Phra Phraison Salarak, a forest officer in the service of the Siamese Government, stationed at Moulmein, where he collects the royalty on timber, extracted from forests in Siamese territory, whence it is floated down streams, the earlier of whose courses is in that territory. For his services he receives remuneration which is paid to his credit in Bangkok. He was assessed to income-tax under the head of "salary" for the year 1927-28 in respect of the total amount so paid to his credit and of the value of the rent free quarters enjoyed by him. He appealed against the assessment on the grounds, first, that the salary paid to him was not "salary" for the purposes of S. 7 of the Act, and secondly, that it was not liable to assessment as it did not arise or accrue in British India. The Assistant Commissioner decided the appeal against him on both points, whereupon he asked the Commissioner to refer to the Court the following questions:.

(1) That the income is not salary within the meaning of S. 7 (1) of the Act, since the Siamese Goverament cannot be regarded as the "Government or as a public body or association or a private employer."

(2) That, in any case, whatever may be the classification of the income for the purposes of S. 6, such income cannot be said to "accrue or arise in British India" within the meaning of S. 4 of the Act.

The Commissioner was of the opinion that the remuneration of the applicant could not be classified as "salaries," and, therefore, referred only the second question

By S. 4 (1), save as thereinafter provided the Act is to apply to all income profits or gains, described or comprised in S. 6, from whatever source derived, accruing or arising, or received in British India, or deemed under the provisions of of the Act to accrue, arise, or to be received in British India. Under S. 6, save as otherwise provided by the Act, six heads of income, profits and gains are to be chargeable to income-tax. The first of these heads is "salaries" and the sixth is "other sources." The Commissioner having held that the remuneration in question cannot be classified under the first head, classified it under the sixth head

The question is as to whether the remuneration "accrues, or arises" in British India The Commissioner is of the opinion that the remuneration accrues or arises in the place where the work is done in respect of which the remuneration is given, and that consequently, the work having been done in British India, the remuneration is attracted by S 6 The Government Advocate has supported this view The expression is not defind in the Act, and no authority directly bearing on the point now to be decided has been quoted Reference, however, has been made to a number of authorities where the expression has been discussed, and it is suggested that as a result it should be interpreted as meaning "earned in" or "derived from "

In Board of Revenue, Madras v. Ramanadhan Chetty (1), it was held under S 3 (1) of the Act of 1918, the wording of which is similar to that of S 4 (1) of the present Act, that a resident in British India is not liable to tax in respect of the income of a business carried on outside British India, where such income is not remitted to British India The case itself is not in point, and the only passage in the report to which the Government Advocate has directed attention are a discussion by Abdur Rahim, Offg C J , (on p 82) on a possible difference between the phrases "accrues and arises" and "accrues or arises," and quotations by Oldfield, J., (on pp 84 and 85) from dictionaries as to the meaning of the word "accrue " From these it appears that the primary meanings are "to arise or spring as a natural growth or result," "to come by way of increase" and "to grow or arise"; while as secondary meanings it has "to become a present and enforceable right," and "to become a present right of demand "

Seshagiri Ayyar, J , (at pp. 90 and 91) quotes some further definitions. In Murray's Oxford Dictionary the words "accrue" and "arise" are regarded as synonymous In the Century Dictionary the word "accrue" is defined to mean "to become a present or enforceable right to demand " Stroud defines "arising in the United Kingdom" as "coming into the person's hands in the United Kingdom."

In Re Rogers Pyatt Shellac & Co v. Secretary of State (2), Mukerji, J , after discussing theoretical distinctions between "accruing" and "arising" arrives at the conclusion that the words denote the same idea or ideas very similar, and that both words are used in contradistinction to the word "receive" and indicate a right to receive They represent, he says, a stage anterior to the point of time when the income becomes receivable and connote a character of the income which is more or less inchoate. These definitions do not support the view that income accrues or arises in a particular country by reason of the fact that it is "earned" in that country On the contrary they go to show that income "accrues" and "arises" in the country where there is a right to demand payment of it, or where, in fact, it is paid In the case referred the applicant is a Siamese Government servant and there is nothing to indicate that he has a right to demand payment of his income in Moulmein, and, according to the case, it is actually paid in Bangkok

Commissioner of Taxation v Kirk (3) was a decision of the Privy Council on a New South Wales Act which imposed income-tax on incomes inter alia:

"(1) accruing or arising to any person wheresover residing from any profession, trade, employment or vocation carried on in New South Wales," (2) "derived from lands of the Crown held under lease or license issued by or on behalf of the Crown" and (3) "arising or accruing to any person wheresoever residing from any kind of property"

(with an immaterial exception)

"or from any other source whatsoever in New South Wales not included in the preceding sub-sections."

A company in a part derived its income from the extraction of ore from leasehold lands held from the Crown in that colony and from the conversion in that colony of the crude ore into a merchantable product. It was held that, notwithstanding that the finished products were sold exclusively outside the colony, this income was assessable. Their Lordships said that the real question seemed to be whether any part of the profits of the company were earned or produced in the colony And, later in the judgment after pointing out that the word " derived " is synonymous with arising or accruing, they went on to observe that

(1) [1919] 43 Mad. 75=37 M. L. J. 663=10 M. L. W. 570=53 I. C 976=(1919) M. W. N. 826 (F.B ).

(2) A I R. 1925 Cal. 34=52 Cal. 1.

(3) [1900] A. C. 588=69 L. J. P.C. 87=83 L. T. 4.

"there are four processes in the earning or production of this income—(1) the extraction of the ore from the soil, (2) the conversion of the crude ore into a merchantable product, which is a manufacturing process, (3) the sale of the merchantable product, (4) the receipt of the moneys arising from the sale. All these processes are necessary stages which terminate in money, and the income is the money resulting less the expenses attendant on all the stages. The first process seems to their Lordships clearly within sub-S (3), and the second or manufacturing process, if not within the meaning of "trade" in sub-S 1 is certainly included in the words "any other source whatever in sub-S (4)"

Their Lordships' view, therefore, was that it is the source of the income which has to be considered, and not the place where it is received

This case was referred to In re Aurangabad Mills, Ltd (4), a decision under S 3 (1) of the Act of 1918 It was there held that the profits of a company which are made from manufacture carried on beyond British India cannot be said to accrue or arise in British India on account of head office being in Bombay, where also the directors control the business Macleod, C J, (at pages 1290 and 1291) after quoting the above cited passage from the judgment of their Lordships remarked that the doubt which might have arisen in Commissioners of Taxation v Kirk (3) whether the profits were not derived at a place where the third and fourth processes were carried out, did not arise in the case before him because all the four processes were carried out in Hyderabad This case was followed in Board of Revenue v Ripon Press, (5) In Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v Steel Bros & Co Ltd (6), it was held, applying the principles laid down in Commissioners of Taxation v. Kirk (3), that in determining whether any income, profits or gains arise or accrue

The company was non-resident in British India, but at mills situate in Burma it worked up commodities and raw materials into forms suitable for use and shipped them to the United Kingdom where they were sold It was held that the profits or gains accruing to the company in respect of this business must be deemed [within S 42 (1) of the Act] to be income accruing or arising within British India.

Sunder Das v Emperor (7) and Ali Imam v Emperor (8) have been cited. These cases deal with the meaning of the expression "received in British India," which is not part of the reference in this case, and need not be discussed

Reference has been made by the Government Advocate to S 42 (1) and 18 (2A) Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 S. 42 (1) provides that in the case of a non-resident, all profits or gains accruing to him through or from any business connexion or property in British India is to be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India The effect of S 18 (2A), which was inserted by Act 16 of 1925, is to render subject to income-tax any income chargeable under the head "salaries" which is payable to the assessee out of India by or on behalf of Government These sections do not appear to be of assistance in the general construction of the words "accruing" and "arising" in S 4 (1) They seem to be designed to bring within the ambit of the tax special classes of cases which would otherwise escape I am unable to appreciate the argument to be found in the reference and which is based on the position of a salary earner It is said that in his case the salary accrues and arises in the place where he does the work, which is in British India, and that it therefore accrues in British India and is taxable But this argument overlooks the fact that the Commissioner has expressly held that the remuneration of the assessee is not "salary" and has classified it under "other sources"

If the correct principle be that the words accrue and arise when applied to income are to be governed by the source from which the income accrues and arises, it would appear that in the case referred that source is to be found in Bangkok rather than in Moulmein The assessee is a Forest Officer in the service of the Siamese Government It is not stated that his remuneration is in the nature of a commission on the amount of revenue collected On the contrary it is said to be 600 ticals per mensem. The inference to be drawn is that he would get his remuneration qua Forest Officer, whether he worked in Moulmein collecting royalty, or whether he worked in Siam in that or any other capacity From this point of view his remuneration accrues and arises in Bangkok where it is payable and is in fact paid If on the other hand we are to have regard to the definition of the words, the only place where it would seem that there is a present and enforceable right on part of the assessee to demand the remuneration and where it comes into his hand, is also Bangkok

In conclusion I may refer to the observation of Sir Shadi Lal, C. J., in Sundardas v. Emperor (7) after citing the rule of interpretation applying to fiscal enactments, that :

" it is a sound principle that the subject is not to be taxed without clear words to that effect ; and that in dubio, you are always to lean against the construction which imposes a burden on the subject. "

The Government Advocate expressed the view that the legislature had advisedly refrained from defining the terms accuring and arising In my view the meaning of the terms, as applied to the facts of case is as above stated and is perfectly plain. If, on the other hand, the meaning is ambiguous, the sound principle enunciated by Sir Shadi Lal is applicable and it ought to be applied

I would answer the question referred by saying that the income the subject-matter of the reference cannot be said to " accrue or arise in British India " within the meaning of S. 4, Income-tax Act, 1922

Pratt, Offg. C. J —I have had the advantage of reading my brother Ormiston's judgment and I concur in his proposed answer to the reference.

We are asked to decide whether salary paid in Bangok by the Siamese Government to the credit of a Siamese Forest Officer, who collected at Moulmein royalties on timber extracted from Siamese forests and floated down to Moulmein, is income accuring or arising in British India within the meaning of S 4, Income-tax Act

The officer in question resides in Moulmein, presumably for the purposes of his work of collecting royalties We are not asked to decide whether the income is " salary " within the meaning of S 7 (1), of the Act, nor whether the portion of the pay remitted from Bangkok to Mr. Salarak in Moulmein can be said to be " received " within the meaning of S. 4 (1). It has been argued by the Government Advocate that for the purposes of present reference the words " accruing and arising " must be construed as equivalent to " earned ".

None of the cases cited is an authority for this contention

Had the legislature intended to include income earned in British India within the meaning of income " accruing or arising " there, it would have been perfectly simple to say so

I do not consider that salary paid in Siam to a Siamese official for services rendered in Burma can under the circumstances be regarded as income arising or accruing in British India

The respondent will be allowed the costs of the reference Advocate's fee seven gold mohurs

Cunliffe, J —I also concur. The scope of this reference has been very much narrowed The Commissioner has satisfied himself of the answer to the first proposition put forward by the respondent In that regard the Commissioner holds the view that the respondent's income does not come under the head of " salary " within the meaning of S 6 of the Act Nor did the respondent (very wisely, I think) suggest to the Commissioner that he should ask the opinion of the Court as to whether the emolument which he (the respondent) is paid by the Siamese Government is received in British India All we have to do here is to decide, as my brother Ormiston has pointed out, whether such emolument accrues or arises in British India It has been held on several occasions that there is no difference between the two words " profits " or " gains " which are used in the section we are considering. I am inclined to think that there is no real difference in law between the words " accruing " and " arising. " Some authorities have thought that the word " accrue " suggests a periodical right to money and the word " arise " suggests only a single right or possibly the beginning of a perodical right But these views seem to me to be refinements and over-refinements of the language of the statute. To my mind, the double expression " accruing and arising " connotes the source from which the right to obtain money springs. Undoubtedly the source here was in the Kingdom of Siam, remuneration from the Siamese Government to one of the officers of their forest service In my view, too, the expression "accruing or arising" is used in contradistinction to the word "received," but as I have pointed out, we are not considering the question of where the money was actually received or to what place it was remitted after its receipt which may be the same thing in law as "received" It was very strongly urged upon us that the real meaning of "accruing" and "arising" as applied to the income of the respondent was to be found in the place where the income was earned; but, for the reason mentioned above, I do not agree with that view.

DAS AND BAGULEY, JJ.

N N Chettyar—Appellants

Tan Ma Pu and others—Respondents

First Appeals Nos 199 and 206 of 1926, Decided on 2nd September 1927, from judgment of Dist Judge, Bassein, in Civil Suit No 3 of 1925.

(a) Probate and Administration Act, S. 90—Letters of Administration issued under Probate and Administration Act where they should have been issued under Succession Act — Administrator mortgaging property without Court's permission—Letters must be taken to give the powers that they appear to give upon their face until revoked or altered—Mortgage would not bind heirs—Succession Act (1865), S 269.

Letters of Administration were issued under the Probate and Administration Act. But had the application for the letters properly described the deceased, it would have been necessary to issue the letters under the Succession Act. The Administrator mortgaged the property of the deceased without permission of the Court.

Held that the Letters of Administration issued under the Probate and Administration Act must be regarded as being under that Act and giving only the powers that they could give under the Act unless and until the powers under them were extended by the Letters being altered to Letters under the Succession Act. The mortgage, therefore, being without authority would not bind the heirs: 35 Cal. 955, Rel. on. A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 197, Dist. [P 6 C 1, 2]

(b) Probate and Administration Act, S. 90 (3) (a)—Permission to sell property does not ipso facto mean permission to mortgage.

Where Court gives permission to the Administrator to sell property, that permission to sell does not ipso facto give permission to mortgage: 9 Bur. L. T. 236, Foll. [P 6 C 2]

(c) Debtor and Creditor—Person authorized to deal with property by Letters of Administration and also by powers-of-attorney from heirs—He mortgaging property — Creditor need not enquire into application of money borrowed.

A person had authority to deal with certain property by Letters of Administration and powers-of-attorney from the heirs. He mortgaged the property but the creditor did not enquire with regard to the disposal of the money borrowed

Held that there was no need for the creditor to make enquiries with regard to the disposal of money. A man with such authority may be dealt with safely, provided he keeps within limits of the authority. If every man who does business with an attorney had to go beyond the four corners of the power-of-attorney and had to enquire into the destination of the money which he lent and so on, ordinary business would be impossible. The special rules applying to the karta of a joint Hindu family do not apply to people acting under powers-of-attorney. [P 7 C 2]

N N Burjorjee—for Appellants

Zeya—for Respondents

Baguley, J.—These two appeals arise out of a suit brought by the N N. Chettyar Firm against six defendants on a series of mortgages The lower Court gave the plaintiffs a decree for the full amount claimed against defendants, 1, 2 and 5 but against 2, 3 and 6 only gave a decree for the amount admitted

The claim was on a series of transactions The property mortgaged was the property of one Ma Twe, who died in 1912 She left some sons and daughters. Tan Po Shwe, the eldest of them, applied for Letters of Administration to her estate in the late Chief Court of Lower Burma in 1917. It was then stated that she left eight children, six of whom are the defendants in the present case; one has died and one has apparently disappeared from the proceedings altogether. Letters of Administration were issued to Tan Po Shwe and he proceeded to deal with the estate He applied to the Court for permission to sell the immovable property and permission was granted The estate of the deceased was admittedly encumbered and to pay off the debts due he mortgaged the property now in question for Rs 40,000 by registered mortgage bond. The liability on this mortgage bond is admitted by all the defendants, but a considerable part of this debt has been paid back. Afterwards a second mortgage over the same property for Rs 15,000 was executed The title-deeds of the property had been deposited with the plaintiff firm and afterwards defen-

v.
Phra Phraison Salarak—Assessee.

Civil Reference No. 2 of 1928, Decided on 20th June 1928.

 * Income Tax Act, S. 4—Remuneration by Foreign Government paid to its servant for work done in British India is not income accruing or arising in British India.

Remuneration, not in the nature of commission, paid in Siamese territory by the Siamese Government to the credit of a Siamese Officer, who collects in British India royalties on timber extracted from Siamese forests and floated down to British India, is not income accruing or arising in British India within the meaning of S. 4: *A. K. Eggar—for the Crown.

Ormiston, J.—This is a reference under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act, 1922, on the application of one Phra Phraison Salarak, a forest officer in the service of the Siamese Government, stationed at Moulmein, where he collects the royalty on timber, extracted from forests in Siamese territory, whence it is floated down streams, the earlier of whose courses is in that territory. For his services he receives remuneration which is paid to his credit in Bangkok. He was assessed to income-tax under the head of "salary" for the year 1927-28 in respect of the total amount so paid to his credit and of the value of the rent free quarters enjoyed by him. He appealed against the assessment on the grounds, first, that the salary paid to him was not "salary" for the purposes of S. 7 of the Act, and secondly, that it was not liable to assessment as it did not arise or accrue in British India. The Assistant Commissioner decided the appeal against him on both points, whereupon he asked the Commissioner to refer to the Court the following questions:.

(1) That the income is not salary within the meaning of S. 7 (1) of the Act, since the Siamese Goverament cannot be regarded as the "Government or as a public body or association or a private employer."

(2) That, in any case, whatever may be the classification of the income for the purposes of S. 6, such income cannot be said to "accrue or arise in British India" within the meaning of S. 4 of the Act.

The Commissioner was of the opinion that the remuneration of the applicant could not be classified as "salaries," and, therefore, referred only the second question

By S. 4 (1), save as thereinafter provided the Act is to apply to all income profits or gains, described or comprised in S. 6, from whatever source derived, accruing or arising, or received in British India, or deemed under the provisions of of the Act to accrue, arise, or to be received in British India. Under S. 6, save as otherwise provided by the Act, six heads of income, profits and gains are to be chargeable to income-tax. The first of these heads is "salaries" and the sixth is "other sources." The Commissioner having held that the remuneration in question cannot be classified under the first head, classified it under the sixth head.

The question is as to whether the remuneration "accrues, or arises" in British India The Commissioner is of the opinion that the remuneration accrues or arises in the place where the work is done in respect of which the remuneration is given, and that consequently, the work having been done in British India, the remuneration is attracted by S. 6 The Government Advocate has supported this view The expression is not defind in the Act, and no authority directly bearing on the point now to be decided has been quoted. Reference, however, has been made to a number of authorities where the expression has been discussed, and it is suggested that as a result it should be interpreted as meaning "earned in" or "derived from"

In Board of Revenue, Madras v. Ramanadhan Chetty (1), it was held under S 3 (1) of the Act of 1918, the wording of which is similar to that of S. 4 (1) of the present Act, that a resident in British India is not liable to tax in respect of the income of a business carried on outside British India, where such income is not remitted to British India The case itself is not in point, and the only passage in the report to which the Government Advocate has directed attention are a discussion by Abdur Rahim, Offg C J, (on p 82) on a possible difference between the phrases accrues and arises" and "accrues or arises," and quotations by Oldfield, J., (on pp 84 and 85) from dictionaries as to the meaning of the word "accrue" From these it appears that the primary meanings are "to arise or spring as a natural growth or result," "to come by way of increase" and "to grow or arise"; while as secondary meanings it has "to become a present and enforceable right," and "to become a present right of demand."

Seshagiri Ayyar, J., (at pp. 90 and 91) quotes some further definitions. In Murray's Oxford Dictionary the words "accrue" and "arise" are regarded as synonymous In the Century Dictionary the word "accrue" is defined to mean "to become a present or enforceable right to demand." Stroud defines "arising in the United Kingdom" as "coming into the person's hands in the United Kingdom."

In Re Rogers Pyatt Shellac & Co. v. Secretary of State (2), Mukerji, J, after discussing theoretical distinctions between "accruing" and "arising" arrives at the conclusion that the words denote the same idea or ideas very similar, and that both words are used in contradistinction to the word "receive" and indicate a right to receive. They represent, he says, a stage anterior to the point of time when the income becomes receivable and connote a character of the income which is more or less inchoate. These definitions do not support the view that income accrues or arises in a particular country by reason of the fact that it is "earned" in that country On the contrary they go to show that income "accrues" and "arises" in the country where there is a right to demand payment of it, or where, in fact, it is paid In the case referred the applicant is a Siamese Government servant and there is nothing to indicate that he has a right to demand payment of his income in Moulmein, and, according to the case, it is actually paid in Bangkok.

Commissioner of Taxation v Kirk (3) was a decision of the Privy Council on a New South Wales Act which imposed income-tax on incomes inter alia:

"(1) accruing or arising to any person wheresover residing from any profession, trade, employment or vocation carried on in New South Wales," (2) "derived from lands of the Crown held under lease or license issued by or on behalf of the Crown" and (3) "arising or accruing to any person wheresoever residing from any kind of property"

(with an immaterial exception)

"or from any other source whatsoever in New South Wales not included in the preceding sub-sections."

A company in a part derived its income from the extraction of ore from leasehold lands held from the Crown in that colony and from the conversion in that colony of the crude ore into a merchantable product. It was held that, notwithstanding that the finished products were sold exclusively outside the colony, this income was assessable. Their Lordships said that the real question seemed to be whether any part of the profits of the company were earned or produced in the colony And, later in the judgment after pointing out that the word "derived" is synonymous with arising or accruing, they went on to observe that

(1) [1919] 43 Mad. 75=37 M. L. J. 663=10 M. L. W. 570=53 I. C. 976=(1919) M. W. N. 826 (F.B.).

(2) A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 34=52 Cal. 1.

(3) [1900] A. C. 588=69 L. J. P.C. 87=83 L. T. 4.

Their Lordships' view, therefore, was that it is the source of the income which has to be considered, and not the place where it is received

This case was referred to In re Aurangabad Mills, Ltd. (4), a decision under S 3 (1) of the Act of 1918 It was there held that the profits of a company which are made from manufacture carried on beyond British India cannot be said to accrue or arise in British India on account of head office being in Bombay, where also the directors control the business Macleod, C. J, (at pages 1290 and 1291) after quoting the above cited passage from the judgment of their Lordships' remarked that the doubt which might have arisen in Commissioners of Taxation v Kirk (3) whether the profits were not derived at a place where the third and fourth processes were carried out, did not arise in the case before him because all the four processes were carried out in Hyderabad This case was followed in Board of Revenue v Ripon Press, (5). In Commissioner of Income-tax, Burma v Steel Bros & Co Ltd (6), it was held, applying the principles laid down in Commissioners of Taxation v Kirk (3), that in determining whether any income, profits or gains arise or accrue

The company was non-resident in British India, but at mills situate in Burma it worked up commodities and raw materials into forms suitable for use and shipped them to the United Kingdom where they were sold It was held that the profits or gains accruing to the company in respect of this business must be deemed [within S 42 (1) of the Act] to be income accruing or arising within British India.

Sunder Das v. Emperor (7) and Ali Imam v. Emperor (8) have been cited. These cases deal with the meaning of the expression "received in British India," which is not part of the reference in this case, and need not be discussed

Reference has been made by the Government Advocate to S 42 (1) and 18 (2A) Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 S. 42 (1) provides that in the case of a non-resident, all profits or gains accruing to him through or from any business connexion or property in British India is to be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India The effect of S. 18 (2A), which was inserted by Act 16 of 1925, is to render subject to income-tax any income chargeable under the head "salaries" which is payable to the assessee out of India by or on behalf of Government. These sections do not appear to be of assistance in the general construction of the words "accruing" and "arising" in S 4 (1) They seem to be designed to bring within the ambit of the tax special classes of cases which would otherwise escape I am unable to appreciate the argument to be found in the reference and which is based on the position of a salary earner It is said that in his case the salary accrues and arises in the place where he does the work, which is in British India, and that it therefore accrues in British India and is taxable But this argument overlooks the fact that the Commissioner has expressly held that the remuneration of the assessee is not "salary" and has classified it under "other sources"

If the correct principle be that the words accrue and arise when applied to income are to be governed by the source from which the income accrues and arises, it would appear that in the case referred that source is to be found in Bangkok rather than in Moulmein The assessee is a Forest Officer in the service of the Siamese Government. It is not stated that his remuneration is in the nature of a commission on the amount of revenue collected. On the contrary it is said to be 600 ticals per mensem The inference to be drawn is that he would get his remuneration qua Forest Officer, whether he worked in Moulmein collecting royalty, or whether he worked in Siam in that or any other capacity From this point of view his remuneration accrues and arises in Bangkok where it is payable and is in fact paid If on the other hand we are to have regard to the definition of the words, the only place where it would seem that there is a present and enforceable right on part of the assessee to demand the remuneration and where it comes into his hand, is also Bangkok

In conclusion I may refer to the observation of Sir Shadi Lal, C J , in Sundardas v Emperor (7) after citing the rule of interpretation applying to fiscal enactments, that :

" it is a sound principle that the subject is not to be taxed without clear words to that effect , and that in dubio, you are always to lean against the construction which imposes a burden on the subject "

The Government Advocate expressed the view that the legislature had advisedly refrained from defining the terms accuring and arising In my view the meaning of the terms, as applied to the facts of case is as above stated and is perfectly plain If, on the other hand, the meaning is ambiguous, the sound principle enunciated by Sir Shadi Lal is applicable and it ought to be applied

I would answer the question referred by saying that the income the subject-matter of the reference cannot be said to " accrue or arise in British India " within the meaning of S 4, Income-tax Act, 1922

Pratt, Offg. C J —I have had the advantage of reading my brother Ormiston's judgment and I concur in his proposed answer to the reference

We are asked to decide whether salary paid in Bangok by the Siamese Government to the credit of a Siamese Forest Officer, who collected at Moulmein royalties on timber extracted from Siamese forests and floated down to Moulmein, is income accuring or arising in British India within the meaning of S 4, Income-tax Act

The officer in question resides in Moulmein, presumably for the purposes of his work of collecting royalties We are not asked to decide whether the income is " salary " within the meaning of S 7 (1), of the Act, nor whether the portion of the pay remitted from Bangkok to Mr Salarak in Moulmein can be said to be " received " within the meaning of S 4 (1). It has been argued by the Government Advocate that for the purposes of present reference the words " accruing and arising " must be construed as equivalent to " earned "

None of the cases cited is an authority for this contention

Had the legislature intended to include income earned in British India within the meaning of income " accruing or arising " there, it would have been perfectly simple to say so

I do not consider that salary paid in Siam to a Siamese official for services rendered in Burma can under the circumstances be regarded as income arising or accruing in British India

The respondent will be allowed the costs of the reference Advocate's fee seven gold mohurs

Cunliffe, J —I also concur The scope of this reference has been very much narrowed The Commissioner has satisfied himself of the answer to the first proposition put forward by the respondent In that regard the Commissioner holds the view that the respondent's income does not come under the head of " salary " within the meaning of S 6 of the Act Nor did the respondent (very wisely, I think) suggest to the Commissioner that he should ask the opinion of the Court as to whether the emolument which he (the respondent) is paid by the Siamese Government is received in British India All we have to do here is to decide, as my brother Ormiston has pointed out, whether such emolument accrues or arises in British India It has been held on several occasions that there is no difference between the two words " profits " or " gains " which are used in the section we are considering I am inclined to think that there is no real difference in law between the words " accruing " and " arising " Some authorities have thought that the word " accrue " suggests a periodical right to money and the word " arise " suggests only a single right or possibly the beginning of a perodical right But these views seem to me to be refinements and over-refinements of the language of the statute To my mind, the double expression " accruing and arising " connotes the source from which the right to obtain money springs Undoubtedly the source here was in the Kingdom of Siam, remuneration from the Siamese Government to one of the officers of their forest service In my view, too, the expression "accruing or arising" is used in contradistinction to the word "received," but as I have pointed out, we are not considering the question of where the money was actually received or to what place it was remitted after its receipt which may be the same thing in law as "received" It was very strongly urged upon us that the real meaning of "accruing" and "arising" as applied to the income of the respondent was to be found in the place where the income was earned, but, for the reason mentioned above, I do not agree with that view

v

Tan Ma Pu and others—Respondents

First Appeals Nos 199 and 206 of 1926, Decided on 2nd September 1927, from judgment of Dist Judge, Bassein, in Civil Suit No 3 of 1925

(a) Probate and Administration Act, S. 90—Letters of Administration issued under Probate and Administration Act where they should have been issued under Succession Act — Administrator mortgaging property without Court's permission—Letters must be taken to give the powers that they appear to give upon their face until revoked or altered—Mortgage would not bind heirs—Succession Act (1865), S 269.

Letters of Administration were issued under the Probate and Administration Act But had the application for the letters properly described the deceased, it would have been necessary to issue the letters under the Succession Act The Administrator mortgaged the property of the deceased without permission of the Court.

Held that the Letters of Administration issued under the Probate and Administration Act must be regarded as being under that Act and giving only the powers that they could give under the Act unless and until the powers under them were extended by the Letters being altered to Letters under the Succession Act. The mortgage, therefore, being without authority would not bind the heirs 35 Cal. 955, Rel. on A. I R. 1922 P C. 197, Dist. [P 6 C 1, 2]

(b) Probate and Administration Act, S 90 (3) (a)—Permission to sell property does not ipso facto mean permission to mortgage.

Where Court gives permission to the Administrator to sell property, that permission to sell does not ipso facto give permission to mortgage. 9 Bur. L. T. 296, Foll. [P 6 C 2]

(c) Debtor and Creditor—Person authorized to deal with property by Letters of Administration and also by powers-of-attorney from heirs—He mortgaging property — Creditor need not enquire into application of money borrowed.

A person had authority to deal with certain property by Letters of Administration and powers-of-attorney from the heirs He mortgaged the property but the creditor did not enquire with regard to the disposal of the money borrowed.

Held that there was no need for the creditor to make enquiries with regard to the disposal of money. A man with such authority may be dealt with safely, provided he keeps within limits of the authority. If every man who does business with an attorney had to go beyond the four corners of the power-of-attorney and had to enquire into the destination of the money which he lent and so on, ordinary business would be impossible. The special rules applying to the karta of a joint Hindu family do not apply to people acting under powers-of-attorney [P 7 C 2]

N N Burjorjee—for Appellants

Zeya—for Respondents

Baguley, J —These two appeals arise out of a suit brought by the N N Chettyar Firm against six defendants on a series of mortgages The lower Court gave the plaintiffs a decree for the full amount claimed against defendants, 1, 2 and 5 but against 2, 3 and 6 only gave a decree for the amount admitted

The claim was on a series of transactions The property mortgaged was the property of one Ma Two, who died in 1912 She left some sons and daughters Tan Po Shwe, the eldest of them, applied for Letters of Administration to her estate in the late Chief Court of Lower Burma in 1917 It was then stated that she left eight children, six of whom are the defendants in the present case, one has died and one has apparently disappeared from the proceedings altogether Letters of Administration were issued to Tan Po Shwe and he proceeded to deal with the estate He applied to the Court for permission to sell the immovable property and permission was granted The estate of the deceased was admittedly encumbered and to pay off the debts due he mortgaged the property now in question for Rs 40,000 by registered mortgage bond The liability on this mortgage bond is admitted by all the defendants, but a considerable part of this debt has been paid back. Afterwards a second mortgage over the same property for Rs 15,000 was executed The title-deeds of the property had been deposited with the plaintiff firm and afterwards defendant 1 gave a letter of authority to the plaintiffs authorizing them to lend further sums of money on promissory notes to Tan Babu and his clerk, Tan Kya Lu, and it was agreed that the sums so advanced should constitute a further lien on the properties already mortgaged In this way considerable sums of money were advanced and the plaint shows that the total debt outstanding at the time of filing of the suit was Rs 1,07,340-6-0

Various defences are raised, and I will deal with them in order

In the first place it is argued that, as the Letters of Administration were issued to Tan Po Shwe under the Probate and Administration Act and he never got permission from the Court to mortgage the immovable property of the deceased, these mortgages are bad, except, of course, so far as they are admitted. In reply to this, it is urged that the deceased, Ma Twe, although described in the application for Letters of Administration as a Chinese Buddhist, was, in fact, a Karan Christian, and how she came to be described as a Chinese Buddhist is not explained. It would seem that her husband was a Chinaman, but his religion is doubtful Be that as it may, however, there can be no doubt that, had Ma Twe been correctly described in the application for Letters of Administration, the Letters would have issued under the Succession Act, and, in that case, the mortgage by the administrator would have been good It is argued that, as the Letters should have been issued under the Succession Act, the administrator had the powers to mortgage that he would have had, had they been correctly issued The argument in my opinion, fails The letters must be taken to give the powers that they appear to give upon their face until they are revoked or altered.

No case directly in point has been quoted, but for the converse there is authority vide Debendra Nath Dutt v. Administrator General of Bengal (1) In that case Letters of Administration which were issued owing to the fraud of the applicant and which, therefore, might be considered as bad from the start were nevertheless held to be good until and unless they were revoked In the same way I hold that Letters issued under the Probate and Administration Act must be regarded as being under that Act and giving only the powers that they could give under that Act until and unless the powers under them are extended by the Letters being altered to Letters under the Succession Act The case of Ma Yait v Maung Chit Maung (2), was quoted as being authority for beginning the administration under the Probate and Administration Act and completing it under the Succession Act But in that case, no question of the powers of the administrator was gone into Originally, Letters of Administration were taken out under the Probate and Administration Act, but the Privy Council decided that, as the deceased was a person whose estate had to devolve according to the rules laid down in the Succession Act, the administrator would have to divide the property among the heirs in accordance with the rules of the Succession Act

It is true that the administrator got permission to sell, but permission to sell does not ipso facto give permission to mortgage vide Ram Dhon Dhor v Sharf-ud-din (3).

Under the Letters of Administration issued, then, I must hold that Tan Po Shwe had not got power to bind the interests of the heirs The case, however, cannot be disposed of so easily Various heirs had given Tan Po Shwe direct authority to act on their behalf under powers-of-attorney Ex M is a power of attorney given by Tan Lon Dan, defendant 5 to Tan Po Shwe This authorizes him to do various things in the way of administering the estate and carrying on the family business of Maung Gwan The power, however, contains a paragraph

'It is hereby expressly provided that nothing herein contained will authorize the agent to contract debts etc "

It is impossible to say that under this power Tan Lon Dan authorized Tan Po Shwe to mortgage his interest in the family property

Ex N is a power-of-attorney given by Tan Ma Pu, Tan Pu Su and Tan Babu to Tan Po Shwe This also authorizes Tan Po Shwe to deal with the administration of the estate, but being differently worded it does directly give him authority to deal with the estate

"to pay off all debts and encumbrances due to the said estate, by selling mortgaging or in any other way alienating any part of the estate, if necessary etc."

After this power-of-attorney had been given by these three defendants it is impossible for them to say that Tan Po Shwe had not got their direct authority to mortgage and encumber the estate property.

The remaining defendant Tan Kyauk Ho has apparently given no power-of-attorney to Tan Po Shwe His position then would apparently be that Tan Po Shwe could not bind his interest. It seems, however, that he had no interest to bind at all

The point was overlooked in the lower Court it would seem, but the record contains a statement repeated more than once by Tan Po Shwe that Tan Kyauk Ho was not the son of Ma Twe He was the son of Ma Twe's husband by a Chinese wife and Tan Kyauk Ho himself never went to the witness-box to deny this, and the statement is completely unrebutted I will refer to this later on in the judgment.

Another defence raised on behalf of Ma Pu and Ma Pu Su was that they were insane generally and that their interests could not be bound I have been through the oral evidence on this point, and the conclusion I have come to is that they are persons liable at times to fits of insanity The evidence of Dr San C Po is really to the effect He says that Ma Pu Su had attacks of epilepsy which have rendered her unsound and that Ma Pu has been treated out off for years for melancholia, general infirmity of the mind In cross-examination, it appears that their normal condition is one of sanity It is only at times that they are of unsound mind, and as they gave Tan Po Shwe authority to apply for Letters of Administration on their behalf and also gave him a power-of-attorney, authorizing him to deal with their interests they must prove to invalidate these acts that at the time they did them they were in one of their insane fits. Of this there is no evidence The medical evidence is that Ma Pu Su is liable to become uncontrollable under any excitement or even at the sight of new faces But the proceedings in the late Chief Court of Lower Burma, when Letters of Administration were applied for show that she was able to come to Rangoon, and sign a paper agreeing to the issue of Letters of Administration to Tan Po Shwe in the presence of her Rangoon lawyer. This story suggests that her agoraphobia was not of a very pronounced type This defence of insanity must, I think, be held of no avail

Then it is argued that it has not been proved that this money was applied for the benefit of this estate, or for the benefit of the family business In my opinion, there was no need for the creditor to make enquiries with regard to the disposal of money He was dealing with a man whose authority to deal with the property lay in his possession by Letters of Administration and powers-of-attorney from the heirs, with whom we are now concerned. A man with this authority may be dealt with safely, provided he keeps within the limits of his authority and to the extent of his authority If every man who did business with an attorney had to go beyond the four corners of the power-of-attorney and had to enquire into the destination of the money which he lent and so on, ordinary business would be impossible I can see where the argument comes from. It comes from the various cases of persons who deal with the karta of a joint Hindu family; but the special rules applying to a karta of a Hindu joint family do not apply to people acting under powers-of-attorney

It was argued that the agreement Ex O forbids Tan Po Shwe to encumber the estate or incur any loan as administrator. This is quite true, and it is also a fact that the date of this agreement is subsequent to the date of the power-of-attorney Ex N As against third parties, however, none of the defendants can claim this to be a revocation of the power-of-attorney Ex. M It may be good as between the defendants themselves, but with that we are not concerned. If by means of Ex O any of the remaining defendants wished to alter the terms of Ex N it was their duty to withdraw Ex. N in order that Tan Po Shwe should not hold it out as an authority in his favour as against third parties

One further point must be touched on and that is that Lon Dan, defendant 5, the only one of the defendants who took the precaution of expressly forbidding Tan Po Shwe to encumber the estate, admits his liability not only for the money due on original Rs. 40,000 mortgage bond Ex A but he also admits liability for a further Rs. 6,000 which he received out of the money borrowed from the plaintiff's firm.

As a result, therefore, I would hold that Tan Po Shwe, defendant 1 is responsible personally and as an heir for the whole of the money due Tan Babu, Tan Ma Pu, and Tan Pu Su are responsible to the full extent of their interests in the estate, and also personally because they authorized Tan Po Shwe to borrow this money Tan Lon Dan cannot be held responsible for anything more than he admits liability for, because Tan Po Shwe's power to mortgage comes not from the Letters of Administration given to him. Tan Lon Dan admits liability for the remainder of the debt due on Ex A and for the further sum of Rs 6,000 It does not seem to be stated which sum of Rs 15,000 provided this Rs 6,000 for Tan Lon Dan I must, therefore, say that he is liable for Rs 6,000 with interest from 17th August 1919

As regards Kyauk Ho as he is not an heir, I do not see how it is possible to charge him with any liability under any of the mortgages. None of the mortgaged properties belongs to him and he has given Tan Po Shwe no authority to borrow on his behalf

Turning now to the two appeals that have been filed: with regard to appeal No 199/26 this in the main is successful, for I am of opinion that Tan Ma Pu and Tan Pu Su are both liable for the money borrowed

As regards Tan Kyauk Ho, I think the appeal must be said to have failed, because I can place no liability on him, but he will not get any benefit out of this, for I hold that he has no interest in the estate

As regards appeal No 206/26, in this appeal the first three appellants are quite unsuccessful Appellant 4 Tan Lon Dan is successful to a certain extent, for I hold that he is only responsible on Ex A and for the further sum of Rs 6,000 which he received

In this appeal Kyauk Ho must be regarded as unsuccessful, I think As a result the decree of the lower Court will be varied The plaintiff will get a decree for the full amount claimed against the interest of the first four defendants He will get a decree against Tan Lon Dan and his interest in the property to the extent of the amount due on Ex A together with Rs 6,000 with interest out of the promissory note dated 17th August 1919, which will be a charge on Tan Lon Dan's interests The interests of these five defendants will be declared as 1/5 each, so that the plaintiff will be entitled to sell the whole interest in the mortgaged property

As regards Kyauk Ho the claim will be dismissed without costs The plaintiff-appellant in appeal No 199/26 will get his costs of the appeal against Tan Ma Pu and Tan Pu Su and in Appeal No 266/26, the plaintiff-respondent will get one-half of his costs against first three defendant-appellants

Civil Misc Appln No 26 of 1928, Decided on 16th July 1928

 Income-tax Act, S 30, proviso—Meaning explained—Assessment under S 23 (4) followed by refusal to make fresh assessment under S 27 does not come under proviso.

Assessment under S. 23 (4) and a dismissal of an application under S 27 for a fresh assessment, is not an assessment made under S 23 (4) read with S 27 which would preclude an appeal being filed from it under the proviso to S. 30 What the proviso means is that there shall be no appeal against (i) an assessment made under S 23 (4) and (ii) when the assessment under S. 23 (4) is cancelled and a fresh assessment under S 27 is made [P 9 C 2]

Clark and Venkatram—for Applicant.

A Eggar—for the Crown

Judgment —This is an application for a mandamus to compel the Commissioner of Income-tax to state a case under S 66, Income-tax Act The facts are set forth at length in the application The A K A Firm of Rangoon, which consisted of two partners the applicant A K. A C. T V V Chettyar and A K A C T A L Alagappa Chettiar, discontinued business in August 1925, the assets were divided between the two partners, who have been since carrying on business as separate joint family firms under the styles of A K A C T V and A K C T. A L respectively.

For the financial year 1925-26 notice was served on the then agent of the A K A Firm on 8th April 1925 to make a return for income-tax purposes

Applicant eventually made a return and claimed the benefit of S 25 (3), Income-tax Act as the firm had been dissolved. Applicant objected to producing the books of the firm, and to the proposed method of assessment Ultimately the Income-tax Officer peremptorily settled 31st March 1926, for the production of accounts The accounts were not produced and the officer made an assessment ex parte against each member of the A K. A Firm Applicant appealed to the Assistant Commissioner who dismissed his appeal, and left him to apply for a fresh assessment under S. 27 An application was made under S 27 but was refused An appeal to Commissioner of Income-tax was unsuccessful The Commissioner was asked but declined to make a reference to this Court, hence the present application under S 66 (3) for an order to state a case on specified points of law

A preliminary objection has been taken by the Government Advocate that the application is incompetent since no appeal lies to the Assistant Commissioner from the order refusing to make a fresh assessment under S 27 It is contended that the proviso to S 30 that no appeal shall lie in respect of an assessment made under sub-S (4), S 23, or under that sub-section read with S 27 precludes such an appeal, since it must be taken that, the Officer having dismissed the application for a fresh assessment under S 27, there remains an assessment under sub-S (4), S 23, read with S 27

The contention is clearly not maintainable There was an application for a fresh assessment under S 27, which was refused The assessment under S 23 (4) was not cancelled There was not therefore an assessment under S 23 (4) read with S 27 as argued A refusal to make an assessment is not an assessment S 30 definitely provides for an appeal against a refusal of an Income-tax Officer to make a fresh assessment under S 27 What the proviso clearly means is (1) that there shall be no appeal against an assessment made under S 23 (4) and (2) that when an assessment under S 23 (4) has been cancelled under S 27 and a fresh assessment made there shall also be no appeal: that is to say that if the assessee succeeds in his effort to obtain a fresh assessment under S 27 he shall be debarred from appealing against that fresh assessment. The assessee in not precluded by the proviso from preferring the appeal against the refusal to make a fresh assessment under S 27, which is allowed in the body of S 30

In his order rejecting the two applications for a reference to this Court under S 66 (2) on a number of questions the Commissioner of Income-tax took the view that the only questions for decision were of pure fact viz whether applicants had a reasonable opportunity of complying with the Income-tax Officer's notice and whether there was an adequate reason for non-production of accounts There was therefore no question of law to refer We consider that the only question for determination was whether applicant had sufficient cause for non-compliance with Income-tax Officer's notices He obviously had not, and we see no reason to think the findings of fact wrong Applicant and his quondam partner were obviously placing every obstacle in the way of a just assessment and they have only themselves to thank, if the result of their efforts is that they have been assessed in a way and under a section, which they do not like We do not feel called upon to require the Commissioner to state a case upon any of the points raised before us The application is dismissed with costs Advocate's fee five gold mohurs.

Special Second Appeal No 52 of 1928, Decided on 18th June 1928, from judgment of Dist Judge, Tharrawaddy, in Civil Appeal No 102 of 1927.

 Stamp Act, S 36 — Insufficiently stamped promissory note admitted by trial Court—Admissibility of the document cannot be questioned in appeal

The trial Court purporting to act under S. 35 but overlooking its proviso (a) admitted an insufficiently stamped promissory note in evidence after recovering penalty.

Held that the terms of S. 36 are exceedingly wide and they undoubtedly refer to any document which has, in fact, been admitted in evidence, and are sufficient to cover the case of a promissory note or any other document to which proviso (a) to S. 35 is not applicable. So under S 36 the appellate Court cannot question the admissibility of the document. 2 L. B. R. 103, Held wrongly decided: 14 Bom. 102 and 18 Bom. 369, Dist.. 2 U. B. R. Stamp 36 ; 13 Bom. 449 (F.B), 3 Cal. 787; and 12 Cal. 64, Foll. [P 10 C 2]

Judgment—This was a suit on a promissory-note Both the Courts below have agreed that the plaintiff proved the execution of the note The Township Court on that finding gave a decree for the plaintiff, but, on appeal, the District Court reversed that decision on the ground that the promissory-note sued upon was insufficiently stamped The facts as regards the promissory-note were that it was for Rs. 600 and stamped with one one-anna stamp only As it should have been stamped with two-annas the Township Judge impounded it and levied the deficient duty of one-anna and a penalty of Rs 5 purporting to act under S 35, Stamp Act He was wrong in his action, having overlooked the fact that proviso (a) to S 35 does not apply to a promissory-note However, he did levy the duty and penalty and he did admit the promissory-note in evidence The District Judge was right in his finding that the note could not properly have been admitted in evidence He held on the authority of Maung Ba Kywan v Ma Kyi Kyee (1) that S 36 did not apply in this case and, therefore, on his finding that the note was inadmissible he set aside the decree and dismissed the plaintiff's suit

In the case relied upon by the District Judge, Fox J held, that S 36 Stamp Act, was not applicable to a promissory-note He said that the Township Court by admitting and acting on the document had acted illegally and that that illegality could be corrected by an appellate Court He remarked that the cases of S A Ralli v Caramali Fazal (2) and Chenbasappa v Lakshman Ramchandra (3) supported his view. That appears to be the latest reported Lower Burma decision on this point. There is, however, an Upper Burma case, Mi Ke v Nga Kan Gyi (4) in which the Judicial Commissioner, now Sir George Shaw, expressly dissented from Fox, J's ruling He said in his judgment that the Bombay cases relied upon in the Lower Burma decision did not deal with the point for determination I have myself referred to those cases and I entirely agree with his view.

The terms of S 36, Stamp Act, are exceedingly wide and in their plain ordinary meaning they undoubtedly refer to any document which has, in fact, been admitted in evidence, and are sufficient to cover the case of a promissory-note or of any other document to which proviso (a) to S. 35 is not applicable There are a number of other cases in which the view taken by Sir George Shaw has been taken These refer to earlier Stamp Acts but there is no material difference between the relevant provisions of those Acts and those of the Act now in force. In Devachand v Hirachand Kamaraj (5), the document in question was a promissory-note but the Judge of the trial Court held that it was a bond and admitted it in evidence on payment of duty and penalty Later, before the suit had been decided, his successor formed the opinion that the document was a promissory-note and that its admission in evidence was illegal On that ground, therefore, he dismissed the suit A Full Bench of three Judges of the Bombay High Court held that the promissory-note having once been admitted in evidence could not afterwards be rejected on the ground that it was not duly stamped. In Khoob Lall v Jungle Singh (6), the trial Court held that the document before it was not a promissory-note but a letter of agreement and admitted it in evidence on payment of penalty Before the High Court it was argued that the document was, in fact, a promissory-note and that it being a promissory-note S 39 of Act 18 of 1869* was not applicable The Calcutta High Court held that the admissibility of the document could not be questioned in appeal.

In Panchanand Dass v Taramoni Chowdrain (7) the document in question was held by the trial Court to be a bond and it was admitted on payment of duty and penalty The first appellate Court held that the document was a promissory-note and was not admissible in evidence and therefore reversed the decision.

It was held by the High Court that the Subordinate Judge sitting in appeal had no authority to review the question of the admission of the document It held that the Stamp Act, 1 of 1879, governed the cases and that under proviso of S 34 of that Act, which was essentially identical with S 36 of the present Act, the admission of the document could not be questioned in appeal All these cases are directly relevant to the question now before me and they all support what in my view is the plain meaning of S 36. In my opinion, therefore, the decision of Fox, J in Maung Ba Kywan v Ma Kyi Kyee (1) was wrong I therefore allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the District Court and restore those of the Township Court The respondents will pay appellant's costs in all Courts

Criminal Revn No 686-A of 1928, Decided on 28th June 1928, from order of Township Magistrate, Pyinmana, in Criminal Regular Trial No 124 of 1928

 Railways Act, S 113—Application under Sub-S.4 is not a criminal prosecution—Court has no power to fine or to order imprisonment in default.

An application under S. 113 (4) is not a prosecution for criminal offence and on such application the Magistrate has no power to fine the defaulter or to order a sentence of imprisonment in default of such fine. The Magistrate can only direct him to pay the fare and the excess charge under sub-S (3) and then proceed to recover it as if it were a fine

Judgment.—The Magistrate was quite correct in considering that S 112, Railways Act, did not apply to this case and that action could only be taken under sub-S (2), S 113, but his procedure under this latter section was entirely misconceived An application under sub- S (4), S. 113, Railways Act, is not a prosecution for a criminal offence It should be registered as a Criminal Miscellaneous Case and not as a Regular Trial. The Magistrate, on an application under this section, has no power to fine the respondent or to order a sentence of imprisonment in default of such fine All that the Magistrate can do is to direct the respondent to pay the fare and excess charge, referred to in sub-S (3), S 113, and then proceed to recover it as if it were a fine. In fact, the Magistrate is compelled to do this and has no authority to enter into the merits of the matter The Magistrate should study the provisions of S 113 and S. 132, Railways Act, and also General Letter No 17 of 1926 of this Court, which sets out the circumstances under which a person proceeded against under S 113 may be detained in custody

Consequently in the present case the fines of Rs 7 each, imposed on the two respondents, and the sentence of ten days' imprisonment passed in default of payment were entirely illegal All that the Magistrate could do was to order each of the respondents to pay the deficit railway fare of six annas and six pies, plus an excess charge of the same amount. Consequently the amount of deficit fare plus excess charge to be recovered from each respondent was 13 annas This amount should now be deducted from the amounts of fares and fines deposited by the respondents and the balance should be refunded to them The amounts so recovered under sub-S (4), S 113, must be paid to the railway administration It is noticed that in regard to the deficit fares of 13 annas already recovered this has not been done.

 Civil P. C , O 41, R. 17—Rule empowers Court to adjourn a case—For default, appellate Court should not pass order without hearing appellant's advocate.

Order 41, R. 17, is intended to give the Court power to adjourn a case, if it thinks fit. It seems distinctly unfair that for default, the appellate Court may pass an order without hearing the appellant's advocate or without hearing the appellant, which would entirely preclude him from even afterwards questioning the finding of fact. *A. Judgment.—This is an appeal against a decree of the District Court of Insein confirming a decree passed by the Township Court of Insein The history of the appeal in the lower lower Court is rather peculiar It was filed on 13th June and admitted the next day after hearing the appellant's advocate It was adjourned twice and then on 29th July, when advocates for both sides were present, the learned Additional District Judge came to the conclusion that another witness ought to be examined He cited that witness and examined him. It was then found that some documents were missing and they were sent for Finally, on 2nd September 1927,the case came up for hearing The documents apparently had still not been received The appellant's advocate asked for an adjournment as he was engaged elsewhere The learned Judge refused the adjournment, but gave him an hour and a half in which to deal with his other work The hour and a half expired and another half hour and as the appellant's advocate still had not come, the learned Judge stated in the diary that he would pass orders without the help of the advocate Whether the advocate for the respondent still remained present is not clear from the diary order, but when the matter was argued before me by the same advocates who appeared in the lower appellate Court, no stress was laid on the fact, if it were a fact, that the respondent's advocate was still present The order of the lower appellate Court when passed dismissed the appeal on the merits and, therefore, the appellant will be debarred from questioning any finding of fact in second appeal.

The question before this Court is whether the lower appellate Court had power to pass an order on the merits without having heard the appellant's advocate in full There appears to be a case similar to the present one in the Madras ruling. Muhammad v Manavikrama (1) In this case, what happened before the lower appellate Court was that there was no appearance on behalf of the appellant and the lower appellate Court passed an order dismissing the appeal on the merits Both Judges on the appellate Bench passed separate orders in which they came to the conclusion that an order dealing with the merits in the absence of the appellant's advocate was an illegal order. Under the previous Code, there is ample authority for holding that an appeal dismissed under these circumstances must be one dismissed for default, but the wording of O 41, R 17 is not quite the same as the wording of old S 556 The present order runs

"Where, on the date fixed . . . the appellant does not appear when the appeal is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the appeal be dismissed,"

The old section ran "the appeal shall be dismissed for default "The point for consideration is whether the present wording of the section makes it possible for a Judge to dismiss an appeal on its merits In the Madras case quoted, the Bench were of opinion that consideration of the merits could not be gone into when O 41, R 17 applied There seems to be an absence of authority on the point, this being the only officially reported case There are two unofficially reported decisions of the Patna High Court, each by a single Judge, but as these two decisions are directly at variance to one another, it is impossible to gain much idea from them

My own view is that O 41, R 17 is intended to give the Court power to adjourn a case if it thinks fit It seems distinctly unfair that for default the appellate Court may pass an order without hearing the appellant's advocate or without hearing the appellant, which will entirely preclude him from ever afterwards questioning the findings of fact This being the case and following the Madras ruling, I set aside the order of the learned Additional District Judge as ultra vires and I direct him to restore the appeal to the file and dispose of it according to law As this trouble has arisen through the default of the appellant, I direct that he do pay the costs of respondent in this Court whatever may be the outcome of the appeal and he will also pay the costs of the respondent already awarded to him in the Court of the Additional District Judge When the District Court comes to a fresh finding after hearing both sides, it will pass an order for costs independent of its first order

Judgment —This case comes before me for disposal on a point raised in my judgment some time ago As the point was one which was raised by me after the argument had closed, I posted the case for further argument which was heard only to-day on account of some of the parties being dead and their legal representatives having to be brought on the record

The point now for consideration is whether a person who has not been declared a purchaser of immovable property in a Court auction sale, but whose bid had been accepted by the fall of the hammer and who fails to deposit the 25 per cent of the amount of his purchase money, can be made liable for the difference in price when the property is sold immediately after

I have already dealt with the facts of the case in my previous judgment and I have drawn attention to the fact that even the bailiff is not quite sure whether the person withdrew his offer before or after the fall of the hammer I thought at first it was necessary to remand the case for a finding whether the defaulting bidder had actually been declared to be the purchaser, but it is unnecessary in view of the evidence of the bailiff In the case to which I refer in my judgment, Jaibahadur Jha v Matukdhari Jha (1) it was held that an execution sale is not complete until the presiding officer of the Court has accepted the bid and declared the bidder to be the purchaser under O 21, R 84 That rule clearly states that the bidder shall pay the 25 per cent deposit only after such declaration. In the Patna case, it is stated that the presiding officer of the Court to whom an order declaring that a person has purchased the property is submitted for signature should enquire before signing the bid from the persons present in Court whether there is any advance on the highest bid given by the officer who conducted the sale This shows beyond all doubt that the highest bid at the time when the hammer fell was merely a conditional bid, which it was open to the Court to accept or not If it is open to the Court to accept the bid or reject it, it must equally be open to the purchaser to withdraw his offer before it is accepted by the Court

The learned advocate for the respondent wants to draw a distinction between the contract of an ordinary person and a bid at an auction sale I fail to see any distinction whatever and if a bid can be kept hanging by the Court, it can equally be withdrawn by the bidder Two cases reported in unauthorized reports, Fazil Meah v Prosanna Kumar Roy (2) and Ratnasami Pillai v Sabapathy Pillai (3) deal with the same point In the first case, the Calcutta High Court held that an execution sale is not concluded when property is knocked down to a bidder, even though he had made the necessary deposit of 25 per cent and the bid had been accepted by the Nazir In the Madras case, where the person conducting the sale was a receiver and not a bailiff, the High Court held that it is the acceptance by the Court that constitutes the contract and that therefore the person who asserts that the Court officer had power to bind the Court by acceptance must prove it Under the rules of the Civil Courts Manual, the bailiff is undoubtedly the officer of the Court who is authorized to conduct the sale, but this does not imply any power to accept an offer on behalf of the Court or to make a declaration that a bidder has become a purchaser

I hold, therefore, that it is open to a bidder to withdraw his offer, since his bid is nothing more than an offer, until that offer has been finally accepted by the Court and declaration made that he is the purchaser His liability to make a deposit of 25 per cent of the purchase-money only arises after such a declaration is made. As he has withdrawn the offer before the declaration, he cannot be held liable for any deficiency of price on a re-sale I therefore allow the appeal and set aside the order of the lower Court directing the appellant to pay the deficiency As the appellant's nephew bought the property, he ought to be satisfied with the property and there will therefore be no order for the costs of the appeal

Criminal Revn No 544-B of 1927, Decided on 21st November 1927, from order of Eastern Sub-Divl Mag. Rangoon, D/- 23rd August 1927, in Criminal Summary Trial No 404 of 1927

(a) Motor Vehicles Act, S. 5—Road sufficient for four cars to pass abreast—Two cars going in one direction at 15 miles an hour—Another car coming from opposite direction—Person driving baby car at 25 miles per hour passing the two cars—He is not guilty of rash or negligent driving.

Two cars were going under 15 miles per hour along the road from South to North, and while another car came in the opposite direction from North to South, G's baby car passed the two cars going towards the North. G was going about 25 miles per hour The road was at the place 40 to 50 feet wide as would give ample room for 4 cars to pass abreast with any amount of room to spare. There was no traffic of any kind on the road at the time except the 4 cars G was not shown to be over the wrong side of the road.

Held, that there would be ample room for a very small car like that of G to pass without trenching on the right hand side of the road Even if he did go slightly over the middle line the car coming in the opposite direction had 20 feet in which to swing to its left. G's driving could not therefore be assumed to be reckless or negligent ; an estimate speed of 25 miles per hour could not be regarded as anything out of the ordinary, on that road. [P 14, C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 250—Compensation

Where a case is not wilfully false nor is there perversion or exaggeration of evidence, compensation should not be awarded [P 14, C 2]

M. A Rauf—for Applicant

Order.—All that has been proved in this case is that there were 2 cars going along the road from South to North, and while another car came in the opposite direction from North to South, the applicant passed the two cars going towards the North The two cars going North, were going at something under 20 miles per hour, the applicant was going about 25 miles per hour, although his car being a Baby Peugeot, it may have seemed to be unimitiated as going faster The road is wide at the place, 40 to 50 feet, according to P W 2, and that would give ample room for 4 cars to pass abreast with any amount of room to spare There was no traffic of any kind on the road at the time except the 4 cars, in question Whether the applicant was over the wrong side of the road, is not shown Cars going at 15 miles per hour are slow traffic for cars, and they should be well over to their left if they were being driven properly, and there would be ample room for a very small car like that of the applicant to pass without trenching on the right hand side of the road Even if he did go slightly over the middle line, the car coming in the opposite direction had 20 ft in which to swing to its left, and it might be expected to do so ; among decent drivers there must always be certain amount of give and take On these facts that have been proved I entirely fail to see where reckless or negligent, driving can be assumed I am unable to feign ignorance of the usual conditions of one of the best known roads in Rangoon, and on that road an estimate speed of 25 miles per hour cannot be regarded as anything out of the ordinary

I set aside the conviction and sentence, and acquit the applicant I do not think that it is a case in which compensation should be awarded There is nothing to show that the case is wilfully false, nor does there seem to have been any perversion or exaggeration of the evidence. I merely do not consider that from the facts as stated by the complainant, and his witness, one is justified in assuming rashness and negligence

Criminal Revn No. 214-B of 1928, Decided on 25th July 1928.

(a) Penal Code, Ss. 421 and 424—Magistrate's jurisdiction is not taken away by Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

The Presidency Towns Insolvency Act does not take away a Magistrate's jurisdiction to try the insolvent for an offence under Ss. 421 and 424. 95 Bom. 63, Foll. [P 15 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 259—Complainant dying before hearing — Offence non-compoundable and non-cognizable—Magistrate can still proceed with the case.

In a case under Ss 421 and 424, Penal Code, the complainant died before the date of hearing. The Magistrate proceeded with the trial.

Held : that the offences being non-compoundable, though non-cognizable, he was right in the procedure he adopted. [P 15 C 2]

Judgment —Applicant U Mo Gaung was a paddy broker He was adjudicated insolvent by this Court. From the report of the Official Assignee it appears that his house and its site were mortgaged to Messrs Steel Brothers & Company, Limited But he never made over the Insurance Policy although the property was insured The house was destroyed by fire and the agents of the Insurance Company informed the Official Assignee that they had paid the insolvent Rs 4,925 The insolvent concealed the insurance and the receipt of the assured amount not only from Messrs Steel Brothers but also from the Official Assignee and he never made over the amount to the Official Assignee Consequently the Official Assignee in his report expressed an opinion that the insolvent was guilty of an act falling under S 103 (b) (ii), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act or in other words that he had made away with or concealed part of his property

U Po Sin, one of the creditors, applied to the Insolvency Court to direct the insolvent's prosecution The learned Insolvency Judge declined to do so, remarking that such prosecution was not recommended by the Official Assignee and that case was not of importance From that order an appeal was filed The learned Judges of the appellate Bench observed that it could not be doubted that there were grounds which prima facie, would justify an enquiry, but they declined to interfere with the exercise of the Insolvency Judge's discretion.

U Po Sin then filed a direct complaint to the District Magistrate charging U Mo Gaung with offences under Ss 421 and 424, I P C. The complaint was in order, because, nothing contained in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act takes away a Magistrate's jurisdiction to try the insolvent for an offence under those sections This view was held by a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Emperor v M H. Bhat (1) The complaint was transferred to the Second Additional Magistrate, Rangoon, for disposal. During the trial the Magistrate was transferred and the accused person claimed a de novo trial The case was accordingly adjourned for three weeks to summon witnesses On the adjourned date the complainant's advocate asked for an adjournment on the ground that he had a case in the High Court The case was adjourned When the case was called on due date the complainant was too ill to attend and the case was adjourned for nearly a month When the case was called again the complainant was reported to have died The accused's advocate asked the Magistrate to discharge his client under S 259, Criminal Procedure Code The Magistrate rejected that application From the order of rejection this application for revision has been filed

Section 259 gives a Magistrate discretion to discharge the accused when in the case instituted upon the complaint the complainant is absent on any day fixed for the hearing of the case and when the offence is one which may lawfully be compounded or when it is a non-cognizable offence The offences under Ss 421 and 424 are non-cognizable but they are non-compoundable The complainant has been examined and cross-examined His evidence can therefore, be used under S 33, Evidence Act The learned Magistrate has exercised his discretion and decided to proceed with the trial I see no sufficient reason to interfere with his exercise of that discretion I therefore dismiss this application for revision

Second Appeal No 769 of 1927, Decided on 23rd July 1928, from judgment of Dist. Judge, Toungoo, in Civil Appeal No 123 of 1927.

Evidence Act, S 115—A tenant is estopped from denying his landlord's title till he surrenders possession.

A tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord. [P 16 C 2]

A person entered into possession of a house as a tenant of A and obtained legal title to it by a conveyance from B the true owner, and sued for a declaration that his landlord A had no title to the property.

Held that he was estopped under S. 116 from denying his landlord's title till he surrenders possession A I. R. 1915 P. C. 96, Expl. and Foll. [P 16 C 2]

Judgment —The house in dispute in this case originally belonged to one U Tun U who appears to have lived in it along with his daughter Ma Dun until he died. It seems that he occupied one floor while the defendant-appellants occupied the other When U Tun U died Ma Dun left the house leaving the defendants in possession of it The defendants claim that they had, in fact, bought the property from U Tun U before his death, but had not obtained from him a registered conveyance The plaintiff came into occupation of the house as tenant of the defendants in 1924 This has been found in the present suit by the Sub-Divisional Court and had previously been found in two suits for rent brought by the defendants against the plaintiff

After he had entered into occupation of the property as tenant of the defendants, the plaintiff obtained a registered conveyance from Maung Tha Dan as the legal representative of Ma Dun, who by then had died The plaintiff has remained in occupation of the property ever since he entered into it as tenant of the defendants He now in this suit prays for a declaration of his ownership, for a declaration that the defendants have no right to the property, and that they have no right to claim rent from him and for an injunction to restrain them from continuing the second suit for rent abovementioned, which has been decided since the institution of the present suit

The question that arises in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is estopped under S 116, Evidence Act, from bringing this suit and denying his landlord's title Both the Courts below have held that he is not estopped In my opinion, both the decisions are wrong and are based on an entire misconception of the law of estoppel The Sub-Divisonal Judge held that if the plaintiff could prove that by his conveyance from Tha Dun he acquired the legal title to the property it would show that his tenancy had determined as from the date of that conveyance He also argued that since the date of that conveyance the plaintiff has been in possession as owner of the property and not as a tenant The District Judge took very much the same view. He referred to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bilas Kunwar v Desraj Ranjit Singh (1) in which their Lordships held that:

> "a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title however defective it may be so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlords."

The District Judge further held that if the plaintiff was able to prove that by his conveyance he had obtained legal title that would show that the tenancy had determined from the date of that conveyance I am unable to follow fully the arguments by which the Judge was able to hold that this present case did not come within the ruling of the Privy Council above quoted In my opinion, it clearly does come within that ruling

The whole case of the plaintiff depends on the allegation that the defendants, his landlords, never had any title at all and that the property belonged to U Tun U and passed on his death to Ma Dun and on her death to the administrator Tha Dun who, in his turn, conveyed it to the plaintiff This clearly amounts to a denial of the defendants' title at the time of the commencement of the tenancy, and it also, in my opinion, clearly comes within the very explicit rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Admittedly the plaintiff came into possession as tenant of the defendants and he has never surrendered possession to them. He is, therefore, still a tenant, and, even if his lease itself has actually determined, he is still holding on under that lease and is still in possession of it as a tenant He is very clearly estopped from bringing this suit and will continue to be estopped unless and until he delivers possession of the property to the defendants I allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in all Courts

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100— Second appellate Court is not bound by deductions of lower Courts as to negligence — Whether certain facts constitute negligence is question of law.

Negligence cannot be imputed to a subsequent purchaser of a lease, who, if he had made ordinary inquiries that an ordinary prudent man would have made in purchasing the lease, would not have come across anything which would have put him on an enquiry of a prior sale of the lease. [P 19 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 115—Laches—Length of delay and nature of acts done during the interval are material for estoppel.

Where a prior purchaser of a lease had omitted (i) to get the original lease-deed from his vendor, (ii) to report the purchase of the lease to the Collector as required, (iii) to get his name entered as owner of the lease in the Collector's registers and (iv) to give notice to the subsequent purchasers of the lease of his claim to it as soon as he had reason to believe that the subsequent purchasers were building on the land comprised in the lease, on a title which they might reasonably be expected to regard as good

Held, that the prior purchaser is estopped from asserting his title to the lease as against the subsequent purchasers. [P 19 C 2]

Kya Gaing—for Appellants.

Jeejeebhoy—for Respondents

Judgment.—The facts of this case are fairly simple. One Ma Gun had a thirty-years lease from Government of a certain holding (No. 48). The lease was in the ordinary form, with power of renewal under the Town and Village Lands Act. She sold this lease by a registered deed to the P L. T A R Firm. The firm sold the lease again to Ma Thein Yin, and Ma Thein Yin took the precaution of having the lease transferred to her name in the Collector's office—a precaution which the P L. T A. R. Firm had never taken Subsequently, the P L T A. R. Firm bought the lease back again from Ma Thein Yin The then agent asked her to give them the lease, but she put him off with some excuse and he took no further interest in the matter. The lease was not re-transferred to the P. L. T A. R. Firm, but the puchase from Ma Thein Yin was by a duly registered deed Ma Thein Yin being thus left in possession of the lease, proceeded to come to some arrangement with the Collector. She surrendered the lease to Government and received in place of it eight leases for portions of the original holding 48 The new plots were known as holding A 48 to H-48 Part of the land reverted to Government and was used for roads and, presumably, conservancy lanes The lease of one of these new plots was sold to Maung Kyaing and Ma Mya Khin by a registered sale deed by Ma Thein Yin. They got the new lease of a small plot from Ma Thein Yin and had it transferred to their name in the Collector's records. The P. L T. A R Firm now sue Maung Kyaing and Ma Mya Khin for possession of this holding (No E-48)

Unfortunately, as is so often the case, the whole matter from end to end has been dealt with as though the parties were the absolute owners of the land. The plaint says in para 1: "That plaintiff is the absolute owner of a piece of land," and the defendants in para 4 of their written statement claim that they are the absolute owners of the land As a matter of fact, all the interests that any of these parties had ever had in the land were only those of a lessee from Government on a certain lease The trial Court decreed the claim. The issues which it framed were :

(i) Whether the plaintiff was the owner of the land in suit, (i. e. holding E-48)?

(ii) Whether the defendants made a bona fide purchase of the land from the owner, Ma Thein Yin, without the knowledge of the plaintiff's title? and,

(iii) Whether the plaintiff was estopped from disputing the sale between the defendants and Ma Thein Yin by his own act and conduct?

The answers to the issues were as follows :

The first issue was answered in the affirmative, that the plaintiff was the owner of the land This, of course, was entirely wrong The owner was Government. The plaintiff may have the right of a lessee, but nothing more than that. Issue 2 the trial Judge answered in the negative, holding that the defendants were not bona fide purchasers The reason for this is that he was of opinion that Maung Kyaing made no enquiries about the said land before buying the lease from her, as Ma Thein Yin was a respectable person; and he held that, because Maung Kyaing failed to make a search in the registration office, he could not be considered a bona fide purchaser. As regards issue 3, the trial Court answered this in the negative, saying:

"There is nothing to show that the plaintiffs by their declaration, act or omission intentionally caused the defendants to believe that Ma Thein Yin was the owner of the said plot. This absence of intention on the plaintiffs' part takes the case out of the law of estoppel * * *."

On appeal by Maung Kyaing and Ma Mya Khin, the learned District Judge came to the same conclusion as the trial Court. In his judgment he discusses the question of whether registration is notice or not, finally quoting their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tilakhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (1) to the effect that notice cannot in all cases be imputed from the fact that a document can be found in the Register, and, therefore, he says that in the present instance it may be correct to say that the defendants did not have notice of the plaintiffs' purchase After this, however, he proceeds to argue that, when there are two transferees, the second transferee takes the property subject to the claims of the first transferee; and that, because the first transferee in this case had taken the whole interest of Ma Thein Yin, she had nothing to convey to the defendant-appellants. The question of estoppel, the learned Judge does not appear to have touched upon at all in his judgment

In second appeal I am asked to hold that the plaintiff-respondents were estopped from claiming the land against the defendant-appellants, who were bona fide purchasers for valuable consideration without notice A preliminary point was raised that, as negligence was a fact and not a matter of law, this could not be raised in second appeal: vide 48 Calcutta p. 1 at p 16, above quoted "* * * the proposition involved is not one of law but of fact, * * *." With this contention, I am unable to agree It is true that the lower Courts have both come to certain conclusions on facts I am bound by the facts which they have found, but I am not, in my opinion, bound by the deductions which they have made from those facts.

There is no such thing as "legal negligence," and "negligence" is, I think, nowhere defined. Whether certain facts constitute negligence is a deduction from those facts, and, although I am bound by the findings of fact by the lower appellate Court, I am not bound by its deductions from those facts. On this point I would refer to Durga Chowdharani v. Jewahir Singh (2) and Ram Gopal v. Shameskhaton (3) The facts, I have to take from the lower appellate Court. The point for consideration is: Of what transactions had Maung Kyaing notice, actual or constructive, at the time he bought his lease of holding E-48? He certainly had before him the lease issued by the Collector or Ma Thein Yin, because she transferred it to him He bought the lease on 16th August 1925, the date of the lease issued to Ma Thein Yin was 17th April 1925, four months earlier The lease was, on the face of it, good, it had not been transferred to anybody else Ma Thein Yin was living on plot No 48, which had been broken up into these eight sub-plots, and I have little doubt that an ordinary man would have bought that lease without enquiry like Maung Kyaing

A theoretically prudent man, however, perhaps should have taken more care He would have to go to the registration office to see that Ma Thein Yin had not parted with her interest in this lease. But I am not quite sure that an ordinary man of ordinary prudence would have gone behind the lease issued by the Collector to Ma Thein Yin Supposing we take a man of more than ordinary caution, he might have looked into the Collector's proceedings. What he could have found there was that this lease was issued to Ma Thein Yin by the Collector in return for the surrender of a lease of a larger piece of land of which the new holding formed part That lease, though issued to somebody else, had been transferred to Ma Thein Yin's name, and I cannot conceive of any man of ordinary prudence going any further than this. It is argued that the registration office is the place to look, and that without a search in the registration office a man cannot be held to have made the searches which an ordinary man would make But it must be remembered that these transfers of leases are not like transfers of ordinary freehold land ; for one thing, the leases themselves issued by the Collector are never registered at all, and, therefore, cannot be found in the registration office.

Another point is that, in accordance with the terms of the lease, all changes have to be reported to the Deputy Commissioner within one calendar month under penalty, and the Collector will only recognize people the transfer to whom has been reported to him ; and, therefore, I hold that any man who satisfied himself of the genuineness of a lease that has been issued in the name of his vendor, or transferred to his vendor by the Collector, and that there has been no dealing with it reported in the registration office from the date of issue up to the date of sale, has done all that any ordinary prudent man could be expected to do. I do not say for a moment that Maung Kyaing did all these things, but had he done so, it is quite clear that he would have found no suggestion that the plaintiff firm had any interest whatsoever in this lease, and, therefore, he can only be held to have notice of what he would have discovered —this is nothing at all.

On the other hand, we have to consider the position of the plaintiff firm The plaintiff firm by the negligence of their agent had undoubtedly put it in the power of Ma Thein Yin to defraud, and she availed herself of the opportunity Had the plaintiff firm's agent insisted on her making over the lease itself, she could not have surrendered it to Government On her saying that she could not find the lease, all that the plaintiff firm had to do was to report the fact that they had bought the interests of Ma Thein Yin to the Collector, and he would no doubt, after enquiry, have entered them as the new lessees They did not do this I note that the original lease, which is on the file of the record, though it has twice been bought by this particular firm, has never been transferred to them at all It is true that it has been laid down that it is not always negligence to fail to secure the title-deeds of land mortgaged to anyone : [vide Imperial Bank of India v. U Rai Gyaw Thu & Co Ltd. (4), and A. L.R.M Chettyar Firm v. L P R Chettyar Firm (5) ] But it must be remembered that in this case it was the purchaser who failed to get his title-deeds from his vendor and not the mortgagee who failed to get his title-deeds from the mortgagor ; and in a case like this, where this title-deed is a Government lease, I should say that to fail to get the lease itself, and also to fail to report the transfer to the Collector, or to get it entered in the Collector's books, is undoubtedly negligence

My attention has been drawn to Ex. J. This is a certified copy of the sale-deed by Ma Thein Yin to Maung Kyaing of holding E-48 This, the present agent of the firm says, he found when he took over the office from his predecessor It was issued on 4th November 1925, presumably to the firm When this copy came into the possession of the firm, they must be held to have had notice of the transfer of the lease of holding E-48 by Ma Thein Yin to Maung Kyaing, and, therefore, they were aware that Ma Thein Yin was swindling Maung Kyaing and themselves No notice of their claim to this piece of land was given to Maung Kyaing until 17th May 1926, when he was just on the point of finishing the house which he erected on the land In other words, they allowed him to build the house first throughout the whole working season, and then claimed the land It is impossible for a plaintiff who does this sort of thing to ask for any equitable relief I hold, therefore, that the defendant-appellants, had they made ordinary enquiries that an ordinary prudent man would have made in this particular case, would not have come across anything which would have put them on enquiry as regards the plaintiff firm having any interest in this lease.

I hold also that the plaintiff firm is estopped from asserting their title to the lease of holding E-48, because they failed —(i) to get the original lease-deed of holding E-48 from Ma Thein Yin ; (ii) to report the purchase of the lease of holding E-48 from Ma Thein Yin to the Collector ; (iii) to get themselves entered in the Collector's Registers as the owners of that lease ; and, (iv) to give notice to Maung Kyaing of their claim to the land as soon as they had reason to believe that he was building on the land on a title which he might reasonably be expected to regard as good I, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of

Judgment—In Civil Regular No. 169 of 1906 of the District Court of Thaton a scheme was settled for the managment of the affairs of the Kyaiktiyo Pagoda and seven trustees were appointed for life, their tenure of office being otherwise terminable only by resignation, misconduct or prolonged absence R 26 of the scheme gave the trustees power with the permission of the Thaton District Court to frame rules for the guidance of the public provided that they were not contrary to the formulation of the scheme R. 26 clearly gave the trustees power only to frame bye-laws within the purview of the scheme and was not intended to give either themselves or the District Court power on mere application to vary the original scheme

In Civil Misc. Case No. 5 of 1927, the District Court of Thaton on the application of the existing trustees varied the scheme to the extent that the tenure of office of the trustees should be for three years, an election to be held triennially on 1st August it being agreed that the existing trustees should cease to hold office on 1st July 1927. An election was held on 7th August 1927, and the old trustees who stood for election did not secure re-election Disputes as to handing over the trust property led to an order from the High Court that the existing old trustees should hold office until the result of the election was confirmed by the District Court

In Civil Misc. Case No 56 of 1927, the District Court of Thaton, after hearing objections as to the irregularities in the course of the election, confirmed the election of the new trustees Five old trustees have now applied to this Court in appeal urging that the holding of the new election is invalid since the District Court, Thaton, has no power on mere application to vary the original scheme The situation is somewhat piquant since it was on the application of the five old trustees that the original scheme was varied This, however, does not operate as an estoppel against them since, if their contention be correct, the whole of the proceedings in connexion with the variation of the scheme were annulled ab initio.

Proceedings in connexion with the variation of a trust such as the Kyaiktiyo Pagoda Trust are governed by S 92, Civil P C On a plain construction of S 92, it would appear that where it is desired to vary the terms of an express trust the proper course to adopt is for the Advocate-General, or two or more persons with his permission, to institute a suit to obtain such variation But it has been held in the past that, where such a trust has been constituted by suit, subsequent variation of the trust can be made within that suit itself and that no fresh suit should be filed.

In Veeraraghavachariar v. Advocate-General of Madras (1), the law on the subject has been discussed at great length by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court which, after reviewing exhaustively the case-law on the subject, has laid down the proposition that where a scheme has been framed, any modification o ralteration of the scheme is in effect a new scheme and power to frame is given only subject to the conditions specified in S 92 although there may be cases in which the Court reserves to itself the right to allow aperson or persons to apply for a relief which will come within S 92, Civil P C.

Our attention has been drawn to U Ba Pe v. U Po Sein (2), a Bench ruling of the Rangoon High Court which contains the following passage .

" It has been repeatedly held that in suits under S 92 of the Code, which in England would have come before the Courts of Chancery, the Court which framed a scheme has power to vary it "

This judgment was delivered prior to the publication of Veeraraghavachariar v. The Advocate-General of Madras (1)

The comment quoted is obiter since the point for decision in U Ba Pe v U Po Sein (2), was :

" that where a Court reserves to itself the right of confirm elections held under a scheme framed by it under the provisions of S 92, Civil P. C., and where application for confirmation it made by parties on the one side in the suit and is opposed by parties on the other side, the order is a decree in the suit itself and is, therefore, appealable as a decree under the Code. "

It will be seen therefore that the point at issue did not come within the purview of S. 92 and that the decision of the Bench was not in conflict with the decision of the Full Bench just quoted We are in complete agreement with the conclusions come at in Veeraraghavachariar v. The Advocate-General of Madras (1) and would merely add that it seems to us only right that where the presence or consent of the Advocate-General was necessary for the purposes of formulating a trust scheme his presence or consent should equally be necessary for varying it particularly in such a case as the present one where the trust affects the interests of the whole community If it were possible by mere miscellaneous application to vary the trust it would be possible for a small party of local inhabitants to alter the terms of the trust to the detriment of worshippers from remote parts of the province whose interests it would be the duty of the Advocate-General in a regular suit to protect.

We have been asked to hold that the election is valid under the old rules. This we cannot do for two reasons : (1) because the resignation of the old trustees was clearly provisional on the introduction of their proposed scheme and (2) because it cannot be assumed that the electors who would be willing to elect trustees for a term of three years would be equally willing to elect these trustees for life, although the converse proposition might well apply We, therefore, hold that the whole of the proceedings commencing with Civil Misc No. 5 of 1927 are void and that the appellants are still in office as trustees of the pagoda

We may point out in passing that there are two vacancies which should have been filled up under the original scheme which provides for seven trustees. As the present situation has been created entirely by the act of the five appellants they will pay all the costs of the litigation. Advocate's fee in this Court five gold mohurs.

Judgment —Shwe So sued U Kyaw Lu and Maung Shwe Hpyu for recovery of possession of land under S 9, Specific Relief Act, alleging that he had been wrongfully dispossessed on 9th May 1927. It was argued that the suit was not maintainable as an order had been passed against Shwe So by the Sub-Disvisional Magistrate, Maubin, under S 145, Criminal P. C. The learned District Judge Maubin, however, decided that the order under S. 145, Criminal P C , was no bar and decreed the suit This Court is asked to revise the order on the ground that the conclusion of the learned District Judge that the order under S. 145 is no bar was erroneous. It is clear from the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, in Criminal Misc. No. 57 of 1927 that dispossession took place long before the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, which merely confirmed the status quo. Under these circumstances, as pointed out in Juala v Ganga Prasad (1), the order under S 145 of the Code was no bar

In that case it was furthermore held that as another remedy was open to the applicant interference by way of revision was not called for I would go further and say that the High Court has no power of revision in the present case since the learned District Judge was deciding a point of law and not of jurisdiction in deciding that a suit lay, and the priciples laid down by the Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v Sheo Baksh Singh (2) would apply For the above reasons this application is rejected with costs

First Appeal No 87 of 1928, Decided on 4th July 1928, from the judgment of the Original Side in Civil Regular No 13 of 1927.

(a) Burma Laws Act (1898), S. 13 (1)—Buddhist Law means not Buddhist law prevalent in Burma but law applicable to Buddhist parties—Chinaman residing in Burma is not, therefore, debarred from disposing of property by will.

The Dhammathat is not an exclusive lex loci and the expression "Buddhist Law" is not limited to the Buddhist Law prevalent in Burma The expression "Buddhist Law" in S. 13 (1) means the law applicable to the Buddhist parties in the case And although it has been held with regard to the law of marriage, that Buddhist law means Buddhist law prevailing in Burma, and the ruling is binding, yet it cannot be extended to the law of inheritance. A Chinaman domiciled in Burma, therefore, can dispose of his property by will, although such disposition is contrary to Burmese Buddhist Law, because it is the Chinese customary law which governs the succession to the estate of a Chinaman domiciled in Burma : (1881) *L. (b) Buddhist Law (Chinese)—Chinese domiciled in Burma have custom whereby they can dispose of property by will—They also have customary rules of inheritance which are in conflict with Burmese Buddhist law—These customs ought to govern Chinese Buddhists in Burma.

A custom having the force of law is prevalent among Chinamen in Burma whereby they dispose of their property by will—a custom which is opposed to the provisions of the Burmese Buddhist Law They also have customary rules of inheritance which are in conflict with those to be found in the Burmese Buddhists. It is these customs which should govern Chinese Buddhists in Burma A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 29 ; 24 Mad. 650 , Mr. Anwaruddin's case, (1917) 1 K. B. 649 , Chetti v. Chetti, (1909) *P. (c) Buddhist Law (Burmese) — Keittima adoption—Adoptive father having already natural son—Adoptee (plaintiff) not treated as natural children were treated—Plaintiff described as son in adoptive father's will but not given equal share with natural sons—Father giving plaintiff power-of - attorney describing him as son—Power - of-attorney less extensive than one given to natural son—Plaintiff described as son in inscription on tablet in ordination hall built by adoptive father and in tombstone of adoptive parents—Natural son married to plaintiff's neice which would be impossible if they were brothers—Plaintiff had not status of Keittima son but was merely fondling—Description as son in inscription and tombstone did not prove his right to inherit.

Neither ceremony nor written document is necessary to constitute a keittima adoption , and fact of adoption can be inferred from a course of conduct which is inconsistent with any other supposition, but there must be proof of the publicity given to the relationship.

The alleged adoptive father had already an eldest son before he adopted plaintiff. Plaintiff received no proper education, did dot receive the same amount of pocket money or kind of clothes, and he slept in the bedroom of the clerks. He was never treated as an equal with the natural children. He was, however, described as son in the power-of - attorney which the adoptive father gave him as also in his will But the power-of-attorney was less extensive than the power given to the natural son and he received a very minor share in the will. The natural son was married to the neice by marriage of plaintiff which would not be possible if the plaintiff and that son were regarded as brothers. He was described as "son ko Pyu" in the inscription in a tablet in a Them or ordination hall built by the adoptive father ; and on the tombstone of his adoptive parents he was described as son.

Held that under these circumstances plaintiff could not be said to have proved that he was adopted by the adoptive father with the intention that he should be an heir to his estate and that he had the status of a Keittima son. Description as son in the inscription and on tombstone did not prove his right to inherit. He was, therefore, only a fondling and no better. [P 27 C 2]

Kyaw Din—for Appellant.

Leach—for Respondents.

Pratt, Offg. C. J.—Plaintiff Chan Pyu alias Chan Kyin Hlyan, sued, on the allegation that he was the "keittima" adopted son of Chan Ma Phee deceased, for a declaration that the will of Chan Ma Phee was invalid, for administration of the estate, and for a one-fifth share therein. Chan Ma Phee was a Chinaman from Amoy, who settled down in Burma at the age of 16 or 17. He married a Burmese Buddhist wife by name Ma E Mya. He left a will at his decease in which he bequeathed to plaintiff and his children after him the income of certain property. Plaintiff's case was that Chan Ma Phee being a Buddhist the Burmese Buddhist law was applicable to him and he (i. e. Chan Ma Phee) could not make a will.

As "keittima" adopted son plaintiff claimed under the Burmese Buddhist law a right to succeed on an equality with the natural sons. The defence was that although Chan Ma Phee was a Chinese Buddhist he was governed by Chinese customary law and had the right to make a will. It was denied that plaintiff was adopted with any right of inheritance. The two main points for decision therefore were, whether the deceased was governed by Chinese customary law, and if not, whether it was proved that plaintiff was his "keittima" adopted son under the Burmese Buddhist law. It is not disputed that, if it is held that the succession to Chan Ma Phee's estate is governed by Chinese customary law, plaintiff's case falls to the ground.

The learned Judge on the original side framed as first issue:

"what law governs the succession to Chan Ma Phee's estate"

but after discussing the authorities on the point, came to no decision on this issue and held that on the assumption that Burmese Buddhist law was applicable plaintiff had failed to prove that the deceased adopted him as his "keittima" son, and had therefore, no claim to inherit. The suit was accordingly dismissed. To my mind under the circumstances the more satisfactory course is to decide first what law applies to the succession to the deceased's estate. It has been the almost invariable practice for the Courts of this province to apply the Chinese customary law, so far as it was known, to the succession to the estate of Chinese resident in Burma. The right of the Chinese to make wills has also been recognized to which fact the insertion in the Burma Courts Manual, and before that in the Lower Burma Courts Manual and the Upper Burma Courts Manual, of an appendix on Chinese wills is eloquent testimony.

It is, however, contended on behalf of plaintiff that in the rule laid down in S. 13 (1), Burma Laws Act (1898) that where in any suit or other proceeding in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste, the Buddhist law shall form the rule of decision in cases where the parties are Buddhists, except in so far as such law has by enactment been altered or abolished, or is opposed to any custom having the force of law, the words "Buddhist law" must be interpreted to mean the Buddhist law prevailing in Burma.

In Hong Ku v Ma Thin (1), it was held by the Special Court of Lower Burma that the Buddhist law as administered in Burma is not usually applicable to Chinese residents. In an exceedingly able and erudite judgment Jardine, J., discussed the construction of S. 4, Burma Courts Act (corresponding to S. 13 of the present Laws Act) where the words used are also:

"the Buddhist law in cases where the parties are Buddhists," and observed:

"I know of no authority for the proposition that the Dhammathat or even the general body of Buddhist law is an exclusive lex loci. Under S.4, Courts Act it becomes one of several leges fori."

He also pointed out that in S. 4 of the Courts Act the word Buddhist is not limited by such words as Burmese, religious or written. Towards the end of the judgment he further remarked:

"questions of a similar kind are also liable to arise wherever Chinese communities are settled, and the Chinamen are found everywhere, especially in the towns."

In the judgment reference was also made to the received opinion of the Judges of the Supreme Court at Hongkong that a Chinaman can make a will, subject to the vague control of the family or clan. Jardine, J.'s Judgment in Hong Ku's case (1) was discussed in the Bench ruling of the Lower Burma Chief Court in Fone Lan v Ma Gyee (2) by Fox, J., who held that in S. 13, Burma Laws Act the term Buddhist law must be read as meaning the law of succession, marriage etc., applicable to the Buddhist parties to the case, and that the law of succession applicable to a Chinese Buddhist was customary law wholly unconnected with the Buddhist faith.

This ruling was followed in Maung Kwai v Yeo Choo Yone (3), where a Bench of the Lower Burma Chief Court held that the Chinese customary law is the law of succession applicable to Chinese Buddhists and contemplates the disposition of property by will. In Maung Po Maung v. Ma Pyit Ya (4) where both the parties were Chinese, it was held by a Bench of this Court, after discussing the authorities at length that the law of inheritance applicable is the Chinese customary law. This was applied to the estate of a Chinese Buddhist woman who had taken a Burman for her second husband In Ma Sein v Ma Pan Nyun (5), the Bench went still further and held that, where a Burmese woman married to a Chinese Buddhist attached herself to the Chinese community and adopted her husband's religion, succession to her estate was to be governed by Chinese Buddhist law that is to say Chinese customary law.

In Man Han v. R M. A L Firm (6) Chari, J , doubted whether Chinese customary law would apply to the property acquired by the wife by her personal exertions.

Recently, however, in Ma Yin Mya v Tan Yauk Pu (7), it was held by a Full Bench of this Court (1) that the Burmese Buddhist law regarding marriage is prima facie applicable to Chinese Buddhists as the lex loci contractus (2), that to escape from the application of Burmese Buddhist law regarding marriage a Chinese Buddhist must prove that he is subject to a custom having the force of law in Burma and that that custom is opposed to the provisions of Burmese Buddhist law applicable to the case ; and (3) that in case the matter in issue is the marriage of a Buddhist Chinaman with a Burmese Buddhist woman, he must show that the application of the custom having the force of law will not work injustice to the Burmese Buddhist woman.

It has been argued before us with great plausibility that the effect of this ruling is that the Burmese Buddhist law will extend to the case of the inheritance to the estate of a Chinese Buddhist resident in Burma. In the course of his judgment in Ma Yin Man's case (7) the learned Chief Justice observes .

" the phrase in S. 13 (1), Burma Laws Act is "the Buddhist law where the parties are Buddhists" and not the Burmese Buddhist law. We know that there are Chinese, Tibetan, Sinhalese and Chittagonian Buddhists. The only Buddhist law, however, in my opinion of which the Courts in this province have ever taken cognisance is Burmese Buddhist law. And for a foreign Buddhist to escape from the application of Burmese Buddhist law he must show that he is subject to a custom having the force of law in this country and that that custom is opposed to the provision of Burmese Buddhist law applicable to the case."

It is clear from this passage that the learned Chief Justice's view was that the expression Buddhist law in S 13, Burma Laws Act means the Buddhist law prevailing in Burma His answer to the reference, in which the other Judges concurred, however, was confined strictly to the Buddhist law of marriage, where the important point is the lex loci contractus. There is therefore to my mind no obligation to extend the ruling regarding the law of marriage to the law of inheritance.

The view of the Chief Justice regarding the interpretation of the terms Buddhist Law in S. 13 (1) must be regarded as an expression of his personal opinion, and as such is entitled to great weight, but it was not necessary (to decide the exact connotation of S. 13) in order to answer the question referred. The expression of opinion on this point cannot be taken as of the Bench as a whole, and I do not therefore consider we are bound by it. Personally I incline to the view of Jardine, J., already referred to that there is no authority for the proposition that the Dhammathat is an exclusive lex loci and that the expression Buddhist law is not limited to the Buddhist law prevalent in Burma.

I agree with Fox, J.'s interpretation in Fone Lan's case (2) that Buddhist law means the law applicable to the Buddhist parties in the case. I notice that S. 1 (3), Burma Laws Act, lays down that, save in so far as it applies expressly or by necessary implication to particular territory only, it extends to the whole of British India. It would seem a legitimate inference that in S. 13 (a) the words Buddhist law extend at least to the Buddhist law prevailing in parts of India outside Burma, in the same way that the section comprehends the different schools of Hindu and Mahomedan law in India. I would also observe that strictly speaking the expression Burmese Buddhist law is to my mind a misnomer since it connotes the customary law of Burmese Buddhists, which is of Hindu origin, although it is true that the Vinaya is inter alia a repository of Buddhist ecclesiastical law. It is my considered opinion that it must be regarded as settled law that ordinarily Chinese customary law governs the succession to the estate of a Chinaman domiciled in Burma. If it be held that the words " Buddhist law " in S. 13 mean " Burmese Buddhist law," then I have no hesitation in holding that a custom having the force of law is prevalent amongst Chinamen in Burma whereby they dispose of their property by will, a custom, which is opposed to the provisions of the Burmese Buddhist law applicable.

The evidence of Mr. Taw Sein Ko and the Honourable Mr. Ah Yain is conclusive. They are the two authorities on the subject in the country and to reinforce them we have the consistent practice of the Courts in recognising Chinese wills. It must also be regarded as established that the Chinese Buddhists in Burma have customary rules of inheritance in conflict with those to be found in the Burmese Buddhist law. With reference to the right of the Chinese Buddhists to dispose of their property by will the Privy Council case of Maung Dwe v Khoo Haung Shein (8) is interesting.

This was a case where the husband disposed of his estate by will, and a suit was brought to determine the succession to his wife's estate. The Burmese Buddhist law was applied by consent, although the deceased was the widow of a Chinese Buddhist. Their Lordships at the end of their judgment commented on the peculiar feature that though the whole theory of succession depended upon the strict Buddhist view that intestacy is compulsory, this had so far been impugned upon that a Chinese Buddhist was allowed to test. Assuming, argumenti causa, as the learned trial Judge has done that the Burmese Buddhist law applies, it has to be considered whether plaintiff has proved that he was the keittima adopted son of Chan Ma Phee.

(8) A. I. R. 1925 P.C. 29=3 Rang. 29=52 I.A. 73 (P.C.).

The law on the subject has been very clearly and definitely explained in a succession of judgments of their Lordships of the Privy Council. In Ma Me Gale v Ma Sa Yi (9), it was laid down that neither ceremony nor written document is necessary to constitute a keittima adoption. There must be, on the one hand the consent of the natural parents, and on the other the taking of the child by the adoptive parent with the intention and on the footing that the child shall inherit. In Ma Ywet v. Ma Me (10), it was further ruled that not only is a formal ceremony not necessary to constitute adoption, but the fact of adoption can either be proved as having taken place on a distinct and specified occasion, or may be inferred from a course of conduct with is inconsistent with any other supposition.

But in either case publicity must be given to the relationship, and the amount of proof of publicity required is greater in cases of the latter category, where no distinct occasion can be appealed to. In the later case of Ma Than v. Ma Pwa Thit (11) (also dealing with the question of keittima adoption) the facts that the claimant had lived continuously in the house of the deceased from her babyhood for 12 or 13 years, that the deceased was entered on the school register as her parent and had paid the school fees, that the claimant had been given jewellery by the deceased to wear and that her clothes were also paid for by him were held to be strong evidence of the notoriety and publicity of the adoption

In the present case the main point to be established is that the plaintiff was adopted by Chan Ma Phee with the intention that he should be an heir to his estate It is not disputed that plaintiff was brought up from the time he was about seven years of age in Chan Ma Phee's household ; but it is alleged by the defence that there was no intention that he should inherit and that he was merely what the Chinese term a fondling adopted son with no rights of inheritance, corresponding to what the Burmese Buddhists call an apathitta or casually adopted son, who can only inherit in the absence of natural or keittima adopted children (After dealing with oral evidence the judgment proceeded) It is patent that there was no formal adoption of plaintiff. It has therefore to be considered whether the fact of adoption with rights to inherit can be inferred from the treatment of Chan Pyu by Chan Ma Phee and from the position he occupied in his household. The strongest evidence to prove that plaintiff was adopted as a keittima son is on the face of it the power-of-attorney, Ex A, given to him by Chan Ma Phee in which plaintiff is described as his son, an inscription on a tablet in a Thein or ordination hall built by Chan Ma Phee and Me E Mya, in which he is described as "son Ko Pyu" and the tombstones of his adoptive parents on which he is described as son. His mention as adopted son in the will is also relied on, although, as I will point out later, the terms of the will, are in my opinion against his claim.

(9) [1904] 32 Cal. 219=4 L. B. R. 172=8 Sar. 743 (P.C.).

(10) [1907] 36 Cal. 978=3 I. C. 797=36 I. A. 192 (P.C.).

Even if the Burmese Buddhist Law is to be applied, it is impossible under the circumstances to rule out from consideration the fact that the deceased Chan Me Phee was in fact Chinese, observed Chinese customs, and ceremonies, and was a Taoist, a Confucian, and an ancestor worshipper, as well as a Buddhist As regards the power-of-attorney, it is to be noted that the natural son Chan Chor Lye was given a much wider power-of-attorney, and that plaintiff never was manager of Chan Ma Phee's business

There is evidence of experts in Chinese custom, that the Chinese are fond of euphemism, and that a fondling son might well be described as a son in a power-of-attorney The same remarks would apply to the inscription in the "Thein," but this is of less importance as it was kept under lock and key, and there is no evidence by whom it was erected It may be observed that it is unlikely that Chan Ma Phee would apply the expression 'elder brother' "Ko" to an adopted son and that the use of the word makes it more difficult to believe that Chan Ma Phee was responsible for the wording of the inscription

As regards the tombstone inscription, it is clear that they have not the same significance, as they would have, had Chan Ma Phee been a Burmese Buddhist. It should be noted moreover that Ma E Mya herself appears to have adopted Chinese customs, and was given a Chinese funeral with all its ritual and ceremony It is proved that amongst the Chinese the words used in inscription on tombstones are largely conventional. Moreover the names of children of another adopted son, who admittedly had no status to inherit, appear as mourners before the natural grandchildren. The Minister of Forests stated that his own fondling adoptive brother who was also like plaintiff, Burmese, was given first place in the inscription on the tombstone of his father It is obvious therefore that the documents and inscriptions under the circumstances are not conclusive evidence that the plaintiff was the keittima adopted son of Chan Ma Phee.

As regards the will, the fact that plaintiff was only given a minor legacy must in view of the size of the estate, be considered proof positive that though Chan Ma Phee called him his adopted son, he did not in fact place him on the same footing as his sons by birth When the evidence for the defence is examined it must be regarded as proved up to the hilt that plaintiff never had the status of a keittima adopted son. The evidence against his claim is overwhelming It is proved that Chan Ma Phee's eldest son was born before plaintiff was taken into the household There was therefore no need for a son to represent Chan Ma Phee before his ancestors. Had there been such a necessity his own brother's son was available, and by Chinese custom would certainly have been selected, if the intention was to adopt a son with full rights. It is abundantly proved that plaintiff was never treated in the family in the same way as the natural sons He was given no proper education in Burmese and was never taught English. He was not treated so liberally in the matter of pocket money or clothing and he did not sleep in the same bed room with them but with the clerks

The evidence has been dealt with in extenso by the trial Judge and it is not necessary to refer to the witnesses in detail, but I observe that Ma Shwe Mya's own sister deposed that she had never heard that Nga Nga Pyu had been adopted (that is from a Burmese point of view) by Chan Ma Phee. U Thet She, admittedly a man of great influence in the Delta, and of very considerable wealth, a first cousin of both Ma E Mya and plaintiff's own mother Ma Le and an intimate friend of Chan Ma Phee's family stated definitely that Chan Ma Phee took Nga Pyu out of pity and brought him up and that he had nothing to do with inheritance (at p. 359). He was not treated as his own son (p 356) and deposes, 'did not receive the same education. pocket money, or clothes, and had his meals at a different table' His evidence alone is conclusive U Thein Maung another friend of the family, a retired Extra Assistant Commissioner, gave similar evidence. He points out that the plaintiff never came to visit Chan Ma Phee during his illness. It is not disputed that plaintiff did not visit his adopted father for eight months before his death and thereafter never visited Ma E Mya prior to her death.

Another important point is that plaintiff was married under Chan Ma Phee's auspices to a sister of Lim Chin Tsong, but this did not prevent Chan Ma Phee from subsequently marrying his own son to Chin Tsong's daughter, which he would never had done had he regarded plaintiff as on the same footing of his own sons, for he would have been marrying one son to the niece by marriage of another. It is clear from the evidence of Khoo Sein Kho (p 467, and Taw Sein Kho (p 119, 420) It is also significant that at the funeral of both parents, the golden flag was carried by Chan Chor Lye and not by plaintiff as he alleged It is unnecessary to discuss the evidence further I agree with the trial Judge that it is not proved that plaintiff was adopted by Chan Ma Phee with the intention that he should be an heir to his estate and had not the status of a keittima son I would dismiss the appeal with costs

Cunliffe, J —I am of the same opinion, and have nothing to add on the facts, in deference, however, to the arguments addressed to us by counsel, I desire to state my opinion on the law arising

Section 13, Burma Laws Act, is in the following terms :

"13. (1) Where in any suit or other proceeding in Burma it is necessary for the Court to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage or caste or any religious usage or institution,

(a) the Buddhist law in cases where the parties are Buddhists,

(b) the Mahomedan law in cases where the parties are Mahomedans ; and

(c) the Hindu law in cases where the parties are Hindus, shall form the rule of decision, except in so far as such law has by enactment been altered or abolished or is opposed to any custom having the force of law.

(2) Subject to the provisions of sub-S. (1) and of any other enactment for the time being in force, all questions arising in civil cases instituted in the Courts of Rangoon shall be dealt with and determined according to the law for the time being administered by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

(3) In cases not provided for by sub-S (1) or sub-S (2), or by any other enactment for the time being in force, the decision shall be according to justice, equity and good conscience.

(4) This section does not extend to the Shan States."

In the Full Bench case of In re Ma Yin Mya v. Tan Yauk Pu (7), the meaning of sub-S (1) above was closely considered. Ma Yin Mya's case was one in which a Burmese Buddhist woman had married a Chinese Buddhist resident in Burma The general conclusion arrived at by the learned Chief Justice, who delivered the leading judgment, with which the other members of the Court agreed, was that the expression means, so far as Burma is concerned, the Burmese Buddhist law in cases concerning any adherents to the Buddhist religion irrespective of whether they are Burmese Buddhists or not I am exceedingly doubtful (and I only say so with great respect) whether had I been sitting on the Full Bench I should have been able to agree to this interpretation It appears to me firstly that such a reading introduces by implication into the statute an adjective qualifying the words "Buddhist law," and, secondly, having introduced this adjective the qualification is not again applied to the second use of the term "Buddhists". I incline to the view that once the term "Burmese" is introduced, the interpretation should rather read

"the Buddhist law in cases where the parties are Buddhists"

"the Burmese Buddhist law in cases where the parties are Burmese Buddhists."

The question whether the qualification should have been introduced at all may perhaps be tested by the application of some adjective to the two other provisions in the section dealing with the Mahomedan and the Hindu law Would it be possible, for example, to qualify the expressions "Mahomedan law" and Hindu law in some special way and direct that this special law in some particular province in India should apply to all Mahomedans and to all Hindus ? It may here he noted that the preamble to the Burma Laws Act provides that it is an act applicable to the whole of British India unless there is a direct statement to the contrary in any part of it There is a further difficulty also. Maung Ba, J., who is especiallly fitted to speak on such a subject [he in fact made the Reference to Full Bench in Ma Yin Mya's case (7)] appears to be exceedingly doubtful whether the term " Burmese Buddhist law" is an accurate one. In his concurring judgment, he describes it as a misnomer. It certainly seems to be so, if one attempts to put Burmese Buddhist law (so-called) in the same category as Hindu or Mahomedan law. Although there must be thousands of Buddhists in India proper, none of the corresponding statutes applying to the Indian High Courts or the Government of India Act, 1915, mention Buddhist law. In my opinion, the more correct term to be substituted would be the Burmese Common law, for as Maung Ba, J., points out, Buddhism has laid down no law applicable to secular matters. However, though I differ from the interpretation of the learned Chief Justice for the reasons adduced, the Courts of this country are in my opinion bound by his reading of sub-S. (1).

Ma Yin Mya's case (7), however, was one of marriage and to look into the judgment further, we find that on the lines of the rule followed in Simonin v. Mallace (12) and Sottomayor v. De Barros (13), the lex loci contractus was held to govern the formal requisites of the marriage. Further, reliance was placed upon the two well-known English decisions of Chetti v. Chetti (14) and Mir Anwaruddin's case (15). These four cases are instances of a resistance on the part of the English Courts to the introduction, or, rather I should say the recognition, of a theory put forward by text-book writers and certain international jurists. The theory amounts to this that personal law governs personal relations and questions involving family transactions have mostly been governed by personal law and not by the local law of the country in which one or other of the parties is residing, or where the transactions actually took place. The reason underlying these efforts on the part of the English Courts is to prevent on equitable principles, in cases of marriage, hardship or injustice being experienced by English women who have ignorantly married husbands who are foreigners in a legal sense. And by " ignorantly", I mean without a full knowledge of their husbands' family customs, personal law or religious disabilities. The learned Chief Justice has applied this principle in terms to the case of a Burmese woman marrying a native of China, who has settled down in Burma and whose family traditions are widely different from those of the Burmese. He has indeed gone even further and has held that dealing with the second part of S. 13, sub-S. (1) Burma Laws Act, no family custom of a foreigner will be recognized unless it is shown that the application of the custom will not work injustice to the native woman. [This is following a dictum of Lord Gorell's in Chetti v. Chetti (14)]

I have referred to Ma Yin Mya's case (7) at such length because it was the basis of the argument relied on behalf of the appellant to support his case as a native of this country dealing with a native of China. It would not be going too far if I say that we are now invited to extend this ruling in relation to marriage to all questions regarding succession, inheritance, caste or any religious usage or institution. The manner in which the case was put for the appellant may be paraphrased thus :

" I am a Burman. I was adopted by a native of China domiciled in Burma. The law governing my adoption must be the Burmese Buddhist law. In point of fact, my adoptive father went so far as to make a will, in which he did not recognize my adoption as he ought to have done. He put me on a much lower status than a keittima adopted son, as I claim to be. If my adoptive father is governed by Burmese Buddhist Law, he is not entitled in law to make a will at all. There is no such thing as Chinese customary law, but even if there is and it is proved to have the force of law in this county, under the decision in Ma Yin Mya's case (7) the application of such a custom on the lines put forward by the respondents will work an injustice to me a Burman."

Bound as we are, therefore, by the Full Bench ruling, as to what Buddhist Law controls Buddhists in Burma, it becomes necessary to test the appellant's arguments from the point of view of customs having the force of law. Have the Chinese Buddhists who were originally emigrants into Burma and their descendants, customs of their own in reference to adoption and inheritance? In my opinion having regard to the respondents' evidence there can be no doubt that they do possess distinctive family customs. Their view of adoption is fundamentally at variance with the Burmese Buddhist law. Incidentally it is not derived from Buddhist principles but from Taoism. The Chinese habit of making testamentary disposition of their property is widespread and cannot be seriously disputed. But if this is so, the question then arises—Have these customs the force of law? In the case of Rama Lakshmi Ammal v. Sivanatha Perumal (16), the Privy Council laid down that the legal recognition of a custom in British India depended upon its antiquity, certainty and uniformity. I have no difficulty in regard to the second and third requirements, but as to the first it is necessary to enquire what amount of antiquity the particular customs of the Chinese Buddhists in Burma have to their credit. It is obviously impossible for a Court of the British Empire to extend its enquiries much beyond its own establishment. Varying terms have been laid down. For example, in Calcutta the year 1773 constitutes the date from which legal memory is reckoned. In the case of Garuradhwaja Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (17) a Privy Council case, it was held that evidence of unbroken custom for eighty years since the British occupation is sufficient. I am satisfied that having regard to the expert testimony in this case, I am enabled to hold that the length of the prevalence within the province of the customs we are here considering is ample to bring it within the requirements of the term "legal memory."

Moreover a series of legal decisions confirming the customs in dispute is the most cogent and satisfactory evidence that such a custom has the force of law, see the opinions given in Jianutullah v. Romonikant Roy (18), and Nala Thambi v. Mella Kumara (19). There are numerous rullings in both Upper and Lower Burma confirming the customs of Chinese settlers. As to the question of hardship to the native Burman, I think adoption and marriage may be clearly distinguished. Some forms of adoption may possibly be contracts between the adoptive parents and the persons handing over the child; but "qua" the child, Burmese adoption is not a contract. It is perhaps difficult to bring adoption within a stereotyped legal category; but it seems to me in law to be a form of declaration of trust. If this view be correct, hardship to the cestui que trust need not be too closely considered.

There remain two further aspects of this appeal to which I desire to refer. The first is that there exists a great scarcity among the Indian High Court Reports of any recognition of customs imported into British India by foreigners. The reported cases of various customs belonging to shifting or peripatetic families and tribes within British India are of course numerous. I have only been able to find one, however, in which a foreigner imported a custom by emigration into India and succeeded in securing the confirmation. This was in the case of Marlathi Anni v Subbaraya Mudaliar (20), where a Bench held that migration by the widow of a Hindu subject of French India into British India and the acquisition of a British domicile enabled her to inherit her husband's estate under her own imported customary law. The learned Judges followed the dictum contained in para. 45 of Mayne's Hindu law which it may be noted is prima facie in opposition to Chetti v Chetti (14) and Mir Anwaruddin's case (15). In other parts of the British Empire the validity of personal law introduced by Indian emigrants who have acquired a domicile has been recognized in principle. See the case of Abdurahim Haji Ismail Mithu v Halimabai (21) where members of a sect of Mahomedans known as Memons had migrated to Mombassa and their family customs were adjudicated upon both by the East African Courts and the Privy Council. The Privy Council also in the case of Bartlett v Bartlett considered the validity of a will of a British Mahomedan subject domiciled in Egypt made contrary to the provisions of Mahomedan law. Their Lordships construed S. 90, Ottoman Order, as upholding the Mahomedan personal law.

In conclusion after a consideration of many cases in which customary law has been applied, I cannot help observing that most of the disputes as to whether the personal law of their caste or family shall prevail against the general law of the land have taken place between parties of the same domicile or origin, and nationality. It is rare to find persons of a different race in conflict with reference to custom. Had I not been bound by the Full Bench decision in Ma Yin Mya's case (7) as to Burmese Buddhist law controlling all Buddhists, I should undoubtedly have held that the peculiar facts of this case brought it within the legal category of sub-S. (2) or (3) or S. 13 the Burma Laws Act. The case on principle has much affinity with the decision in Ma Yait v Maung Chit Maung (22). This was the well-known Kalai case in which the Privy Council held that the testamentary powers of a Hindu Burman were not governed by either Hindu or Buddhist law, but that they were sui generis and, therefore, within the purview of the Indian Succession Act under the second part of S. 13, Burma Laws Act.

For these reasons and as I share my Lord's view of the facts, I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

Emperor

Jan Maistry and others—Accused—Non-Applicants

Criminal Revn. No. 372-B of 1928, Decided on 20th July 1928, from the order of 2nd Addl. Magistrate, Yenangyaung, in Criminal Regular Trial No. 10 of 1928

Burma Gambling Act (1899), Ss. 11 and 12—Daing should be punished much more heavily than ordinary gambler.

A comparison of the maximum fines and the maximum sentences of imprisonment under Ss. 11 and 12 clearly shows that the daing under ordinary circumstances should be punished very much more heavily than the ordinary gambler. It is the Daing who makes opportunities for other people to commit offences under S. 11 and not vice versa. [P 31 C 1]

Judgment.—The Second Additional Magistrate of Yenangyaung tried nine men under Ss. 11 and 12, Gambling Act. Some he acquitted, some he fined Rs. 10 each under S. 11, and the other two he found guilty under S. 12, Gambling Act, and fined one of them Rs. 15 and the other Rs. 20.

The accused, Maw Pet Khan, whom he fined Rs. 20 at the time of the commission of the offence, was a police-officer, and the Magistrate was of opinion that he had acted as an agent provocateur and that was the reason for punishing him more severely than the others. He, however, went out of his way to make some sweeping statements against the police in general. He says:

"It seems to me that the idea of the second accused is to create crime first and detect it afterwards. This bad practice is mostly adopted by some of the subordinate members of the C. I. D. and the police either to get promotion or to justify their existence" and in another passage of his judgment he says

"The increase of crime in Burma will not be checked unless and until the subordinates employed in the C. I. D. and the police department realize the fact that it is not paying to create the crime first and detect it afterwards."

The Inspector General of Police takes exception to these two remarks and asks that these may be expunged from the record. With this view I am in entire agreement.

The man Mawpet Khan was a police recruit of only a few months' service and his services have since been dispensed with, as he was not considered likely to turn out an efficient policeman. Because one new and unsatisfactory recruit went wrong in one instance the Magistrate was not justified in making sweeping statements against the Police force in general and the C. I. D. in particular, the more so as Maw Pet Khan was not employed in the C. I. D.

From the first passage I direct that the words from "This bad practice . . . to justify their existence" be expunged and I also direct that the whole of the second passage be expunged.

As the case is now before me, I may as well make a few remarks for the benefit of the Magistrate who tried the case.

In the course of his judgment, there is a page of quotation from a lecture by Mr. Justice Carr to the students at the Provincial Training College. The lecture was undoubtedly one containing very good advice to Magistrates; but it is quite unnecessary for a Magistrate to quote a page from it in his judgment. Most Magistrates would not have time to make unnecessary quotations in their judgments and there is no necessity for this long extract.

I would also point out that the sentences passed show a failure to grasp the relative seriousness of offences under Ss. 11 and 12 Gambling Act. The moral turpitude of gambling in itself is regarded by most people as small, and the man who commits an offence against S 11, Gambling Act merely by going to a waing and having a flutter is not really committing a crime involving serious moral turpitude The principal portion of his offence is that he is breaking the law of the country The law has been framed in the way that it is because gambling of a certain kind among certain classes of people is apt to lead to more serious crime and that, I gather, is the main, if not the only reason for which it is forbidden by law. On the other hand, the man who commits an offence under S 12, Gambling Act, is a man who is breaking the law of the country not merely for the sake of gaining a passing amusement but with the intention of making money The gambler may win, or he may lose. On the whole, the general body of gamblers lose, because the daing always wins. If there were no daings to run illegal gambling, no one could commit an offence under S. 11, Gambling Act It is the daing who makes opportunities for other people to commit offences under S. 11 and not vice versa.

A reference to the two sections will show that the law regards the offence of the daing as far greater than the offence of the mere gambler. If the maximum fines which can be inflicted are looked at, it will be seen that the daing can be punished five times as heavily as the gambler. If the maximum sentences of imprisonment are looked at, the daing can be punished three times as heavily as the gambler, and this clearly shows that the daing under ordinary circumstances should be punished very much more heavily than the ordinary gambler.

In this case the Magistrate has fined the ordinary gamblers Rs. 10 each, and the ordinary daing Rs. 15. It would be far more reasonable if the daing had been punished four or five times as heavily as the gambler

Special Second Appeal No. 707 of 1927, Decided on 25th June 1928, from judgment of the Dist Judge, Myingyan, in Civil Appeal No 51 of 1927

Easements Act Ss. 17 (c) and 18—Act does not apply to Burma—Right of receiving surface water can be acquired by custom in absence of statutory prohibition.

Courts can recognize an easement as acquirable by custom so long as they are not forbidden to do so by express statute. An easement of receiving surface water can be created by custom in Burma, where the Easements Act is not applicable and the custom is a proper one without which there could be no cultivation in that area where the custom exists. 2 U. B. R. 642 and 24 Cal. 865, Dist. [P 32 C 2]

Maung Ni—for Appellants

Jagannathan—for Respondents.

Judgment—In this case the appellants claim the land in dispute In the first place it seems to have been filed before the Township Court of Taungtha as a suit for an injunction restraining the defendants from entering upon and working the land and directing them to remove the kazins The claim seems to have been then that the plaintiffs owned certain lands which they cultivated and certain lands which they did not cultivate but from which water ran down on to their cultivable land The Township Court dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs appealed to the District Court. The District Court passed an order remanding the case for disposal on certain issues, the plaintiff's ground having been changed from that ownership of the land entered upon by the defendants to the fact that they had the right to receive the water flowing down from that land In fact, they changed their basis from that of ownership of the land occupied by the defendants to that of having an easement to receive water from that land. The case came back to the trial Court and then apparently the whole file was burnt. The present file has been re-constructed from copies and such like. The issues framed by the District Court when it remanded the suit were.

(1) Has the surface water flowed from the disputed land to the plaintiffs' lands adjoining thereto ?

(2) If so, how long have they enjoyed the right of use of it ?

(3) Are they entitled to continue the right ?

The trial Court proceeded to determine these issues. The learned Judge answered the first issue in the affirmative He answered the second issue by saying that the right has been enjoyed for more than 25 years and he answered issue 3 in the affirmative also The defendants appealed to the District Court and in appeal the learned Additional District Judge took up the position that the mere right to receive surface water not flowing in a stream and not permanently settled in a pool or tank or otherwise could not be acquired by easement He deduced this from S 17 (c), Easements Act He therefore, allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit with costs in both Courts In doing so he overlooked two points The first is that the Easements Act does not apply to Burma; and the second is that he has made a main point the fact that there is no evidence that the water flows in a stream or in a definite channel As a matter of fact, his predecessor had framed no issue on that point and, therefore, it is quite natural that there was no evidence on the point For all we know the water may have flowded in a stream. I notice that one of the witnesses does refer to the blocking of the "water-course"

It is necessary I think to clear away all idea of the Easements Act which does not apply in this country This land is apparently in the dry zone and there is ample evidence to show that it is the custom in this part of the world, where the land appears to be undulating, for only the lower ground to be cultivated and for each piece of lower ground to have a kind of catchment area attached to it. This is referred to it in the evidence as "yegya," in some places, which is translated sometimes as a "water-fall" This custom is admitted by the defendant himself for he says in his evidence in cross-examination that in that place people mostly keep water-falls, the water resources for the fields The plaintiffs' land enjoyed the water that falls from the land now in dispute and nowhere else."

Further on he says: "We cannot cultivate the place if it is kept as the water resources for the other fields" In other words the defendant himself admits that in this neighbourhood areas of land which are termed "water resources" are recognized and that one cultivator will not encroach upon the water resources of another man's fields It is quite clear that he has done so. In fact, he admitted it himself.

No doubt in the ordinary way a right merely to receive surface water would not be recognised by the Courts as an easement and if the Indian Easements Act applied, the Courts would be prevented from recognizing such a right. But as the Act does not apply in Burma there is nothing to prevent the Courts recognizing an existing custom which is obviously a proper custom and possibly a custom without which there could be no cultivation in this area at all I hold that the Courts can recognise an easement as acquirable by custom so long as they are not forbidden to do so by express statute and here there is no statue preventing it The plaintiffs have had this right for over 25 years One witness deposes to the right as having existed for as long as 40 years, and in that length of time an easement could be acquired

I have had quoted by the respondents the case of Man Hnin Nyo v Maung Kyin Thu (1). This is a very old ruling by the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma in 1892 There was no question in that case of any custom applying to cultivators for the local area and I am unable to follow the learned Judicial Commissioner when he applied the Easements Act, to Burma, the Act not so for having been extended here The other case quoted before me is Debi Pershad Singh v Joynath Singh (2) This was a case between riparian owners and is not applicable to the present case at all. I therefore set aside the judgment and decree of the first appellate Court and restore those of the Township Court The defendants will pay the costs of the plaintiffs throughout.

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 37 of 1928, Decided on 27th June 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Insein, in Civil Execution No 24 of 1926.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 90—Auction-purchaser cannot apply to set aside sale under R. 90 but under R. 91 only.

The auction-purchaser's interest comes into effect only after the sale. He is not a person whose interest is affected by the sale within R. 90. The only rule under which he can apply to set aside the sale is O. 21, R. 91. 3 Pat. L. J. 516, Foll. A.I R. 1927 Rang. 301 and A I. R 1925 All. 459, Diss. from. [P 33 C 1, 2]

K. C Bose—for Appellant.

N. N. Burjorjee—for Respondent

Judgment. — The respondent, who was the auction-purchaser, applied for the sale to be set aside on the ground of fraud under O. 21, R 90, Civil P C. The District Court set aside the sale, and the decree-holder has now appealed against that order. It is contended before us that an auction-purchaser is not a person whose interests are affected by the sale under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. It is admitted that if he is not a person whose interests are affected by the sale he cannot apply under that order to set aside the sale.

We have no hesitation in holding that the words "whose interests are affected by the sale" in the abovementioned order mean persons who have some interest in the property at the time of the sale The auction-purchaser's interest only comes into effect after the sale, and it cannot be said that his interests are in any way affected by the sale.

Our attention was drawn to a decision of Brown, J., in the case of S. N V. R. S. Subramanian Chettyar v. N. L M. Chettyar Firm (1) In that case Brown, J , following a decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ravinandan Prasad v Jagarnath Sahu (2), held that an auction-purchaser is a person whose interest is affected by the sale, and, there fore, could apply under O 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., to set aside the sale. We must say that we do not agree with this decision of Brown, J. The reasoning of the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ravinandan Prasad v. Jagarnath Sahu (2) does not appear to us to be sound. The learned Judges seem to think that the use of the word "interests" instead of "interest" in the rule makes a difference in the meaning of the words in that rule. We must say that we cannot follow this reasoning.

It is quite clear to our mind that the word "interests" mentioned in that rule refers to interest existing at the time of the sale and not to interest created by the sale The only rule under which an auction-purchaser can apply to set aside the sale is O. 21, R. 91, Civil P C., and if the legislature had intended to allow an auction-purchaser to apply under O. 21, R 90, Civil P. C , his name would have been specifically mentioned in that rule

We are fortified in this opinion by a decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Khetra Mohan Datta v. Dilwar (3). Brown, J , was mistaken in thinking that the Patna Law Journal was not an authorized report It was the authorized report of the Patna High Court till the Patna series of the Indian Law Reports was started We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the order of the District Judge with costs three gold mohurs in both Courts

Ko Maung Gale—Respondent

First Appeal No. 148 of 1928, Decided on 26th November 1928 from an original side order of Rangoon High Court.

 Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 17—Defendant grossly careless—Amendment should still be allowed unless Court thinks it to be mala fide.

However gross the carelessness may be on the part of defendant while giving his written statement, its amendment ought to be allowed unless the Court is satisfied that the object of the defendant was mala fide in that he wanted to defeat and delay the plaintiff's claim. [P 34 C 1]

A. B. Banerjee—for Appellant.

Dantra—for Respondent.

Judgment —This is an appeal from the original side of this Court, refusing to allow certain amendment of the written statement, in consequence of which judgment and decree were passed in favour of the plaintiff-respondent

The whole question turns on whether the learned Judge was justified in refusing this amendment. The defendant-appellant sought to amend para 1 of the written statement by striking out the words "and nine" and subsequently denying certain allegations made by the plaintiff in this paragraph of the plaint How an advocate and a verifying defendant could come to admit this paragraph, when in fact they intended to deny it, it is difficult to conceive The learned advocate for the appellants admits that the carelessness is gross and in saying so he is really under-stating the case But, however gross the carelessness, we are of opinion that an amendment ought to be allowed, unless we are satisfied that in fact the defendant's action was mala fide. If it were a case of mala fide with the object of defeating and delying the plaintiff's claim, we consider that it was so risky and dubious as not likely to commend itself to a litigant. In fact it left the plaintiff's claim undefended, and would be likely to be ineffective if looked on as a written statement merely filed for the purpose of gaining time. The learned advocates have admitted in argument that there was a similar suit arising out of the same fire and the consumption of another party's paddy. In that suit a paragraph similar to para. 8 of the plaint was pleaded, and was in fact denied by the present appellants. We have also taken into consideration the letter dated 21st August 1926, which appellant's advocate addressed to the plaintiff.

Taking all these facts into consideration, we are of opinion that the defendant's admission of para 9 was a mistake That being so, the learned Judge ought to have allowed an amendment but only on terms of full and adequate costs being granted to the plaintiff. Leave to amend necessarily involved an adjournment of the case and the costs accordingly must be substantial. All the evidence taken on the original side must not be thrown away, but it is clear that the services of the plaintiff's advocate have been thrown away, and the plaintiff has also been delayed in recovering his claim if in fact his claim in the end turns out to be a valid one.

We are, therefore, prepared to allow the appeal on terms. If the plaintiff pay into Court the sum of Rs. 500 as costs to indemnify the respondent-plaintiff for the loss which he has sustained within 14 days, the appeal will be allowed, and the necessary amendment asked for will be made, and the case will be remitted to the original side for disposal. On the appellants paying the said sum of Rs.500 into Court, the respondent may withdraw the same without security. The order as to stay of execution will continue till the disposal of the suit on the original side, the appellants to be at liberty to apply, on deposit of Rs 500 into Court, for refund of the Court-fee paid in this appeal.

HEALD, J.

R. Vaz—Appellant

Muni Singh—Respondent.

Spl Second Appeal No 393 of 1928, Decided on 2nd January 1929.

Transfer of Property Act, S. 3—In Burma failure to search register warrants imputing notice to transferee of prior mortgage.

In Burma a search of the registration records is particularly necessary and particularly easy, and failure by subsequent purchaser from a mortgagor in possession to make a search is a circumstance which warrants the imputation of notice to him of the previous mortgage : A. I. R. 1921 P C. 112, Expl. [P 35 C 1]

P. B. Sen—for Appellant

Judgment. — Appellant sued on a mortgage made in his favour by Abdul Gaffur and his wife Ma Tu and joined as defendants a number of persons, including the present respondent who claimed to have purchased various parts of the mortgaged property from the mortgagors.

The date of the conveyance in respondent's favour was 16th June 1919. The lower appellate Court said that because the mortgagors remained in possession of the property, and the respondent bought without notice of his mortgage his purchase was good as against appellant's prior mortgage, and in support of that view the learned Judge cited the decision of their Lordships of the Privy

Council in Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (1)

It seems clear that the learned Judge misunderstood the meaning and extended the scope of that ruling In that case their Lordships were considering the general proposition that registration of deeds is notice of its contents to all the world and the particular proposition that registration of subsequent transfer of property is notice to prior transferees. It is true that their Lordships said that notice cannot in all cases be imputed from the mere fact that a document is to be found on the Indian register of deeds ; but they went on to say that there may be cases in which omission to search the registers would result in notice being obtained and that the circumstances necessary for this purpose may be very slight

In a country like Burma, where nearly every mortgagor, who remains in possession of the mortgaged property executes at least one subsequent outright conveyance of the property in fraud of the mortgage which he has made and where under the procedure prescribed for the registration of deeds relating to lands the particulars of every transfer which is registered are reported to the revenue authorities, and under the procedure prescribed for the maintainence of the Land Revenue registers these particulars are recorded in the revenue registers in accordance with that report a search of the registration records is particularly necessary and particularly easy, and I have no hesitation in holding that in this case respondent's admitted failure to make a search was a circumstance which warranted the imputation of notice to him.

I therefore hold that the respondent must be regarded as having taken his conveyance subject to appellant's mortgage and that the land conveyed to him is subject to that mortgage.

The judgments and decree of the lower Courts in so far as they reject appellant's claim that the land conveyed to respondent is subject to appellant's mortgage are set aside, and the mortgage decree will be amended by adding to the schedule the piece of land known as holding No. 17, plot No. 87/25-26 as shown in the map (Ex. 13) filed at p. 40 of the trial Court's exhibit record.

(1) A. I. R. 1921 P. C. 112=48 Cal. 1 (P. C.).

The lower appellate Court's order for costs is set aside and the respondent will bear appellant's costs in the lower appellate Court and on the uncontested scale in this Court.

First Appeal No 166 of 1928, Decided on 27th November 1928, from judgment of Chari, J in Civil Regular No. 17 of 1928.

(a) Mahomedan Law—Marriage—Burmese Buddhist woman cannot marry a Shia unless converted to Islam.

Unless a Burmese Buddhist woman is converted to the faith of Islam prior to her marriage, no marriage can be contracted between her and a Shia Mussalman [P 37 C 2]

(b) Mahomedan Law—Marriage — Shia—Muta—Period of marriage and dower must be specified.

"Muta" is a very vague and unsatisfactory form of contract for personal relations. There must be definite time during which the relationship is to last and definite sum or thing specified as dower. [P 38 C 1]

Dantra—for Appellant.

Masani for Administrator-General — for Respondent 4

Judgment from which the appeal was preferred was as follows :—

Chari, J.—The plaintiff in this case is a brother of one Mahomed Ali Khorasany, a Shiah Mahomedan, who died at Rangoon on 26th January 1924. He claims to be the sole heir of the deceased, as being his brother, and alleges that defendants 2 and 3, young children who are admittedly the children of Mahomed Ali Khorasany, are illegitimate and therefore not entitled to inherit as sons under the Shia Mahomedan Law to the estate of their father. He asks for a declaration that he is the sole heir.

This suit was filed this year, almost four years after the death of Mahomed Ali Khorasany This by itself raises no serious presumption against the plaintiff. In Civil Miscellanous Case No 70 Ma Hla Htwe, who is said to be a Burmese Buddhist, alleging that she was the widow of the deceased Mahomed Ali Khorasany, asked the Court to direct the Administrator-General to apply for letters of administration to the estate of her husband. She later filed another miscellaneous application to be allowed to sue as a pauper She never pursued this application, which was dismissed for default She is alleged to have written a letter on 5th December 1925 to the Administrator-General of Burma that she and her sons gave up their claims in the estate of Mahomed Ali Khorasany in favour of the plaintiff The letter is not produced by the advocate who appears for the Administrator-General and even if produced would carry no weight whatever, as it was not competent for defendant 1 to give up the claims of her infant children

The question for determination is whether defendants 2 and 3 are legitimate or illegitimate children of Mahomed Ali Khorasany The evidence on the point is extremely meagre It consists only of the statements of the plaintiff himself and a cousin of his, that the deceased was not married to either Ma Hla Htwe or Annie The cousin merely says that the deceased was not married and that he would have known of the marriage if a marriage had taken place This may be true of a marriage taking place with formalities before a kazi or in a mosque. but it is quite possible that the deceased was married in a private way to these women and did not want that fact advertised. The prespmption of law is always in favour of morality and legitimacy and when it is proved that a man and a woman are living together as husband and wife, and legal presumption is in favour of a legal union and against an illegal union. Sastry Velaider Aronegary v Sembecutty Vaigalie (1) Apart from this presumption, there is sufficient evidence from which I could infer in favour of these innocent children that they were acknowledged by their father, which, under Mahomedan Law will lead to an inference of their legitimacy. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali in his book on Evidence, 8th Edition at p 798 referring to Mahomedan Law says:

"Cohabitation and birth with treatment tantamount to acknowledment is sufficient to prove legitimacy, although mere cohabitation alone will not suffice to raise such a legal presumption of marriage as to legitimize the offspring."

I am glad to note that the plaintiff gave evidence in a very straightforward manner, and admitted that on his deathbed his brother asked him to take care of the children

One Martinez gave evidence He is a Christian and says that Annie who is alleged to have been one of the mistresses of Mahomed Ali Khorasany was his daughter He says that she was not married to Mahomed Ali Khorasany. If by this he means that Mahomed Ali Khorasany was not married in Church or before the Marriage Registrar as would be required by the Indian Christian Marriage Act, he is right, but Annie is a Kitabi with whom a marriage under Mahomedan Law is allowed to a Moslem The presumption, therefore, would be much stronger of her being the legal wife of Mahomed Ali Khorasany I cannot accept or act on the evidence of a witness, the tendency of whose evidence is to put a stigma on his own daughter and bastardise his grandchild. Even he admits that the deceased always admitted that these two children were his own children

In a case of this kind where it is sought to have a declaration the effect of which is to bastardise two innocent children and deprive them of the patrimony of their father, I must have evidence much stronger and more convincing than what has been been adduced by the plaintiff, before I can come to a conclusion adverse to the children I therefore hold that the plaintiff is not the heir to the estate of his brother and the heirs are defendants 2 and 3 who are his sons This may seem to imply that defendant 1 is his widow, but as she a major does not defend the suit, and as she has renounced her claim to the Adminstrator General, it is unnecessary to declare her to be entitled to any portion of the estate of Mahomed Ali Khorasany.

The plaintiff's suit is accordingly dismissed

Judgment.—As the plaintiff-appellant was adjudicated an insolvent last August, and as the Official Assignee in whom the insolvent's estate vested wished to be joined as appellant, and was ready and willing to continue the appeal without any adjournment, we substituted him as appellant and heard the appeal

The plaintiff brought a suit to declare his right as the heir to the estate of his deceased brother, Mahomed Ali Khora-sany, and according to the plaintiff's evidence, the said deceased cohabited with Ma Hla Htwe, respondent 1, and her neice one Annie and had by them respectively two minor children, respdts. 2 & 3.

The learned Judge on the original side, by means of certain inferences and presumptions has held that these two minor children are the legitimate heirs of the deceased Khorasany. Hence this appeal.

At the trial no appearance was made on behalf of Ma Hla Htwe, or either of the minor children, and the appeal has proceeded ex parte so far as they are concerned.

The Assistant Registrar was appointed guardian ad litem over the two minors inasmuch as their respective mothers did not appear and were not making any claim upon the estate The Assistant Registrar, however, stated to the Court that he had no funds in his hands to enable him to conduct the suit and on reference being made to the Administrator-General who had obtained letters of administration to the estate, it was found that there were no funds in his hands to enable the Assistant Registrar to take an active part in the proceedings Mr Masani on behalf of the Administrator-General, has, however, assisted the Court in urging what he could on behalf of the minor respondents, and asked that the judgment appealed from should not be disturbed.

Certain evidence has been adduced at the trial. The plaintiff has not been shaken in his evidence that his brother had not married either of the women but had maintained them as his mistresses for a certain period up to the time of his death, and that he acknowledged the two minors as being his sons, but not as legitimate sons and had asked the plaintiff to look after them

No doubt, the plaintiff is an interested witness who requires corroboration He calls a cousin of the deceased A. H A Khorasany, who states that the deceased M. A. Khorasany was not married in his lifetime and that he would have known if he had been married to any one. It is not suggested that this witness has any interest He is a relative and a fairly close one who ought to be in a position to say whether his cousin was married or not. We see no reason for rejecting his evidence which, if accepted, negatives the fact that the deceased at any rate could have been married in any public way, or such as his relatives or the people of his community would know of the fact.

Then there is the evidence of Martinez, the father of Annie, the mother of the second minor If the learned trial Judge had discarded his evidence because of his demeanour and the impression which his manner of giving evidence had made upon him, we would naturally have refrained from differing with him on a question in which he was in a far better position to judge than we. But he seems to have rejected this witness' evidence because it affects the status of his daughter and the legitimation of his grand child Neither of these, in our opinion are good grounds for rejecting the evidence. He had been subpoenaed to give evidence, and as such it was his duty to speak the truth, even if this disclosed painful and unpalatable facts The learned Judge may have thought but he has not said that this Phillipino to have given evidence against the interests of his daughter and grandchild must have been tampered with by the plaintiff. There is no evidence, however, of this, and we see no reason why his evidence should be rejected If his evidence be accepted it proves that Ma Hla Htwe is a Burmese Buddhist If that is so then unless she was converted to the faith of Islam prior to the marriage, no marriage could be contracted between her and a Shiah Mussulman

These Courts have frequently to try cases where women claim to be the wives of Mahomedans and where the Courts find in fact that they are in fact not wives; but we have not observed any tendency on the part of actual wives refraining from putting forward their claim to that status. It is true that in the first place Ma Hla Htwe, respondent 1 did make a claim to be the widow of the deceased and applied to be allowed to sue in forma pauperis, but her application was dismissed for want of prosecution and as already mentioned, she has taken no steps at the trial of the present case to establish her status

Annie, the other woman concerned, is admittedly her niece At no stage since the deceased's death has she put forward any claim to be a widow of the deceased. Her father in his evidence does not claim for her a higher status than that of a mistress. He states that he asked the the deceased to marry his daughter but that the deceased, who had a number of other mistresses, merely asked to wait

The learned advocate for respondent 4 has drawn our attention to a form of temporary marriage "Muta" which is lawful among Shiah Mahomedans and asked us to presume that such a form had taken place between the deceased and these two women. "Muta" is a very vague and unsatisfactory form of contract for personal relations; but even here there must be definite time during which the relationship is to last and a definite sum or thing specified as dower.

There is no evidence nor circumstances in the present case which would justify us in presuming that such a form of temporary marriage had been arranged between the deceased and either of these women. In the case upon which the learned Judge relies, 6 Appeal Cases p. 364, there were various circumstances which fully justify the Courts in drawing the presumption of marriage In the present case, so far as we can see there is no evidence whatsoever of even living together as husband and wife On the other hand there is direct evidence that no such status in fact existed and we see no reason to reject this evidence.

The learned advocate for the appellant mentions that Annie had not been made a party to the original suit or to this appeal. This may or may not have been unfortunate, but at this late stage of the proceedings, we do not think that we would be justified in joining her now She is not consequently formally bound by the result of this appeal.

For the reasons already given, we allow this appeal, and declare the plaintiff to be the sole heir to the estate of the deceased Mahomed Ali Khorasany

In the cirumstances of the case we do not consider that any order as to costs is necessary

Opinion—This is a reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax under S 66, Income-tax Act (11 of 1922) the question referred being:

"After an assessee has made a return of his income under S. 22 (2) can the assessment be made under S 23 (4) of the Act for non-compliance with the terms of a notice under S. 22 (4)?"

The essential question raised in the argument before us is whether a notice under S. 22 (4) may or may not be issued by the Income-tax authority after the assessee has made a return of his income as required by a notice under S 22 (2).

The assessee's contention that a notice under S. 22 (4) can be issued only before a return has been made, receives some support from the case of Brijraj Ranglal v. The Commissioner of Income-tax A I.R. 1927 Pat 390 and that of Kushi Ram Karam Chand v. The Commissioner of Income-tax A.I.R. 1928 Lah 219 neither of which appear in the authorized reports. But the first of these decisions has been expressly overruled by a Full Bench of five Judges of the same Court—the High Court of Patna in Ram Khelawan Ugan Lal v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1) and the same view was taken by the two other Judges of the Court who referred the question to the Full Bench. Thus seven Judges of that Court are of opinion that the decision in Brij Raj's case was wrong. The same question has been considered by the High Court of Calcutta In the matter of Harmukhrai Dulichand (2) and by the High Court of Allahabad In the matter of Chandra Sen Jaini (3) and both of these Courts are in agreement with the decision in Ram Khelwan's case. That being so the weight of authority is very strongly against the contention advanced by the assessee. The question has been very fully discussed in the judgments quoted and we agree with the

First Appeals Nos 81 and 82 of 1928, Decided on 9th January 1929 from Dist Judge of Pyapon

(a) Deed—Construction—Mortgage or sale—Sale-deed an outright conveyance—Right of redemption expressly refused—Simultaneous agreement to reconvey if certain amount paid regularly as rent for five years—In default of any payment agreement to be void—The two documents constituted sale with right of repurchase and not mortgage.

A conveyed certain land to B by deed of sale which was in its terms an outright conveyance and contained a clause expressly renouncing any right of redemption. At the same time B executed an agreement referring to the same land, that if A would annually pay to B certain sum as rent he may repurchase the land at any time within five years by paying the original price. There was also an express provision that default in payment of the rent would render the agreement of the resale void :

Held: that on the terms of the deeds the relation of debtor and creditor did not exist. B could not have sued for the recovery of his money. The two deeds purported to be an outright conveyance with a separate agreement to reconvey on certain conditions, and not to be a mortgage. [P 40 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 114—Executants, men of experience—Strong proof is necessary to show that the deed was signed without being read over.

An ordinary sane person would have the final terms of a written document read over before accepting the deed and, therefore, when the executants are men of considerable experience it would require very strong evidence to convince a Court that the deed was signed without being read over. [P 40 C 1]

Ba Shin—for Appellants.

Ba Han—for Respondents.

Judgment.—These are appeals from decisions of the District Court of Pyapon in cross-suits, which were heard and decided together. In suit No, 44/26 the appellants were the plaintiffs. They were formerly the owners of some 444.95 acres of paddy land, but on 15th August 1925, they conveyed this to the defendants for Rs 25,000 by the deed of sale Ex. 5, which was in its terms an outright conveyance and contained a clause expressly renouncing any right of redemption. At the same time, the defendants executed the agreement Ex. 6 This deed is badly drawn and is lacking in precision, but it is common ground that it refers to the land in suit. According to the terms of this agreement if the plaintiffs annually pay to the defendants 4,000 baskets of paddy as rent, they may repurchase the land at anytime within five years by paying the original price of Rs. 25,000 at the same time as the rent of 4000 baskets of paddy. There was also an express provision that default in payment of the rental paddy should render the agreement to resell void.

The appellants in their suit claimed that these two documents together created a mortgage by conditional sale and prayed for a decree for redemption, adding an alternative prayer that if it were held that the transaction was not a mortgage by conditional sale they should be given a decree for specific performance of the agreement.

In their cross-suit, the respondent claimed a declaration of their ownership of the land and asked for a decree for its possession Both suits were decided in favour of the respondents.

With their plaint, the appellants filed certified copies of Exs 5 and 6, both of which were registered They made certain allegations that the agreement between the parties differed from the terms of the document, but so far as their first plaint goes there was no suggestion that the terms of the document differed from those agreed upon at the time by the parties. Nor when the defendants on their written statement set out the terms of Ex. 6 with considerably more precision than in the deed itself was any objection taken. It was only after some months and during the course of argument on the first three issues that the plaintiff-appellants filed a reply to the written statement and asked leave to file an amended plaint. Leave was granted and a new plaint filed In this it was alleged that certain terms had been inserted in Ex. 6 which had not been agreed to by them. The .plaint itself did not expressly allege fraud, but this allegation had been made in reply to the written statement.

An additional issue was then framed namely :

" Did the plaintiffs know the contents of the registered agreement at the time it was executed. "

This was recorded in the diary under date 17th May 1927, and not at the usual place in the record It is, however, set out in the judgment.

This issue is quite sufficient to raise the question of fraud, and the contention in para 1 of the memorandum of appeal that the District Court erred in not framing an issue on the question of fraud is without substance.

We think that this issue should first be decided. The District Judge's finding was that the plaintiff did not know the terms of Ex 6 when it was executed With that finding we agree The burden of proving fraud was on the plaintiffs, and that burden was considerably increased by the fact that in their original plaint filed when they must have been fully aware of the terms of the document they made no suggestion that these terms were not those to which they agreed The circumstances distinctly suggest that this allegation of fraud was only made in order to introduce evidence contradicting the terms of the document itself, when it seemed likely during the argument of issue 2, that otherwise such evidence would be rejected as inadmissible (Their Lordships then discussed evidence and proceeded) The real point of the evidence for the plaintiffs on this subject is that the agreement was not read over to the parties before being signed On the other hand there is a considerable amount of evidence to the effect that it was read over There are of course other discrepancies on both sides but we do not think it necessary to go into them in detail. The parties are not children but men of considerable experience and it would require very much stronger evidence than any that has been given to convince us that this agreement was signed without being read over, when the sale-deed was read, and there had been considerable difference of opinion before agreement was reached as to the terms of the agreement for repurhase In such circumstances any ordinary sane person would have the final terms, as written down read over before accepting the deed. And all the circumstances suggest that the plaintiffs were fully aware of the terms so written We find therefore that no fraud has been proved It follows that no extraneous evidence as to the terms can be admitted and that the parties are bound by the terms as contained in the two documents.

The ,next question is whether these two documents together created a mortgage by conditional sale We are clearly of opinion that they did not It is obvious that on their terms the relation of creditor and debtor did not exist. The defendant could not have sued for the recovery of his money The two deeds, are in our opinion, merely what they purport to be that is, an outright conveyance with a separate agreement to reconvey on certain conditions The prayer for redemption cannot therefore be accepted And to succeed on their prayer for specific performance, it is necessary for the plaintiffs to show that the agreement to reconvey is still in force. And to do that they must show that they have carried out the conditions laid down in the agreement itself (The judgment then discussed evidence and proceeded) A considerable amount of evidence was led to show that the land in suit was worth very much more than the amount of the purchase price. We do not consider this evidence of any importance in the case Admittedly there was consideration for the transaction and this evidence could only be relevant to show that the transaction between the parties was something different from that set out in the deeds themselves. Since the plaintiffs cannot be allowed to show this, all this evidence becomes irrelevant whatever view we might be inclined to take it

We dismiss both these appeals with costs

Order of Reference (Pratt Offg C. J. and Cunliffe, J.)—Plaintiff sued on a hundi. Objections were raised that the hundi was improperly stamped and could not be sued upon and that there was no cause of action against defendant 3. The learned Judge on the original side discussed the points raised at some length and recorded findings that the intention was to treat the document as an inland instrument, and that there was therefore no force in the arguments about its being improperly stamped, which were based on its being a foreign instrument. The Court also found that the question of the liability of defendant 3 could not be decided till a later stage of the case. An appeal was filed and on the case coming on for hearing the preliminary objection was taken that the order under appeal does not constitute a judgment within the meaning of Art. 13, Letters Patent. The principles on which the question of what constitutes a judgment under Cl. 13 should be determined, were discussed, and clearly laid down by Robinson, C. J., in Yeo Eng Byan v. Beng Seng & Co. (1) in the following words :

"I agree that a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability may rightly be held to be a "judgment," and I think that an order which merely paves the way for the determination of the question between the parties cannot be considered to be a "judgment", nor can a more formal order merely regulating the procedure in the suit or one which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication. Adopting the principle here laid down it is difficult to see how the finding now under appeal can be held to be a "judgment."

The first part of the finding that the document in dispute is an inland instrument and that there is no force in the contention that it is inadequately or improperly stamped practically amounts to a finding that the suit is maintainable and paves the way for the determination of the main question between the parties.

If eventually the suit is decided against defendants they will have the right to challenge this finding on appeal.

The intention of Art. 13 was to allow an appeal in certain cases not allowed by the Civil Procedure Code, where the rights of the parties had been determined, and the absence of a right of appeal might cause an injustice. The position is well put by White, C J., in Tuljaram Row v. M K. R. Alagappa Chettiar (2) :

"The test seems to me to be not what is the form of the adjudication but what its effect is on the suit or proceeding in which it is made. If its effect, whatever its form may be, and whatever may be the nature of the application on which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, I think the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause."

This view would rule out the present judgment. A broader view has been taken in the Calcutta cases of Budhu Lal v. ChattuGope (3) and the well-known case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. (4), and we are inclined to think too broad. We prefer Garth, C. J.'s dictum in Ebrahim v. Fuckhrunnissa Begum (5) that the word "judgment" means a judgment or decree, which decides the case one way or other in its entirety, and that it does not mean a decision or order of an interlocutory character which merely decides some isolated point not affecting the merits or result of the entire suit.

It is obviously undesirable that as soon as a preliminary point of law is decided against defendants they should have a right to appeal and hold up the trial of the suit indefinitely. It is easy to conceive a case with many legal points, which would lend itself to a number of preliminary appeals, and consequently continual postponements and delays, if appeals were allowed from every separate finding on preliminary issues

It would be most objectionable to have a case tried and appealed piecemeal in this manner. It should be observed that so far as the latter part of the Judge's order, in which he declines to give a decision on the liability of defendant 3 without further materials, is concerned, it is obviously not a judgment even by Calcutta standards.

The ruling of the Bench in the recent case of Tar Mahomed v. Zulaikha Bai (6) that an appeal lies under the Letters Patent against the finding of the High Court that it has jurisdiction to hear and decide a suit, appears, however, undoubtedly to be support for the view that the present finding that the suit is maintainable (at least that is the real effect of the finding) is a 'judgment' within the meaning of Art. 13

It is true that the findings are not identical and each case must be considered on its own merits, but under the circumstances we are of opinion that the point should be decided before a Full Bench.

We accordingly refer for the decision of a Full Bench the question whether the finding that the parties intended to treat the document on which the suit was filed as an inland and not a foreign instrument, and that the defendants in consequence cannot now rely upon any defects based upon its being a foreign instrument, a finding which had the effect of allowing the suit to proceed, amounts to a judgment within the meaning of Art. 13, Letters Patent.

Opinion

Ormiston, J.—The question referred for decision is :

"Whether the finding that the parties intended to treat the document on which the suit was filed as an inland and not as a foreign instrument, and that the defendants in consequence cannot now rely upon any defects based upon its being a foreign instrument, a finding which had the effect of allowing the suit to proceed, amounts to a judgment within the meaning of Art. 13, Letters Patent."

This involves the question of what is the meaning of the word "judgment" as used in Cl. 13 The reference arises out of an appeal from a Judge of the original side exercising ordinary original jurisdiction. The clause (which, it may be stated, is placed under the heading of "Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court") so far as material, permits an appeal to the High Court from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court. With this article may be compared Cls 37 and 38 (placed under the heading of "Appeals to the Privy Council") Cl 37, so far as material, permits an appeal to the Privy Council from any final judgment, decree or order of the High Court made on appeal and from any final judgment, decree or order made in the exercise of original jurisdiction from which an appeal does not lie to the High Court under Cl. 13. The Letters Patent apparently contemplate a Bench of two Judges sitting on the original side Cl. 38 gives jurisdiction to the High Court on the application of any party who considers himself aggrieved by any preliminary or interlocutory judgment, decree or order of the High Court " in any such proceeding as aforesaid" to grant permission to such party to appeal against the same to the Privy Council. The words " in any such proceeding as aforesaid" must, I think, refer to the proceedings specified in Cl. 37.

It may be suggested that, inasmuch as the expression used in Cl. 38 is " preliminary or interlocutory judgment, decree or order" whereas in Cl 13 the word "judgment" is used, His Majesty in Cl. 13 must have intended to have allowed an appeal to the High Court only from a final judgment. I am of the opinion that this is not the case, and that Cl. 38 must be read in connexion with

Cl. 37, the expression " preliminary or interlocutory judgment, decree or order" being used in contradistinction to the expression " final judgment, decree or order" employed in Cl. 37. The Letters Patent themselves, treated as a whole, therefore, give little assistance in construing the word " judgment" as used in Cl. 13.

It is apparent from the exceptions made by Cl. 13 to the general right of appeal thereby conferred, that the word " judgment" is intended to cover an order as well as a decree Three criteria have been suggested as means for determining whether or not an order is appealable within the meaning of the Article The first is that adopted by the Madras High Court in 1868, where a judgment is stated to have the meaning of "any decision or determination affecting the rights or the interest of any suitor or applicant."

The second is that adopted by the Calcutta High Court in 1872, and which has on very many occasions been described as classical According to this view, "judgment" means

" a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability" and it is immaterial whether it is final, or merely preliminary or interlocutory. It is this view which Mr. Hay presses on us The third criterion, which is that suggested by Mr. Young, and which may be described in contradistinction to the others as the modern view, being that laid down by the Chief Justice of the Madras High Court in 1910; and adopted by the late Chief Justice of this Court in 1924 According to this view, the test is whether or not the effect of the adjudication

" is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding";

if it has this effect the adjudication is a judgment ; otherwise not.

As is pointed out in the order of reference, it is undesirable that, as soon as a preliminary point of law is decided against a defendant, he should be at liberty to appeal and to hold up a case indefinitely, and in a suit with many legal points there might be many preliminary appeals. Against this view it is urged that the necessity of paying heavy Court-fees might act as a deterrent, although there would be no such necessity in High Courts to which the Court-fees Act is not applicable. It is further urged that the mere fact that an appeal is filed would not of itself prevent the Judge on the original side from going on with the case, although the tendency would undoubtedly be for him to postpone the hearing and thus save himself, possibly, a large amount of useless labour in taking evidence and delivering a judgment on the facts which might be rendered nugatory by the success of the appeal on the legal points. Such a system of preliminary appeals on law might indeed have its conveniences if it were practicable, as it seems to be in England, to obtain a decision of the appellate side within a few days of the delivery of the order on the original side. There can be no question, however, to my mind, but that the balance of convenience preponderates in favour of a narrower construction. While the inconvenience to which a particular construction of the word " judgment" may lead is no reason for not adopting it, if on its plain meaning it must be so construed, yet if the interpretation is doubtful, the circumstance is to be taken into account, for it is a legitimate assumption that His Majesty must be taken to have meant that the operation of the Letters Patent should tend to convenience rather than to inconvenience.

A large number of authorities of this and other High Courts have been cited to us, and these authorities I propose, as briefly as possible to review, taking them Court by Court and in chronological order The earlier view of the Madras High Court has not found favour and the view which to a large extent, to outward appearance, holds the field is that enunciated by the Calcutta High Court in 1872 It may be urged that it is undesirable to disturb a long current of judicial authority, but in my opinion, the principle of stare decisis has far less applicability to the law of procedure than to that of substantive law, and I think, when the authorities are examined, they will be found to be far less unanimously in favour of the principle contended for by Mr. Hay than, at the outset, we were led to suppose.

The decision to which I have just referred is that of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. Ltd. (4). At p. 452 of the Report, Couch, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court on a preliminary objection that no appeal lay under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865 (corresponding to Cl 13, Rangoon Letters Patent) gave a definition of a judgment which has been very frequently repeated. The definition is as follows :

"We think that "judgment" in Cl. 15 means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. It may be either final, or preliminary or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined. Both classes are provided for in Cls. 39 and 40 (corresponding to Cls 37 and 38, Rangoon Letters Patent) of the Charter. An order, such as that before us, which only authorizes a proceeding to be taken for the determination of the question between the parties, cannot be considered a judgment."

The order which was before the Court was an order refusing to issue a writ of mandamus to the Justices. It was pointed out that a mandamus if issued would not be peremptory, but merely to do certain things, or to show cause to the contrary , so that the order of the Judge does not determine any question whatever between the parties : it only initiates the proceedings by which the liability of the Justices to make compensation will be ascertained and determined. Consequently, the order is not a judgment. The interpretation of "judgment" by the High Court of Madras in 1868 is referred to only to be disapproved as being too wide. It would, the learned Chief Justice remarked, put it in the power of a vexatious litigant to appeal against all discretionary orders which the Judge of original jurisdiction may make in the course of the suit, with no result, as such orders would have to be, as a matter of course, confirmed ; and, further, it would give a far more extensive right of appeal against the orders of the Judge of the original side of the High Court than exists against the orders of a Judge of original jurisdiction in the mofussil , which he did not think it at all probable that Her Majesty intended. Then comes the passage which I have quoted at length. He then proceeds to deal with the contention that the Calcutta High Court had already put a wider construction on Cl. 15 by entertaining appeals in cases where the plaint had been rejected as insufficient, or as showing that the claim is barred by limitation, and also in cases where orders had been made in execution. These in his opinion were within his definition, and he went on to say :

"There is an obvious difference between an order for the admission of a plaint and an order for its rejection. The former determines nothing, but is merely the first step towards putting the case in a shape for determination. The latter determines finally so far as the Court which makes the order is concerned that the suit, as brought, will not lie. The decision, therefore, is a judgment in the proper sense of the term."

This passage enshrines the third criterion which I have mentioned above, and which was amply sufficient for the determination of the point at issue in the case and which was, I think, the criterion according to which the Court did decide it. Unfortunately, in some subsequent decisions this has been overlooked and stress has been laid on the dictum that the test is that the decision must be one

"which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability."

This definition, if stress be laid on the words "some right or liability," is unnecessarily wide ; if all the qualifications are taken into account, it may be too narrow, as excluding orders which, although they relate to procedure, may have the effect of finally deciding the question in issue so far as the Court passing them is concerned

In Hubbeeb v. Joosub (7), it was held that an appeal lies from an order granting leave to the plaintiff to institute a suit under Cl. 12, Calcutta Letters Patent Referring to the Madras decision of 1868, the same learned Chief Justice said that he agreed with the conclusion that the order was appealable, because it was not a mere formal order or an order merely regulating the procedure in the suit, but had the effect of giving a jurisdiction to the Court which it otherwise would not have, and that it did "determine some right" between the parties, namely the right to sue in a particular Court and to compel the defendants who are not within its jurisdiction to come in and defend the suit on pain of having an ex-parte decree passed against them.

This is an obvious reference to his own previous definition, but he appears to have ignored the qualifications of it which he himself had made. From the point of view of " merits," anything less meritorious than the question whether a litigant shall be allowed to bring his suit in one Court rather than in another it is difficult to conceive, for in theory His Majesty extends equal justice to all his subjects in all his Courts.

Ebrahim v Fuckhrunissa Begum (5) is a case which has a close resemblance to that now under reference On the settlement of issues the Judge held that a certain hibbanamah was invalid, but raised two issues as to a will. The effect of the decision was to allow the suit to proceed Garth, C J., took the preliminary point that an appeal did not lie, the suit not having been dismissed The matter was argued and it was held by the learned Chief Justice (Markby, J., not dissenting), that the decision of the original side was not a "judgment" and that the appeal did not lie He held that the word "judgment" means a judgment or decree which decides the case one way or the other in its entirety, and that it does not mean a decision or order of an interlocutory nature, which merely decides some isolated point, "not affecting the merits or result of the whole suit" He appears to have regarded "merits" as synonymous with "results of the whole suit." He distinguished the cases of the rejection of a plaint or the admission of a suit as determining whether the plaintiff has or has not a right to sue at all in the particular case, and went on to point out the possibility, if such appeals lay, of having three or four appeals all pending in one cause at the same time, and all proceeding contemporaneously with the trial of the suit in the Court below.

In Mt. Brij Coomaree v. Ramrickdass (8) it was held that an order refusing to stay the issue of probate and the discharge of the receiver appointed in a probate action is a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15. By the judgment in the action probate had been ordered to issue to the respondent and the receiver ordered to be discharged The appellant, being about to appeal, asked for a stay which the Judge refused. On appeal, Maclean, C. J., referred to Sir Richard Couch's definition, which he said was becoming classical, and stated that he concurred in it, but that it was not exhaustive. He said that as the result of the appeal from the decree in the action, a new and important question had arisen, whether under the circumstances the respondent ought to be given control of a large estate, which, if answered in the affirmative, might have the possible effect of rendering the appeal from the decree entirely infructuous I think that, in referring to Sir Richard Couch's definition. he had in mind its qualifications, and was of the opinion that the order appealed from might for all practical purposes finally determine the rights of the parties to the estate, for the reason that when the appeal from the decree came to be decided, there might be no estate left. He thought his decision was consistent with the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hurrish Chunder Chowdhry v. Kalisundari Debi (9), when dealing with the interpretation of the word "judgment" in Cl. 15, that "Mr Pontifex, J., had in fact," exercised a judicial discretion and had come to a decision of great importance which if it remained, would entirely conclude any right of Kalisundari to an execution of this suit His view, therefore, was that the test to be applied is whether the order is conclusive of the rights of the parties to the suit. Whether he correctly applied the test is another matter.

In Budhu Lal v. Chattu Gope (3), sanction to prosecute the plaintiff in a suit in the Presidency Small Cause Court was refused by a Judge of that Court The defendant applied to the original side of the High Court for a reversal of the order and obtained an order of remand to the Small Cause Court Judge It was held on appeal that the order of remand was a "judgment " The learned Judges appear to have adopted the definition of Sir Richard Couch without its qualification The decision of Sir Richard Garth was applied in a somewhat technical manner, the learned Chief Justice holding that the decision of the question as to whether the statements were made in a judicial proceeding was one which affected the merits or result of "the entire matter," for if it had been decided one way, viz , in favour of the applicants' contention it would have put an end to the proceeding altogether. The "entire matter" was whether there should be another enquiry by the Small Cause Court Judge, which might or might not result in a further enquiry by a Magistrate, which might have one of two results.

In Sarat Chandra Sarkar v. Maihar Stone and Lime Co. Ltd. (10), an order setting aside an abatement was held to be a "judgment," the reason assigned by Richardson, J , being that it deprived the party in whose favour the abatement operates as a valuable right An equally good reason would be that an abatement has the practical effect of dismissing the suit and concludes the rights of the parties so far as the Court in which the suit is brought is concerned.

With this may be compared the decision of the same Bench in Maharaj Kishore Khanna v Kiran Shashi Dasi (11), that no appeal lies from an order under O. 9, R 9, Civil P C., restoring, a suit. There is no discussion of the principle, and the decision seems to be inconsistent with that in Sarat Chandra Sarkar v. Maihar Stone and Lime Co. Ltd (10).

I now come to the decisions of the Madras High Court The earliest is that to which I have already made reference, namely, that in De Souza v. Coles (12) where it was held by Bittleston, J , that a judgment "cannot be limited to a final judgment in a suit—nor indeed to a judgment in a suit at all—but must be held to have the more general meaning of any decision or determination affecting the rights or the interests of any suitor or applicant."

The learned Judge held that the language of Cl 15 is so general that it is "impossible to prescribe any limits to the right of appeal founded upon the nature of the order or decree appealed from."

The actual decision was that an appeal lies from an order of a Judge exercising original jurisdiction, refusing to give leave to institute a suit on the original side in a case in which the cause of action has arisen in part within the ordinary original jurisdiction of the High Court. It might have been given on grounds less sweeping than the principle adopted This principle may possibly be a logical deduction from the language of the Letters Patent, but it has not found favour.

The next case to which I will refer is Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2). The Full Bench, after an exhaustive review of the authorities, held that an order of a single Judge on the original side refusing to frame an issue asked for by one of the parties is not a judgment within Cl 15 De Souza v Coles (12) was commented on the wide interpretation of the expression "judgment" being disapproved, the decision of Garth, C J., in Ebrahim v Fuckhrunissa Begum (5) was approved, and no less than four cases in the Madras High Court were either disapproved or dissented from At p. 7 of the report, Sir Arnold White, C. J , enunciated a test of what is a judgment for the purpose of Cl. 15 in these words

"The test seems to me to be not what is the form of the adjudication, but what is its effect in the suit or proceeding in which it is made. If its effect, whatever its form may be, and whatever may be the nature of the application on which it is made, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding so far as the Court before which the suit or proceeding is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding, I think the adjudication is a judgment within the meaning of the clause. An adjudication on an application which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication in the suit is not, in my opinion, a judgment within the meaning of the Letters Patent."

Applying this principle, he was of the opinion that an order under the Administrator Generals Act giving the Administrator-General a commission at a fixed rate, an order dismissing an application by the assignee of a plaintiff to be brought on the record, an order dismissing a petition to receive a sum of money as security for costs of an appeal, an order refusing a stay of execution, an adjudication based on a refusal to exercise discretion, if its effect is to dispose of the suit so far as the Court making it is concerned, an order refusing to issue a mandamus [herein differing from the Justices of the peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co (4),] an order refusing to confirm an award, an order refusing to set aside an award, an order refusing to extend the time for giving security for costs, an order setting aside a judgment and a decree and directing a remand, an order dismissing a Judge's summons to show cause why leave granted under Cl. 12 should not be rescinded, an order under Cl. 12 giving leave to sue and an order made on an application to revoke a submission to arbitration, are all appealable On the other hand he held that an order fixing a date for the hearing and an order allowing or refusing a commission fail to satisfy the test. Krishnaswamy Ayyar, J, distinguished between a "preliminary or interlocutory judgment" and an "interlocutory order" and was of the opinion that the latter was not a "judgment," he having previously quoted with approval the definition of an order in Black on Judgments as being :

"the mandate or determination of the Court upon some subsidiary or collateral matter arising in action, not disposing of the merits but adjudicating a preliminary point or directing some steps in the proceedings."

Discussing the Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co (4), his view was that in one respect the definition of Sir Robert Couch was too narrow, for a decision which determines the cause or proceedings so far as the particular Court is concerned, though it refuses to adjudge the merits, must also be deemed to be a judgment ; for otherwise the rejection of a plaint for defect of form or insufficiency of Court-fee, or its return for want of jurisdiction, would not be a judgment.

In Kanlal Bhoya v Balaram Paramasukdoss (13), an order having been passed directing security to be given by the defendant for the amount claimed and not having been appealed against, a subsequent order cancelling the original order and directing the return of the security and that the suit should proceed as an ordinary suit was held to be a "judgment" Sir Walter Schwabe, C. J., was satisfied that the order satisfied all definitions previously attempted. Coutts-Trotter, J., resolved his doubts by holding that the order was a judgment:

"because it might result in shutting out the defendant from the Court altogether."

If that had been the inevitable result of the order I should have been disposed to agree with him

In Sonachallam Pillay v. Kumaravelu Chettiar (14), it was held that an order of a single Judge in the admission Court refusing to stay execution of the decree of a mofussil Court pending the appeal was a judgment. Krishnan, J., professed to follow the dictum of Sir Arnold White, C. J., while Waller, J, was apparently prepared to go so far as to accept the wide interpretation of Bittleston, J, in De Souza v. Coles (12), that it is impossible to set any limits to the right of appeal founded on the nature of the order or decree appealed against. I think that this case and that last cited show a tendency to try to avoid the implications of the previous Full Bench decision.

The first decision of the Bombay High Court to which we have been referred is that of Miya Mohamed v Zorabi (15), where it was held that an order directing the issue of a commission to examine a witness was not a judgment, inasmuch as it merely regulated the procedure for his examination. I need only say that an order of his nature would seem to fail to satisfy any test which has ever been suggested, with the exception of that suggested in De Souza v Coles (1)

In Charandas Chatturbhuj v Chhaganlal Pitambardas (16), the plaintiff had agreed to sell to the defendant certain goods, which the defendant in turn had agreed to sell to one Alibhoy The plaintiff having filed a suit against the defendant for breach of contract, the defendant, who claimed a right to be indemnified by Alibhoy, obtained leave, under the third party procedure which had been introduced by rules framed by the Bombay High Court to serve a third party notice on him. Alibhoy having appeared, the defendant sought a direction from the Original Side Judge under R 130 and 131 that Alibhoy be at liberty to appear at the trial of the suit and the question in issue between him and the defendant be tried simultaneously with the questions in issue between the plaintiff and the defendant. The Judge having by his order refused to give such a direction, it was held on appeal that the order was not a "judgment." The definition of Couch, C. J., in the Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. (4), was quoted as having been consistently approved of by all the High Courts, and the case was held not to come within that definition, the reason being that nothing had been decided which affected the merits of those questions between the defendant and Allibhoy, by determining any right or liability between them. It may be noted that the case would equally have failed to satisfy the test suggested by Sir Arnold White in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2).

In Nagindas Motilal v. Nilaji Moroba (17), it was held that an appeal lies under Cl. 15, Letters Patent, from an order of a Division Court refusing to excuse delay in filing an application for a certificate of appeal to the Privy Council Decisions that merely introductory orders on matters of procedure or otherwise are not judgments within the meaning of Cl. 15 are distinguished as being essentially different in that they can in no way be said finally to end or determine the litigation and so do not fulfil the test adopted by the Madras High Court in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2). It is pointed out that the refusal to excuse the delay and the consequent refusal to entertain the petition for the necessary certificate of appeal to the Privy Council amounts to a final decision and put an end to the litigation so far as the High Court is concerned

In Goverdhanlalji Maharaj v. Chandraprabhavati (18), it was held that a finding that a suit for increase in the rate of maintenance fixed by a consent decree is maintainable, is not a " judgment " within the meaning of Cl. 15, Sir Norman Macleod, C. J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, observed that Sir Richard Couch's attempt at a definition had not prevented lengthy argument being brought forward in each case as it came up as to whether it was a judgment or not and that for himself he preferred to consider each decision as it came before him and form his own opinion. The succeeding passage is highly relevant to the present reference and I will quote it in full.

" For the purposes of this case to my mind the distinction between decisions and orders thereon which stand by themselves, and decisions on a single issue in a suit, is a very real one. It is not desirable on general principles that a suit should be tried piecemeal, and a decision on an issue to the effect that the trial of the suit should proceed can never to my mind amount to a judgment. If in this case the Judge had decided that the suit was not maintainable and had dismissed the suit, then undoubtedly an appeal would lie against that decision. But in this case the Judge has decided that the suit should proceed. He will then consider the remaining issues in the suit, whether the plaintiff should be granted in the circumstances of the case increased maintenance, or not, and when he has decided that question there will be a judgment, against which all the arguments which are now sought to be raised against the decision on this issue can be placed before the Court. We are not shutting out the defendant from any objection which he may eventually be advised to raise against the final decree in the suit. We are merely pointing out that so far nothing has been decided with regard to the rights and liabilities of the parties, there is only a decision that the suit should proceed and against that decision no appeal lies. "

We have not been referred to any decision of the Allahabad High Court. It should be noted that neither this High Court nor the Punjab High Court possess ordinary original civil jurisdiction, and that the Letters Patent Appeals in those Courts to which reference will be made are all appeals from the decision of a Judge exercising appellate jurisdiction.

Before the enactment of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, that Court had apparently taken the view that notwithstanding Cl. 10 of its Letters Patent, the only appealable orders were those in respect of which the Code had expressly provided for an appeal. And even after the substitution of S. 104 of the Code of 1908 for S. 588 of the Code of 1882, the tendency has been to take a narrow view. Thus in Ramjas v. Mahadeo Prasad (19), an order granting sanction to prosecute was held not to be a " judgment, " the ground being that that order did nothing except arm the applicant with a sanction which he could bring to the Court which was to investigate the alleged offence. And in Piari Lal v. Madan Lal (20), it was held that no appeal would lie under Cl 10 from an order of a single Judge of the High Court dismissing an appeal from an order of an execution Court refusing to set aside a sale. The learned Judges held that they were bound by the previous Full Bench decision of the Court in Muhammad Naim-ullah Khan v. Ihsan-ulla Khan (21), and that the enactment of the new Code did not affect the position

In Sadiq Ali v Anwar Ali (22), it was held that Cl. 10 gave a right of appeal from an order of a single Judge rejecting an application to set aside the abatement of an appeal. The test adopted was that of Sir Arnold White, C J., in Tuljaram

Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2), and the order of the single Judge was held to be " a judicial act, and an act which did settle once and for all, if unappealable, the rights of the parties, " and, therefore, a " judgment " within the meaning of Cl. 10.

But in Tirmal Singh v. Kanhaiya Singh (23), a Bench differently constituted again followed the previous Full Bench decision of the Court and held that no appeal lay from an order of a single Judge rejecting an application for review of judgment, the case of Sadiq Ali v. Anwar Ali (22), being held to be distinguishable for reasons which are not given.

We have been referred to two cases in the Lahore High Court. In the earlier, Gokal Chand v. Sanwal Das (24) the interpretation of the term " judgment " as used in the Letters Patent, was very wide It was held to include any interlocutory judgment which decides so far as the Court pronouncing it is concerned, whether finally or temporarily, any question materially in issue between the parties and directly affecting the subject-matter of the suit The view of the Court was that an order on an application to stay execution pending appeal came within the definition.

In the later case, Ruldu Singh v. Sanwal Singh (25), the earlier case Gokal Chand v. Sanwal Das (24), was not referred to The trial Court had dismissed a suit as time barred ; the District Judge on appeal held otherwise and remanded the case for trial on the other issues ; against this order of remand an appeal was preferred to the High Court and was heard by a single Judge who affirmed the decision of the District Judge and dismissed the appeal. From this decision there was a further appeal under the Letters Patent. The decision of the single Judge was held to be a "judgment" and, therefore, appealable. The authorities were discussed by Sir Shadi Lal, C. J , in delivering the judgment of the Court, and, in his opinion, the definition of Sir Arnold White afforded a better test than that of Sir Richard Couch. If an adjudication put an end to the suit or appeal, of if its effect, if not complied with, was to put an end to the suit or appeal, then it was clearly a judgment. He went on to discuss the position which arose when the adjudication disposed merely of an application made in a suit or appeal, and to adopt Sir Arnold White's differentiation between an application which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication in a suit, which would not be a "judgment," and an application which is an independent proceeding ancillary to the suit and instituted, not as a step towards judgment but with a view to render the judgment effective if obtained, which would be a "judgment." In the former category would be included applications for transfer, summoning witnesses, issue of commission for the examination of witnesses, adjournments, directing a party to produce and give inspection and framing an issue. In the latter category would be included applications for the appointment of a receiver, the issue of on interim injunction and, generally, all orders which are appealable under S 104 or O 43, R. 1, Civil P C. He was of the opinion, however, that in certain applications, such as those for a mandamus and for leave to defend a summary suit on a negotiable instrument, the test adopted by Sir Arnold White was not of practical assistance. He, therefore, thought that it was impossible to lay down any definite rule which would meet the requirements of every case, and that all the Court can do in determining whether an order constitutes a judgment is to take into consideration the nature of the order and its effect upon the civil proceeding in which it was made The case before the Court was, however, held to present no difficulty, because the decision of the Judge of the High Court undoubtedly put an end to the appeal before him. It seems clear that in his opinion the test most generally applicable is whether or not the order finally puts an end to the suit or proceeding

I will now refer to the cases in which Cl. 13 of its Letters Patent has been discussed in this Court The first is Yeo Eng Byan v. Beng Seng & Co. (1), a decision of Sir Sidney Robinson, C J , and Brown, J. An order of the Judge on the Original Side, giving directions to a commissioner, appointed under the preliminary decree in a partnership suit, as to what accounts he should and what accounts he should not go into was held not to be appealable After citing the oftquoted definition of Couch, C. J , in The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v. The Oriental Gas Co. (4) but without the subsequent qualifying words, the further dictum of Couch, C J , in Hubbeeb v Joosub (7) and the definition of Sir Arnold White, C J., in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2), Robinson, C. J , continued:

(23) A.I.R. 1928 All. 356=45 All. 535.
(24) [1920] 1 Lah. 348=55 I.C. 933=2 L.L.J. 92.

"with these dicta I am in general agreement. I agree that a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability may rightly be held to be a "judgment" and I think that an order which merely paves the way for the determination of the question between the parties cannot be considered to be a "judgment" . nor can a more formal order merely regulating the procedure in the suit, or one which is nothing more than a step towards obtaining a final adjudication."

He went on to say that the order before the Court

"did not decide on the merits of the suit for the dissolution of the partnership, nor does it decide the rights or liabilities of the parties to the suit so far as the partnership is concerned. . . . It cannot be that the framers of the Letters Patent intended to allow appeals which do not arise directly from the suit itself."

Brown, J , laid stress on the fact that the order did "not purport finally to decide any of the rights between the parties "

We have been referred to the case of Ma Mi v Kalenthar Ammal (25-a), a decision of Robinson, C J., and Baguley, J., as to what is a final order within the meaning of S 109, Civil P C. One of the issues was whether the respondent had been divorced. The District Court tried this issue first and held that she had been divorced. This Court reversed the decision and remanded the suit The applicants applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the order of remand was a final order Objection was raised on the ground that this was not so, as it would be open to the applicants to raise the point in appeal to the Privy Council when the whole case was decided. While agreeing that S 105 (2) of the Code would not debar them from taking this course, Sir Sidney Robinson, C. J,, was of the opinion that if the order in question had the effect of deciding finally the cardinal point in the suit (as it would have had in the case before him), it must be held to be a final order for which leave to appeal should be granted. Here he was following the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Saiyid Muzhar Hossein v. Mt. Bodha Bibi (25-b), where under similar circumstances they granted special leave to appeal. Mr. Hay argues that in the appeal from which this reference arises, the issues decided against him are cardinal points the decision of which in the appellant's favour would decide the suit. I do not, however, consider that decisions on what is a "final order" under S. 109 of the Code are of assistance in construing Cl, 13, Letters Patent

Another unreported decision is that of Carr and J. A. Maung Gyi, JJ , (Moolla Goolam Mahomed v Ameena Bee Bee; Civil First Appeal 153 of 1924) Under a preliminary administration decree, a commissioner had been appointed to take accounts Three questions arose: (a) and (b) as to a sum of money and jewellery alleged to have belonged to the estate of the deceased and to have come to the hands of the defendant, and (c) a house which the plaintiff claimed as belonging to the estate aud which the defendant claimed as her own property. Before the commissioner the parties agreed that a receiver should be appointed to file a suit to determine the ownership of the house, and a receiver was appointed, but no suit was filed The commissioner recorded evidence on the other two issues, and came to findings thereon The matter then came before May Oung, J , who passed an order reversing the commissioner's finding as regards one of the issues and modifying it as regards the other. He also commented on the fact that no suit as regards the house had been filed and said that he would fix a day to try the remaining issue, i.e , as to whom the house belonged The plaintiff appealed from this order, so far as it decided the first two issues. The preliminary objection was taken that no appeal lay, the order not being a "judgment." A number of authorities including Yeo Eng Byan v. Beng Seng & Co. (1) were cited but not discussed, with the exception that the definition of Couch, C. J , in The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v The Oriental Gas Co. (4) was quoted at length (but without its qualifications) and was stated to have been generally accepted. The decision appealed against was held to be a "judgment" as it was a determination of the rights of the parties as regards two of three issues,

(25b) [1894] 17 All. 112=22 I. A. 1 (P. C.).

"final as far as concerns the original side of this Court, and that the Judge or his successor could not in his final judgment reverse the findings already arrived at."

From this conclusion I must respectfully differ

In Mooljee Dharsee & Co v. M E. Molla (26) the appellate side, on an application to stay execution of a decree pending appeal therefrom ordered a stay, "the security already given being accepted, with liberty to the respondent to apply for fresh or further security, if it is decided that the security given is invalid or insufficient."

The Judge on the original side after enquiry accepted the security as valid and sufficient. On appeal from his order it was held by the Bench (Heald and Chari. JJ ), that it did not determine any right or liability which arose between the parties on the original side, and was not, therefore, a "judgment" In discussing 'the new classic" case of The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v The Oriental Gas Co. (4), it was observed that the expression "affects the merits of the case by determining some right or liability" was not intended to cover the determination of every right or liability, as was shown by the succeeding sentence where Couch, C J , states that a final judgment determines the whole case or suit and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it It seems to me clear that the learned Judges would not have held that a finding on a preliminary issue which had the effect of allowing a suit to proceed was a "judgment "

This case was followed, this time by Heald and Lentaigne, JJ., in Mahomed Hussain v. Hoossain Hamadanee & Co. (27) where they held that an order of dismissal of an application for the examination of a witness on commission is not a judgment, Tuljaram Rao v. Alagappa Chettiar (2) being cited as showing that a refusal to issue a commission

'is a purely interlocutory order and not a judgment terminating a suit or other proceedings or affecting the merits.".

It was again followed by the same Bench in Mengau Singh v Sucha Singh (28) where they held that an order under O. 38, R 5, Civil P 'C , directing the defendant to give security before judgment did not come within Cl. 13, Letters Patent.

In Soonıram Jeetmul v R D. Tata & Co (unreported Civil Misc No 82 of 1925), Sir Guy Rutledge, C. J , and Maung Ba, J , dealt with an appeal from an order of the Judge on the original side giving leave to institute a suit on the ground that part of the cause of action arose in Rangoon The appeal is stated to have been admitted on the authority of De Souza v. Coles (12) and Hubbeeb v. Joosub (5), but there is no discussion.

Arumugam Chettyar v Kanappa Chettyar (29), cited to us, is merely a decision that where an appeal from an order is allowed by the Civil Procedure Code, such an order is to be construed as a "judgment" and is not in point

In Hajee Tar Mahomed v Zulaikha Bai (6) a suit was filed on the original side for the administration of the estate of one Esak Vally Mahomed, the allegation of the plaintiff being that Esak and the defendants were partners in a business carried on in Rangoon and the Shan States. The defendants took the preliminary objection that the original side had no jurisdiction because the business was not carried on in Rangoon. The learned Judge tried as a preliminary issue the question whether or not this Court had jurisdiction, and found that it had, inasmuch as the business was carried on partly in Rangoon The defendants claimed to be entitled to appeal from this finding, which was a finding on a preliminary issue, on the ground that it was a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 13 On the authority of Soonıram Jeetmul v. R. D. Tata & Co (unreported , supra) and the two cases therein referred to, it was held by Heald and Darwood, JJ., that an appeal lay After having pointed out that in Hubbeeb v. Joosub (7) some doubt had been cast on some of the reasons given for the decision in De Souza v Coles (12) and that De Souza v Coles (12) was an appeal not from a finding that a Court had jurisdiction but from an order refusing to give leave to institute the suit in the High Court, the learned Judges went on to say :

"It is, however, clearly desirable that an appeal should lie since otherwise much time and money might be wasted in a Court which might ultimately be found to have no jurisdiction."

(27) A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 290=3 Rang. 293.

(29) A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 139=5 Rang. 99.

The logical corollary of this decision if it is correct, appears to be that the decision on any preliminary issue, if its effect is to allow a suit to proceed, is appealable But with all respect I am unable to agree with either the decision or the grounds on which it is based The argumentum ab inconvenienti is not in itself conclusive, and, as I have already indicated in my opinion, the balance of convenience is the other way. The reasoning in Hubbeeb v. Joosub (7) on which the case is really based is not convincing, the right between the parties which it determined being merely the right to compel defendants who are out of the jurisdiction to defend the suit in the High Court rather than to defend it in the Court of the local area where they are resident If it is to be supported at all, it can, I think, be supported only on the principle adopted by Bittleston, J., in De Souza v Coles (12), a principle which has since its enunciation found little favour except in the judgment of Wallis, J., in Sonachalam Pillai v. Kumaravelu Pillai (14).

In Abowath v Abowath (30), the observations before cited of Robinson, C J., in Yeo Eng Byan v. Beng Seng & Co (1), were again quoted and applied by Sir Guy Rutledge, C J , and Carr, J , and it was held that an order of the Judge sitting on the original side directing the return of an award to the arbitrators to enable them to file it according to the proper procedure was not a "judgment" because the Judge had not purported finally to decide any right between the parties

The last case cited to us was Syed Khan v Syed Ebrahim (31), a decision of Sir Guy Rutledge C J , and Brown, J , as to what is a "final order" within the meaning of S 109, Civil P. C. The plaintiff filed a suit in a District Court claiming a right of pre-emption under Mohamedan law The District Court dismissed the suit on the ground that such right did not exist in Burma. In October 1925 the High Court on appeal held that the right did exist, and reversing the decision of the District Court, remanded the case for trial. The plaintiff won on the merits and the High Court on appeal confirmed the decision in May 1927. The defendant applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council not only against the profits decided in May 1927, but also against the point decided in October 1925. It was held that the question of the right of pre-emption was a cardinal issue between the parties which was finally decided in October 1925, that it was a "final order" within the meaning of S. 109 ; that the defendant could have then applied for leave ; that the question of pre-emption was not in dispute when the case was finally decided in May 1927 ; and that the defendant could not again raise the point over again in applying for leave to appeal against the points decided in May 1927 The Court, however, holding that there were two other substantial points of law, gave leave to appeal thereon. Unfortunately, the appeal dropped owing to the defendant failing to give security and the opportunity of obtaining the views of their Lordships of the Privy Council as to the correctness of the decision that leave should not be given in respect of the issue of pre-emption was lost It may be noted also that the case of Ma Mi v. Kalenthar Ammal (25a) in which Sir Sidney Robinson, C J., had expressed a view apparently contrary to that enunciated by Sir Guy Rutledge was not before the Court However, as I have said before, cases on the meaning of the expression "final order" are of little assistance in the task of interpreting the term "judgment"

From this review, it is clear that the view taken by Bittleston, J , in De Souza v. Coles (12) that every adjudication is a judgment has been disapproved in the vast majority of the decisions, and it is practically common ground that some test must be adopted The definition of Sir Richard Couch, C. J , in The Justices of the Peace for Calcutta v The Oriental Gas Co (4) pressed upon us by Mr Hay, if isolated from its context, has been not infrequently cited and treated as conclusive without discussion Taken with its qualifications it contains the germ of the later doctrine enunciated by Sir Arnold White, C J , in Tuljaram Row v. Alagappa Chettiar (2) but has been held to be defective in that it apparently excludes decisions on points of procedure which have the effect of finally deciding questions in issue between the parties to a suit or proceeding so far as the Court deciding them is concerned. On the other hand, the test enunciated by Sir Arnold

(30) A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 110=6 Rang. 25.

White, C. J , and adopted in Yeo Eng Byan v. Beng Seng and Co. (1), the key-note of which is finality in relation to the Court passing the order, has the merit of simplicity and, as pointed out by Sir Shadi Lal, C. J , in Ruldu Singh v. Sanwal Singh (24), affords a working rule in respect of the great majority of interlocutory orders. I am of the opinion that in the decision of the question referred to us it should be applied. And, in applying it, I am fortified by the opinion of Sir Richard Garth, C. J , Ebrahim v. Fuckhrunissa Begum (5), that the decision on an issue which has the effect of allowing a suit to proceed does not "affect the merits or result of the whole suit" in that it does not decide the case one way or another, and is, therefore, not a " judgment " Put in another way, it does not " shut out " the defendant

If the contention pressed on us by Mr Hay were to succeed, it would seem almost inevitably to follow that if no appeal is preferred from an order deciding a preliminary issue having such effect the party against whom the issue is decided cannot raise the point in an appeal from the decree in the suit And, so far as I am aware, this has never been held by any Court in India The question of what is a final order within the meaning of S 109, Civil P C , is not, in my opinion, analogous If it were, I should be inclined to hold that Syed Khan v Syed Ebrahim (31) had been wrongly decided

It is suggested to us that the decision of a preliminary issue is final so far as the Court which decides it is concerned, and this was so held by this Court in Moolla Goolam Mahomed v Ameena Bee Bee (unreported , supra.) That the decision of a Judge on a preliminary issue is not binding on his successor was held by the late chief Court of Lower Burma in Ma Nyo v. Ma Yauk (32), the soundness of which has never been questioned. If the decision is not binding on his successor, I see no reason why the Judge himself, on a more mature consideration, should not be allowed to change his mind.

The contention of Mr. Hay may be subjected to the touchstone of a practical test The learned Judge on the Original Side in the case out of which this reference has arisen, might orally have expressed his opinion on the preliminary issues and allowed the case to proceed. In that case there would have been no written order from which an appeal could have been presented. This difficulty might perhaps have been surmounted in some such manner as by filing an affidavit setting out what the learned Judge had said But the learned Judge might equally well have contented himself by intimating that he would hear the evidence and at the end of the case would deliver a judgment covering all the issues. In this last event the parties would have known perfectly well what was in his mind, but the party against whom it was practically certain that the issue had been decided would have been powerless to appeal All three possible courses would have been equally legitimate, and it seems incongruous that the question of whether or not an appeal lies in such a case should depend on whether the learned Judge had stated, or even written, his determination on a preliminary issue.

For these reasons my answer to the question referred, is in the negative

If the view which I have taken is correct, it follows that certain cases in this Court have been wrongly decided, and that they should be overruled. These cases are Moolla Goolam Mahomed v. Ameena Bee Bee ; Sooniram Jeetmul v. R. D Tata and Co. (both unreported ; supra) and Hajee Tar Mohamed v. Zulaikha Bai (6).

Pratt, Offg C. J.—In the order of reference I have already given my reasons for holding that the finding of the learned Judgeon the Original Side does not amount to a judgment within the meaning of Art. 13 Letters Patent

I have now had the opportunity of reading my brother Ormiston's answer to the reference, in which I fully concur.

In view of his exhaustive analysis of the authorities on the subject, it seems unnecessary to discuss them at any length.

I would, however, remark that I agree with the observation of Macleod, C. J., in Goverdhanlalji v. Chandraprabhavati (18) that the distinction between decisions and orders, which stand by themselves, and decisions on a single issue, is a very real one. I am also at one with him, when he says that it is not desirable on general principles that a suit should be tried piecemeal, and a decision on an issue to the effect that the trial of the suit should proceed does not amount to a judgment.

As held by Robinson, C J., in Yeo Eng Byan v. Beng Seng and Co. (1) an order which merely paves the way for the determination of the question between the parties cannot be considered to be a judgment The finding with which we are concerned is one, in effect, which decides that the suit is maintainable, and so paves the way for the determination of the main question between the parties

It does not finally decide the rights of the parties and will be subject to attack on appeal, if the decree is ultimately against the appellant

I would point out that the finding which forms the subject of the present reference is in an entirely different category to the order in the recent Bench case of Ma Hman v. The Official Receiver (33) We there held that an order of the Judge on the Original Side allowing the Official Receiver commission at 5 per cent. on the sale proceeds of certain properties sold by a firm of auctioneers under the orders of the Court was a judgment Our reason was that the order in question was in effect a decree in favour of the Official Receiver for a large sum of money. On the facts, obviously, had there been no right of appeal a grave injustice would have resulted to appellants

I would answer the question referred in the negative

Carr, J.—I agree with the judgment of my learned brother Ormiston and with his answer to the question referred.

In particular I agree that when I said in Moolla Goolam Mahomed v. Ameena Bee Bee (unreported , supra) that preliminary findings on certain issues were final and could not be reversed in the final judgment, I was wrong.

Cunliffe, J.—On 1st September 1927, Chari, J , on the Original Side of this Court, passed an order dealing with various contentions raised in a suit before him on a hundi. It is apparent from the learned Judge's order that a number of arguments were raised before him on the question of the legal liability of the defendants 1 and 3. They were of a technical nature and do not appear to have had much merit At any rate, the order concludes with these words :

" For these reasons no final order is possible either against defendant 1 or against defendant 3 on the arguments raised by the learned advocate on their behalf. The case will therefore, proceed . . . . . "

And so it would have proceeded, had there not been some delay in collecting evidence on commission

Taking advantage of the delay, however, the parties adversely affected, obviously against the intention of the learned Judge who desired to dispose of the whole case as soon as possible in a business like manner, took the opportunity of coming to this Court in appeal

It is argued that the order passed by Chari, J , is a judgment within Art 13 of our Letters Patent In my opinion, it is not a judgment at all. It may be part of a judgment ; but it was certainly never contemplated by the Letters Patent that, at every stage of the final hearing of a case, litigants dissatisfied with the view expressed by the trying Judge should immediately proceed to the Court of appeal. One can imagine the state of affairs where six or seven visits to the Court of appeal on six or seven issues decided against the contentions of one or other of the parties would precede the final disposal of the case In these circumstances I agree that the question referred to the Full Bench should be answered in the negative

Darwood, J—I concur.

 Provident Funds Act (19 of 1925), S. 5 —Nomination prohibited by personal law is valid—Such nomination, though made before the Act of 1925, and though no fresh nomination was made after that Act is validated by S. 5.

The effect of S. 5 is that a nomination is valid in spite of any prohibition in the personal law of the person making the nomination and this holds good even if the nomination was made before the passing of the Act of 1925 and no fresh nomination was made after the Act was passed. [P 55 C 1]

Judgment—Maung Po Hla, deceased was an employee of the Burma Railways and a subscriber to the Railways Provident Fund. He nominated his sister Ma Kywe as his beneficiary. His wife and sole heir under the Burmese Buddhist law Ma Mi Le sued for recovery of the sum standing in her husband's name at his death and obtained a decree

In the diary of 11th May 1928 the learned Judge on the original side recorded

"the point for decision is whether the Provident Funds Act overrides the personal law of Maung Po Hla to the extent of enabling him to direct his money to be paid to his sister."

The Judge found that the effect of S 5, Provident Funds Act, 1925, was that a nomination is valid in spite of any prohibition in the personal law of the person making the nomination We agree that there can be no doubt of the correctness of this construction

The provisions of S 5 are perfectly clear and definite, and on this finding the suit by the wife should have been dismissed. The learned Judge has, however, held that as the nomination of the sister was made by a declaration, dated the 27th September 1924, before the Act came into force, it was invalid. He considered that the Act was not intended to have a retrospective force and a fresh nomination was required

This was a point not taken in argument and the Court was not justified in coming to a decision on this ground without hearing the advocates on the point

We find ourselves quite unable to accept the reasoning of the learned trial Judge The effect of the new Act was clearly to render valid a nomination which was previously invalid as contravening the provisions of the Burmese Buddhist law. It is not a question of retrospective effect since the declarant did not die till after the Act came into force

No fresh nomination was necessary. The nominee is entitled to the money We set aside the decree of the original side and direct that the suit be dismissed. Appellant will have costs in the suit and appeal. Advocate's fee three gold mohurs.

G. Bhandari—Plaintiff—Appellant.

R. Nihalchand and others—Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No 100 of 1928, Decided on 21st August 1928, from judgment of original side in Civil Regular No. 102 of 1927.

(a) Landlord and Tenant—Tenant holding over—Conditions of lease continue.

At the expiration of the term of a lease the lessee holding over must be taken to have done so on the conditions of the lease. [P 56 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act, S 14—Claim for rent allowed without specific issue but disallowed in appeal as S. 12, Rangoon Rent Act, did not apply—Whole period of suit can be deducted in fresh suit for rent.

A plaintiff obtained a decree for rent which was revised in appeal on the ground that provisions of S. 12, Rangoon Rent Act, were not satisfied. In trial Court no specific issue was raised on the point. Plaintiff sued again for the rent.

Held that the plaintiff was entitled to deduct the whole time required for the previous suit as he was bona fide litigating his claim throughout that period: A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 96, Expl. [P 57 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 11—Issue of law—Decision on admission due to erroneous conception of law is not res judicata.

A decision based solely on an admission which was based on an erroneous conception of law cannot operate as res judicata. [P 58 C 2]

(d) Rangoon Rent Act, S. 19 (1)—Standard rent not fixed—Collateral agreement to pay fixed rent is not covered by the Act.

There was a contract subsisting between a lessee and a sub-lessee that the sub-lessees should pay to the landlord the daily rent, whatever it was.

Held in a suit by lessee for reimbursement of rent paid for the sub-lessee, that the agreement, the standard rent not having been fixed by the Controller, was not illegal under S. 19 (1) of the Act, and consequently the contract being merely collateral was not avoided by the Act. [P 59 C 1]

N. N. Burjorjee—for Appellants

J. K. Munshi—for Respondents

Judgment.—The plaintiff appellant is a jeweller who occupied a stall in the Suratee Bara Bazaar under a tenancy agreement providing for the payment of a daily rent Although in theory such a tenancy is merely a daily tenancy, the practice of the bazaar authorities is to allow a tenant to continue to occupy the stall as long as he continues to pay his rent and does not do or omit to do anything which causes inconvenience in the administration of the bazaar. If circumstances render it desirable, the rent is raised and a new tenancy agreement is entered into at an increased rent, but it seldom, if ever, happens that the rent is raised to a point which induces the tenant to give up his tenancy Again, while sub-letting without the consent of the authorities is not allowed, so long as the sub-lessee does not cause trouble and the outward aspect of the transaction is that he has merely a license to occupy the stall, no objection appears to be taken.

In 1919 the plaintiff-appellant left Rangoon having entered into an agreement, Ex. A (1), with the defendant-respondents, a joint family carrying on the trade of jewellers through their manager, defendant 1. By this agreement which is in the form of a lease, the plaintiff let to defendant the stall and its furniture a list of which is attached, its value being stated to be Rs 1,196, for two years from the date on which possesssion would be given.

"paying therefor the monthly rent of Rs. 90 per month and also the daily rent to the company during the said term."

The lessee covenants:

"(1) to pay the said rent on 10th day of each month, (2) to surrender at the end of the term, and (3) to pay also rent to Suratee Bazar Co, Ltd., and observe all the rules and regulations of the said company."

There is a proviso for determination on one month's notice if the lessor comes to Rangoon with intention to resume his own business The only reasonable construction of this document, having regard to the 3rd covenant, is that the lessee agreed with the lessor to pay the daily rent to the company, not to the lessor. At the time of the execution of the lease the daily rent was Re 1-4-0 and it remained the same until it was increased under the circumstances hereinafter set out Possession was given on 23rd October 1919, bnt at the expiration of the term the defendants held over, and they must be taken to have done so on the conditions of the lease

The defendants continued to pay the monthly rent to the plaintiff up to 22nd October 1922, as and from which date they ceased to pay it, and on 10th December 1922, by means which need not be particularized, the defendants persuaded the bazaar authorities to determine the plaintiff's tenancy and to give them a tenancy at a daily rent of Rs. 4-4-0, thus ousting the plaintiff

The plaintiff returned to Rangoon, and, as the result of his representation, on 10th February 1923, the Bazaar Company again recognized him as their tenant at an increased rent of Rs. 4 a day.

On 28th April 1923 the plaintiff gave the defendants notice to vacate by 23rd May 1923 and there having been noncompliance with the notice, on 4th July 1923, he instituted Civil Regular Suit No 354 of 1923 of this Court. In this suit, as originally framed, he claimed, among other reliefs, possession, Rs 630 as rent for the period from 23rd October 1922 to 23rd May 1923, thereafter Rs 90 as compensation for use and occupation for the period from 23rd May 1923 to 23rd June 1923, and further such compensation at the same rate

On 14th August 1923, he filed an amended plaint in which no claim for rent as such was made, but a claim was made for Rs. 720 (being the aggregate of the sums of Rs 630 and Rs 90) as mesne profits On 2nd September 1924, a decree was passed by May Oung, J, in favour of the plaintiff for (inter alia) possession, Rs 630 as rent from 23rd October 1922 until 23rd May 1923, and compensation for use and occupation at Rs. 90 per mensem from 23rd May 1923, till possession was given. The defendants appealed in Civil First Appeal No 202 of 1924, and by the decree of the appellate side dated 30th March 1925, the decree of the original side was confirmed, except as to the item of Rs. 630 for rent as to which it was held that no decree for rent could be passed by reason of S. 12, Rangoon Rent Act 1920, which provides that a plaint in a suit for the recovery of rent is not to be accepted unless a certificate certifying the standard rent has been attached thereto. No such certificate had been attached to the plaint in the suit.

On the same date, 30th March 1925, the defendants gave possession to the plaintiff It should be stated that the defendants paid to the Bazaar Company daily rent at the rate of Rs. 4-4-0 a day from 10th December 1922 to 10th February 1923, the date on which the plaintiff was again recognized by the Bazaar

Company as its tenant. Thereafter they ceased to pay such rent. From 23rd May 1923 to 17th July 1923, the plaintiff paid rent at the rate of Rs 4 a day, aggregating Rs. 224 to the Bazaar Company although the defendants were actually in occupation. From 18th July 1923 to 30th March 1925 the Bazaar Company refused to accept rent from either party, but after being given possession, the plaintiff, on 19th August 1925 paid to the Bazaar Company the rent which had accrued during this period aggregating Rs 2,488

The plaintiff filed the present suit on 26th February 1927, claiming Rs 3,750 under four heads:

| | Rs. |
|---|---|
| (a) Rent at Rs 90 month from 23rd October 1922 to 22nd May 1923 ... | 630 |
| (b) Amount paid by the plaintiff on account of the defendants' default to the Bazaar Company from 10th February 1923 to 22nd May 1923 at Rs. 4 a day ... | 408 |
| (c) Amount paid by the plaintiff for the defendants' use and occupation to the Bazaar Company from 23rd May 1923 to 17th July 1923 at Rs. 4 a day .. | 224 |
| (d) Amount paid by the plaintiff to the Bazaar Company on account of the defendants' use and occupation of the stall from 18th July 1923 to 30th March 1925 ... | 2,488 |
| Total ... | 3,750 |

The learned Judge on the original side dismissed the suit, holding that the claims under the several heads were barred by limitation, by the provisions of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., or by res judicata, in certain cases by a combination of two of them

The claim for rent is based on a consideration different in the main to those governing the claims under the other heads. As to this the plaintiff claimed for the purposes of limitation to exclude the period from the institution of the suit to the decision of the appeal from the decree therein The learned Judge held that, the defendants in their written statement having pointed out that the suit in so far as it was based on a claim for rent by reason of the non-observance of the provisions of S 12, Rangoon Rent Act, 1920, and the plaintiff having taken no steps to legalize his claim for rent, he could not be held to be prosecuting the previous suit in good faith as regards this claim, and that, therefore, he was not entitled to the benefit of S. 14, Lim Act. In Civil Regular No. 354 of 1923, there was no issue covering the point, except, perhaps the general issue as to the relief to which the plaintiff was entitled, and the matter could not have been seriously discussed, as May Oung, J., gave a decree for the rent as a matter of course. So long as the decree was in existence, that is to say, until it was in part set aside by the appellate Court, the plaintiff could not file another suit for the rent, and Mr. Munshi concedes that the plaintiff is entitled to deduct the period intervening between the two decrees But this is not enough to save limitation, and Mr. Burjorjee urges that the period of exemption should begin on the date of the institution of the suit In support of his argument he cites Nrityamoni Dassi v Lakhan Chandra Sen (1) where the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Lakhan Chandra Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (2) was affirmed by the Privy Council The decision of the High Court had been that the plaintiffs in the suit should be allowed the period between the date of his decree and the date when it was set aside But their Lordships laid it down as a general principle that limitation would.

" without doubt remain in suspense whilst the plaintiffs were bona fide litigating for their rights in a Court of justice."

Having regard to the fact that no specific issue was raised on the point, and that the rent was in fact decreed, we think that it must be held that the plaintiff was bona fide litigating his claim throughout the period of the suit. Mr. Munshi, however, relies on S. 1 (4), Rangoon Rent Act, 1920, which provides that the expiration of the Act shall not render recoverable any rent which during the continuance of the Act was irrecoverable, and argues that notwithstanding that before the institution of the suit the Act had expired, no rent in excess of Re. 1-4-0 a day, the standard rent, is recoverable. But it has to be remembered that the agreed rent of Rs 90 a month, on any possible construction of Ex. A(1) covered not only the right to occupy the stall but the hire of valuable furniture, and on the materials before us, it is impossible to say that the rent in excess of Rs. 1-4-0 a day exceeded the permissible amount. We are of opinion, therefore, that the claim for Rs 630 rent is not barred by limitation or by S 1 (4) of the Act.

After the hearing of the appeal, before we had delivered judgment, it came to our notice that at the hearing of Civil First Appeal No 202 of 1924 Mr Burjorjee had "admitted that no decree for rent can be passed, by reason of the provisions of S 12, Rangoon Rent Act"

The question arises whether, by reason of the admission, the claim for Rs 630 is not res judicata Mr Munshi did not argue the point, and no reference was made to it by either counsel As, however, the point was raised in the written statement and was covered by the issues, we set down the appeal for further hearing with respect to it

Mr Burjorjee argues that the admission was based on an erroneous conception of the law, and that a decision based on that admission cannot operate as res judicata He cites to us the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ganendro-mohun Tagore v. Juttendro Mohun Tagore (3) that

"the plaintiff, however, is not bound by an admission of a point of law, nor precluded from asserting the contrary, in order to obtain relief to which, upon a true construction of the law, he may appear to be entitled"

And in Beni Pershad Koeri v Dudh-nath Roy (4), their Lordships observed :

"The High Court seems to have understood counsel to have admitted that receipt of rent by the Maharajah operated as a confirmation of the pattah, and the only question which remained was the construction of the pattah. In the opinion of their Lordships this admission, if correctly understood, was erroneous in point of law, and does not preclude the counsel for the appellant on this appeal from claiming his client's legal rights."

If the admission before the appellate Bench was in fact erroneous we are unable to hold that a decision based solely on such admission could operate as res judicata The only reference to the matter in the judgment beyond the recording of the admission, is the statement by their Lordships that they were

"of opinion that the decree of the Court below, except in regard to the granting of rent, is correct, and with that exception it will be confirmed."

We are unable to accept Mr Munshi's contention that this was the determination of an issue after independent consideration. It should also be noted that the judgment of the appellate Court was, not that the rent was not due, but that so far as the claim in respect of it was concerned the plaint should not have been accepted, because the Rent Controller's certificate was not attached thereto, and, therefore, the claim could not be entertained

Mr. Burjorjee contends that the admission was erroneous, because S. 12, Rent Act had no application, the lease being not of a stall, but of a stall with furniture of considerable value The Rent Act, unlike the English Acts, did not bring within its ambit furnished premises. It should further be noticed that two separate rents were reserved, one of Rs 90 a month to be paid to the plaintiff and one of Rs. 1-4-0 a day to be paid to the Bazaar Company It is not an unreasonable construction of Ex A (1) that the whole of the monthly rent is to be attributed to the furniture Be this as it may, in our opinion, the admission of law was erroneous and the claim to the Rs 630 is not barred by res judicata

Item (b) consists of the daily rent of Rs 4 a day paid by the plaintiff to the Bazaar Company from 10th February 1923, when he was recognized by the Company as its tenant, to 23rd May 1923, when the defendants' sub-tenancy expired By reason of Ex A (1) there was a contract subsisting between the plaintiff and the defendants that the defendants should pay to the Bazaar Company the daily rent, whatever it was As and from 10th February 1923 it was Rs 4 a day, having been reduced from Rs. 4-4-0 a day, which was the amount which the defendants had agreed to pay to the Bazaar Company, when on the 10th December 1922, they became its direct tenants The defendants failed to implement their contract and the plaintiff paid the money In dealing with this matter, the learned Judge misapprehended Ex. A (1) and held that, under it. the contract was that the defendants should pay to the plaintiff rent at Rs 90 a month and rent at Rs. 1-4 a day, which latter rent the plaintiff should pass on to the Bazaar Company, whereas, as has been pointed out, the contract, on its true construction, provided nothing of the sort. He accordingly held, first, that during the period in question, the plaintiff could not recover more than Rs. 1-4-0 a day, the standard rent, and, secondly, that the plaintiff should have included this claim in his prior suit. As regards the first point, the plaintiff's claim was not for rent, but to be reimbursed a sum of money which in consequence of the defendants' breach of contract, he had been bound to pay to the Bazaar Company The plaintiff's agreement with the Bazaar Company to pay rent in excess of the standard rent was the direct consequence of the defendant's previous wrongful conduct in procuring himself to be recognised by the Bazaar Company as its immediate tenant Such an agreement, the standard rent not having been fixed by the Controller, was not illegal under S. 19 (1) of the Act, and consequently the contract, Ex. A (1) in so far as it rendered the defendants liable to the plaintiff to pay to the Bazaar Company the daily rent at whatever sum it might be fixed by the Bazaar Company, being merely collateral, was not avoided by the Act The same misapprehension caused the learned Judge to hold that the amount being rent, ought to have been claimed in the former suit It was not rent and did not arise from any cause of action on which the former suit was based At the time of the institution of the former suit it had not been paid, and it was not, in fact, paid till August 1925

Item (c) is a claim for Rs. 224 being the amount paid to the Bazaar Company for the defendants' use and occupation at the rate of Rs 4 a day from 23rd May 1923, when the plaintiff's notice to the defendants determining the sub-tenancy expired, to 17th July 1923. when the Bazaar Company ceased to collect the daily rent This claim the learned Judge held to be barred by res judicata, as being compensation to the plaintiff in respect of the use and occupation of the defendants, which had already been awarded at Rs 90 a month, and barred under O 2, R 2 because it ought to have been included in the former suit The claim was, in reality, to be reimbursed money which the plaintiff was obliged to pay owing to the default of the defendants Mr Burjorjee, however, admits that the daily rent up to the date of the institution of the former suit had been paid before its institution ; to that extent, the claim should have been included in the former suit and, not having been so included. is now barred. The suit was instituted on 4th July 1923, On this head, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to receive Rs. 4 a day for 13 days or Rs. 52 only and the claim as to the balance of Rs. 172 fails

Item (d) is the amount paid by the plaintiff to the Bazaar Company on account of the defendants' use and occupation of the stall from 18th July 1923 to 30th March 1925 It stands on the same footing as the Rs 52 part of item (c) which has been allowed, and must itself be allowed for the same reasons The result is that the plaintiff succeeds as to the sum of Rs 3,578. The decree of the original side will be set aside and in lieu thereof there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs 3,578 and costs on that amount in both Courts We certify for two counsel on the original side

v.

Official Assignee—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 141 of 1928, Decided on 13th August 1928, from judgment of original side in Civil Regular No. 371 of 1927

 Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 52 —Insured goods with commission agent— Goods destroyed — Agent becoming insolvent—Insurance money recovered by Official Assignee can be followed (cf 5 Rang. 73—Ed.).

Plaintiff had some corn lying in the godown of defendant on comission sale when the building was burnt down and the corn was destroyed. Agent became insolvent. The corn was covered by a fire insurance policy and the insurance company paid the insurance money to the receiver. The insurance premium was paid by the plaintiff.

Held , that the insurance money paid to the Official Assignee for goods destroyed by fire could be recovered by the plaintiff-creditor who would have a first claim on it. Even if the trust property had been changed into money, still it could be ear-marked and it could be followed and claimed by the cestui que trust . In re Hallett's Estate (1879) 13 Ch. D. 696, Foll. [P 60 C 1, 2]

N. N. Burjorjee—for Appellant

Auzam—for Respondent.

Judgment.— It is common ground that plaintiff had 1346 bags of gram lying in the godown of Syed Kazim on commission sale, when the building was burnt down and the gram destroyed. The gram was covered by a fire insurance policy and the Java Sea and Fire Insurance Company paid the Official Assignee Rs. 5,721 on account of the value of 1000 bags of gram destroyed by fire. It should be explained that Sayed Kazim had died and his estate was administered in insolvency. There is also no reason whatever to doubt the very definite evidence that the insurance premium Rs. 150 was paid by plaintiff. Plaintiff sued to recover the insurance money from the Official Assignee.

The learned Judge on the original side held that the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover the gram had it remained gram at the time of the insolvency, but that, as it has been converted into money, he could not follow and recover the money. To our mind the authorities on which the learned Judge relies do not support his view He quotes a passage from William's Bankruptcy Practice at p. 230 (Edn. 13) to the effect that according to the ordinary course of business between merchants and their factors, the former voluntarily became the creditors of their factors in respect of the moneys so received, whereby the moneys, although the proceeds of goods received on trust, lose their trust character. But this in no wise justifies a finding that the insurance money for goods belonging to the creditor lose its trust character On the previous page it is pointed out that property vested in the bankrupt as an agent, such as a factor, etc , will not pass to the trustee of the creditors, so long as it or its proceeds remain distinguishable from the mass of the bankrupt's property.

It is also pointed out shortly after the passage quoted that goods brought by the bankrupt with the proceeds of property deposited with him can be followed by the cestui que trust, if such goods can be identified, even though the purchase of them is breach of trust,

There would seem no reason therefore why the insurance money paid to the trustee for goods destroyed by fire should not be recoverd by the creditor In re Hallett's Estate (1) is clearly good authority for following the proceeds of trust property so long as they are identifiable, and in this case they obviously are. So it is laid down in the Laws of England, Halsbury, in S 275 (p. 169) that if the trust property is disposed of by a trustee the proceeds of the disposition may be followed and claimed by the cestui que trust, if they can be identified The same rule applies if the trust property has been changed into money and the money can be ear-marked. We consider that plaintiff had a first claim on the insurance money and his suit should have been decreed. The appeal will be allowed and the suit decreed with costs in both Courts

Halker—for Respondent

Judgment — Laxmishanker Lalljee was adjudicated an insolvent on 14th December 1926. On 16th October 1926, he being the owner of a half share of a leasehold plot of land with a building thereon, mortgaged it for Rs. 1,500 to the respondent who was the owner of the other half share. Subsequent to the insolvency he applied to the Court for the realization of his security The claim was referred to the Official Assignee for enquiry and report The Official Assignee reported against the claim, and applied under S 55, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, that the mortgage be declared void on the ground that it had been given within two years of the date of the insolvency, not in good faith or for consideration. The learned Judge of the original side in his insolvency jurisdiction held in favour of the respondent, declared him to be a secured creditor and directed that the mortgaged property be sold and that the proceeds, after deducting the Official Assignee's commission, be paid to the respondent to the extent of his debt. It is in respect of this order that the present appeal is filed.

The burden of proving good faith and consideration in cases arising under S 55 is on the person claiming to be a secured creditor; see Official Assignee of Madras v C Sambanda Mudaliar (1). The learned Judge has based his decision on a finding that a certain transaction which took place between the insolvent and the respondent on 5th August 1926, was a genuine transaction. This transaction is evidenced by a promissory note for Rs 1,000 executed by the insolvent in favour of the respondent, a document which also contains words which amount to a mortgage or charge over the insolvent's half share in favour of the respondent for the amount of the debt The document ought therefore to have been, but was not, registered The short answer to the respondent's case is that the terms of the contract between the parties having been reduced to the form of a document, under S 91, Evidence Act, no evidence of its terms is admissible except the document, which itself is inadmissible. Therefore, no evidence at all can be given of the transaction of 5th August

As, however, the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the transaction of 5th August was genuine and that the later mortgage was merely exchanging a security which, for technical reasons, was invalid for a security which was legally valid, we propose briefly to examine the salient features of the evidence. (Here the judgment discussed evidence and continued) We are satisfied that the respondent has failed to prove that the mortgage was given in good faith and for consideration. We are less reluctant to disturb the finding on a question of fact of the trial Judge for the reason that only a very small fraction of the evidence was given before him.

It follows that the order of the learned Judge of the original side sitting in insolvency must be set aside, and that for it there must be substituted an order that the mortgage in favour of the respondent be declared to be void as against tht Official Assignee and that it be set aside. The respondent will pay the costs of the appellants here and below, advocate's costs in each Court five gold mohurs

Where in a suit leave of the High Court, although necessary under Cl. 12, Letters Patent, is not obtained, the defendant must raise the objection as to the jurisdiction of the High Court at the first available opportunity. If he fails to do so, and at first submits to the High Court's jurisdiction, such submission constitutes waiver which cures the defect created by omission to apply for leave : 35 Cal. 394 and 17 *C. Reference is made to the cases of Jairam Narayan v. Atmaram Narayan (1), Haribhai Gandabhai v Secretary of State (2), and Abdul Kadir v. Doolanbibi (3), where it has been held that leave not having first been obtained, the High Court has no jurisdiction In each of these cases objection to the jurisdiction was raised at the first available opportunity.

There has in the present case been submission on the part of the defendant to the jurisdiction of the Court, since he has filed a written statement and asked for the issue of a commission, and the objection now taken is an afterthought

It has been pointed out in A J King v. Secretary of State (4), which has been followed in Saraswati Dassee v Biraj Mohini Dassee (5), that where there is in the beginning a submission to the jurisdiction of the High Court, such submission constitutes waiver, and that, therefore, where the jurisdiction of the Court is fettered only by the fact that leave to sue must be given by the Court itself, such waiver cures the defect created by omission to apply for leave The same principle has been affirmed in Ganesh Narain Sahi Deo v. Manik Lal Chandra (6). It commends itself as based on a sound legal concept as well as on practical common sense. The objection is not upheld; the case proceeds

Limitation Act. S. 18—Mere act of fraud is not sufficient—It must be proved that a person's title or right had been kept from his knowledge by other party's fraud.

It is not sufficient to make S. 18 operative that the cause of action should be based on fraud. It is necessary that the right claimed or the title on which it is founded, should have been kept from the knowledge of the applicant by means of fraud, although it may be that in certain circumstances it could be assumed from the act of fraud itself which gave the cause of action that this act of fraud was fraudulently concealed from the person affected: *A. Judgment.—The respondent Chettyar Firm obtained a mortgage-decree against the appellant Bowrammah and others In execution of this decree certain property was sold by auction on 3rd March 1928. The sale was confirmed on 4th April 1928 On 5th April one of the defendants Veena Subba Row, filed an application asking to have the sale set aside. He stated that the plaintiffs in collusion with the present appellant had sold the land privately for Rs. 1,250 This application was dismissed on 7th April. On 9th June the present appellant filed an application to set aside the sale. She is the mother of Subba Rao, who made the application on 5th April She states that she heard about a week before filing her application that Subba Rao had negotiated with the plaintiffs for sale of the property to a Chinaman for 6,000 that the Chettyar then said that they would arrange not to hold the sale if payment was made within three months, and that subsequently the Chettyar fraudulently arranged to prevent the Chinaman from being present at the auction

The appellant's application was filed under the provisions of O 21, R 90, Civil P. C. It was filed three months after the date of the sale sought to be set aside, and was prima facie therefore clearly barred by limitation. The appellant, however, claims that she is saved from the bar by the provisions of S. 18, Lim. Act The learned trial Judge held that she has not established this claim, and rejected her application as time barred. She has now appealed against this decision.

Three cases have been cited to us, but none of them appears to have any direct bearing on the point at issue

In the case of Ramdhari Chowdhuri v. Deonandan Prasad Sing (1), it was held at p 70 (of I. L. R. 2 Pat), in circumstances similar to the present that the application was time barred, unless it could be shown that the respondents' right to set the sale aside was concealed from him by fraud of the appellant.

A similar view was taken in the case of Mohendro Narain Chaturaj v. Gopal Mundul (2) and in the case of Golam Ahad Chowdhury v. Judhistir Chandra Shaha (3)

(1) A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 507=2 Pat. 65.
(2) [1890] 17 Cal. 769.
(3) [1903] 30 Cal. 142=7 C. W. N. 305.

These decisions merely set forth the provisions of S. 18, Lim. Act, as applying to cases such as the present.

We have been referred on behalf of the appellant to a passage in the judgment in Golam Ahad Chowdhury's case (3) at p 153.

"But if the right of the appellant to apply under the section was concealed from him by fraud of the respondents he would by the operation of S. 18, Lim. Act, and notwithstanding the confirmation of the sale, have 30 days within which to make his application from the date on which the fraud first became known to him."

It is contended that this is an authority in favour of the appellants' claim in the present case, because the fraud alleged in the present case is a fraud by the respondents We are unable, however, to see how this helps the appellant

Section 18, Lim. Act does not say that when the cause of action is based on fraud, time only begins to run from the date when the fraud became known to the applicant. S. 18 says

"When any person having a right to institute a suit or make an application has by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded, * * * bulb stolen from a street lamp by a Burman and a Chinaman. A search was made in the Chinaman's house and a bulb was found, which was recognized as the respondent's. The respondent has never at any time professed to have any personal knowledge as to who was the thief, and the facts stated by him in the first information report are substantially true. Evidence was given as to the theft by the durwan and the jamadar and admittedly an electric bulb was found in the house of the appellant. The respondent may have been wrong in his identification of the bulb as belonging to the Electric Supply Co., but it appears that even in the criminal case he admitted that the bulb which was found in the possession of the appellant might have been obtained elsewhere. The respondent calls himself a shareholder in the Electric Supply Co. and he appears to have been also a manager. There is nothing whatever to show that he intentionally gave false information to the police and the investigating police officer says that he investigated the case and sent it up for trial and that the respondent never came to him, before he sent up the case The trial Judge considered it to be evidence of malice that the Chinese elders of the town told the respondent that the appellant was innocent, and yet he did nothing. The respondent does admit that he was told by the elders that the appellant was an honest man, and got the bulb by purchase. But that was after he had made the first information report By that time the case was out of his hands and there is nothing to show that he took any further action against the appellant I am quite unable to accept his retaining the services of an advocate in the Magistrate's Court as evidence of malice He was perfectly entitled to do this, and the filing of the present civil case against him suggests that he was wise in doing so.

It is not suggested that that the parties had had any quarrel before the complaint was made to the police, or that the respondent had any reason whatever for wishing to get the appellant into trouble. I am of opinion that the appellant has entirely failed to prove that the respondent acted with malice.

I therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Special Second Appeal No. 206 of 1928, Decided on 21st December 1928.

(a) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Divorce.

Where a Burmese Buddhist man slaps his wife though once and cohabits with another woman and gets a child from her, the wife is entitled to divorce. [P 64 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 114—Marriage.

Presumption of marriage arises from long cohabitation. [P 64 C 2]

So Nyun—for Appellant.

Thein Maung—for Respondent

Judgment. — Respondent sued appellant for divorce under Burmese Buddhist law on the ground of cruelty She alleged that the appellant had ill-treated her, and deserted her and had taken another wife without her consent

The Township Court found that respondent proved that appellant had beaten her and had left her and cohabited with another woman by whom he had had a child, but the learned Judge said that "merely slapping by a husband to his wife and once in a blue moon cannot be taken as cruelty and as such good ground for divorce" and that although appellant had lived with the other woman and had had a child by her, his living with her did not amount to taking another wife so as to entitle respondent to a divorce

The learned Judge was clearly wrong on both points On the first point he has overlooked the rulings in the cases of Mg Po Han v. Ma Talok (1) and Ma Sat v. Mg. Nyi Bu (2) and on the second he has overlooked the presumption of marriage which arises from long cohabitation.

His judgment was quite rightly set aside by the District Court and it is clear that there are no merits in the appeal

Respondent was in my opinion entitled to a decree for divorce on the ground of serious misconduct on the part of the husband and the appeal is dismissed with costs, advocate's fee in this Court to be five gold mohurs

V. E A. R. M. Chettyar Firm — Appellant.

v.

A K. R. M. K. Chettyar Firm — Respondent.

First Appeal No. 182 of 1928, Decided on 3rd December 1928.

 Transfer of Property Act, S. 59—S holding two plots with building thereon by sale-deed and also possessing lease-deeds under which his vendor held those plots — S depositing sale-deed and one lease-deed with A with intention to create mortgage thereon and subsequently other lease-deed with B— Lease-deeds bearing endorsements showing sale of the property — Mortgage of whole property was created in A's favour—B cannot get priority over A merely because A did not insist on obtaining other lease-deed— Transfer of Propety Act, S. 78.

All that is required to prove to establish an equitable mortgage is (1) that documents of title were deposited with a creditor and (2) that the intent was to create a security thereon. [P 66 C 1]

One S held two plots of land and a building thereon, by virtue of a registered sale-deed. He also possessed with him the original lease-deeds under which the plots were held by his vendor. He deposited the sale-deed and also the lease-deed with regard to one of the plots with A, with intention to create a security thereon, and thereafter deposited the other lease-deed with B with the same intent. On each of the lease-deeds there was an endorsement that the property was sold to S.

Held that A had title-deeds with regard to the whole property deposited with him and an equitable mortgage was created on the whole property in his favour although he did not possess the other lease-deed: A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 115, Dist. Roberts v. Croft, 53 E. R. 343, Rel. on. [P 66 C 1]

Held further that the mere fact that A did not insist on obtaining the other lease-deed which on the face of it showed that there was a sale of the property effected, did not constitute gross negligence on A's part so as to give priority to B's mortgage over A's A.I.R. 1926 Rang. 195, Rel. on. [P 66 C 2]

Ba Maw—for Appellant

K C Bose—for Respondent.

Judgment —The respondent, A. K. R M. K Chettyar Firm sued one Ma Ohn Sein and 3 others on an equitable mortgage, the property claimed to be mortgaged consists of 2 plots of land and a building thereon The two plots of land are known as lots Nos. 232 & 232-A. They were originally held under a lease from the Rangoon Development Trust by one Ma Pyu who by a registered deed sold the two plots of land and the building thereon to one U Po Gyi The respondent-plaintiffs claimed that they took an equitable mortgage of the property from U.Po Gyi on 5th December 1924. U Po Gyi is now dead, and the first three defendants in the case are his legal representatives They first contested the suit, but finally dropped out of it and the real contest was between the respondent-plaintiffs and the appellants, who were the defendants 4.

The appellant V. E. A. R. M. Firm claimed that they have an equitable mortgage on the property known as lot No 232A and so much of the building as stands thereon The learned trial Judge held that the respondents had established their mortgage as regards lot No 232 and as regards all the buildings on both the pieces of land The learned Judge, held, however, that the respondents had failed to establish their claim as regards lot No 232-A and gave a decree in favour of the appellants as regards this site. Otherwise the decree grants the plaintiffs' prayer The V E A R M Firm have appealed against this decree and cross-objections have been filed on behalf of the original plaintiffs

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the transfer of land of necessity carries with it a transfer of any building on that land, and that the learned trial Judge having found against the respondents that their mortgage on lot No 232-A failed should have rejected the respondents' claim and refused a mortgage decree, on so much of the building as stands on lot No 232-A

The mortgage in favour of the appellants was effected some 16 months after the mortgage in favour of the respondents The learned trial Judge held that the appellants having obtained the lease-deed as regards lot No 232-A, that piece of land was under mortgage to them, and not to the respondents He referred to the case of Pranjivandas Jagajivandas Mehta v Chan Mah Phee (1), where it was settled that the scope of the security created by a deposit of title-deeds is the scope of the title covered by those deeds. It does not seem to us, however, that very much help can be derived here from the decision in that case in which the point at issue was not whether an equitable mortgage could be created although there was not a complete deposit of all the title-deeds. An equitable mortgage is created by deposit with a creditor of documents of title to immovable property with intent to create a security thereon All that is necessary to prove to establish such a mortgage is (1) that documents of title were deposited with a creditor and (2) that the intent was to create a security thereon

In the case of Roberts v Croft (2) the facts were in many ways very similar to the facts in this case In that case Roberts had deposited with one Miss Wilis documents of title relating to certain property. These documents included all the previous title-deeds to the property but did not include the deed whereby Roberts himself obtained title. Subsequently Roberts deposited the remaining deed with Messrs. Bult In each case the deposit was made with intent to create an equitable mortgage. It was held that in order to establish an equitable mortgage it was not necessary to prove that the deeds deposited showed a good title in the depositor, and although she received no deed showing any right to the property in her mortgagor, it was nevertheless held that Miss Wilis' mortgage was a perfectly good one It was further held that the subsequent mortgage to Messrs Bult by deposit of the remaining deed was also a perfectly good mortgage, but that there had been negligence on the part of Messrs. Bult and that, therefore, Miss Wilis' mortgage must be preferred to theirs In the present case the documents deposited with the respondent's firm consists of a sale-deed with regard to both the pieces of land, and the house, and the lease-deed with regard to lot No 232. Title-deeds have, therefore, been deposited with regard to the whole property and in our opinion a valid equitable mortgage has been created on the whole property if it has been shown that was the intention of the parties at the time of the deposit.

The question of intention has not been specifically considered by the learned trial Judge, but we are of opinion that the respondent-plaintiff did establish their case in this connexion. The clerk of the Chettyar firm has given evidence on the point and he is supported in his evidence by one Maung Kan Hla His explanation with regard to the lease-deed of the property lot 232-A, is that at the time U Po Gyi said he could not find the document. We understand that the bulk of the building affected is on lot 232, but that the building on lot 232 extends into lot 232-A, and it seems to us extremely unlikely that the respondent firm would accept a mortgage of part only of a house. We consider it sufficiently established that the intention was to mortgage both the lots and the building thereon We therefore hold that a valid mortgage of the whole property was effected in favour of the respondents.

It only remains therefore to consider whether the respondents have by their negligence entitled the appellants to claim any priority over them It does not seem to us that they have established their case in this particular Under S 78, T. P. Act, the respondents' mortgage would have to be postponed to the appellants' mortgage if the respondents have been guilty of gross negligence.

It was held in the case of A. L R M. Chettyar Firm v L P. R. Chettyar Firm (3) that there was no universal rule to the effect that parting with title-deeds by a mortgagee amounted to gross negligence. In this case the lease-deed which was the only document of title held by appellants bears an endorsement that the property was sold to U Po Gyi by registered deed The appellants must therefore be held to have been aware of the fact that they had not got all the title-deeds relating to the property and there is no explanation as to why they made no enquiries The respondent firm presumably knew that there was this endorsement on the lease of lot 232-A as there was a similar endorsement on their lease, and the mere fact that they did not insist on obtaining one of the documents of title which on the face of it, must clearly have shown the existence of another important document does not in our opinion amount to such gross negligence as to justify the appellants' mortgage being preferred to theirs.

It has been suggested on behalf of the appellants that the respondents admitted that the appellants' mortgage was taken without notice of their previous mortgage We cannot, however, find anything on the record to justify their contention. It is true that it is recorded in the deposition of Rathnam Pillay that the learned advocate for the respondents, who had been questioning the witness with a view to establish actual notice did not pursue that line. And the learned trial Judge comments on this matter to the same effect

It is admitted that the respondents do not allege actual notice by the appellants What they do allege is that the appellants were put on their enquiry and could have received actual notice had they taken reasonable precautions. One other matter has been raised in appeal and that is as regards costs. It is contended that the actual proof of the respondents' mortgage was necessary only because other respondents in the case denied the mortgage, and that the costs of this part of the case should not have been awarded against the appellants It is clear, however, that the appellants also though not denying the mortgage did not admit it, and that being so, it became necessary for the respondents to prove their mortgage as against the appellants We do not think therefore that there is any force in this contention We dismiss the appeal and allow the cross-objections We alter the decree of the trial Court and give a mortgage decree in favour of the respondents for the whole of both the plots of land and the building thereon. The appellant-defendants will pay the costs of the respondent-plaintiffs in the trial Court and in this Court the appellants will pay the respondents costs both on the appeal and on the cross-objections

Judgment—In Civil Regular No. 39 of 1924 of the District Court of Pyapon the plaintiffs (respondents) obtained a decree against U Shwe Dun and defendant 1 (appellant 1) for possession of certain lands. By the decree dated 2nd May 1927, of this Court in Civil First Appeal No 213 of 1925 the decree of the District Court was varied and U shwe Dun and defendant 1 were ordered to give to the plaintiffs possession of the following lands:

(b) Holding No 10 of 1923-24 in Kyaungsu kwin, aforesaid measuring 24·21 acres.

(c) Holding No 6 of 1923-24 in Kywesa-gyet, Taung kwin aforesaid measuring about 22 26 acres

(d) 50 acres out of holding No 10 of 1923-24 in Ywathagyi kwin, aforesaid.

(e) Holding No. 5 of 1923-24 in Ywathagyi kwin, aforesaid measuring about 23 acres

In Civil Miscellaneous No. 80 of 1927 of this Court U Shwe Dun and defendant 1 on 2nd July 1927, applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against the decree of this Court on appeal. On 6th December 1927, a certificate was granted in respect of this and two other cases, the subject matter of Civil Miscellaneous Applications No 78 and 79 of 1927, that they were fit cases for appeal to the Privy Council. The appeal was admitted on 30th January 1928 and the record was despatched to England on 31st July 1928.

In the meantime the plaintiffs had been put into possession of the suit land and had on 5th September 1927, instituted Civil Regular No. 31 of 1927 of the District Court of Pyapon against defendant 1 (appellant 1) and the heirs and legal representatives of U Shwe Dun, then deceased (the appellants), claiming mesne profits which had accrued since the institution of Civil Regular No 39 of 1924. On 24th September 1927 the defendants filed a written statement in which inter alia they pleaded that an appeal to the Privy Council had been "admitted," and asked for a postponement until after the decision of the Privy Council. On that day a single issue was framed namely "are the plaintiffs entitled to mesne profits as claimed? If so to what extent". It should be noted that no issue was asked on the question of whether there should be a stay and that in the written statement the defendants had not pleaded that the District Court was bound to stay the suit On 4th November 1927 they filed a substantive application asking for stay until after the Privy Council decision. On 10th November 1927, this application was dismissed Up to that time no certificate had been granted and as the Additional Judge pointed out, there was no certainty that the application for a certificate would be granted, or, if it was granted, that the appeal to the Privy Council would be successful. The case was fixed for hearing on 29th November 1927 and on that day it was postponed to 12th January 1928 The defendants did not appeal on that day and an ex-parte decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs on 13th January 1928 On 20th January 1928, the defendants filed an application to re-open the case, and with this application they filed a copy of the order of this Court dated 6th December 1927, certifying that the case was a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council This appears to have been the first intimation to the Court that such an order had been passed The Additional Judge refused to re-open the case. Two appeals have been filed by the defendants, one from the refusal to re-open the case, which is dealt with in a separate judgment, and one from the decree in the suit

So far as the decree in the suit is concerned only two grounds have been argued. It is possible to dispose, shortly, of one ground, that the decree should have been against the defendants, not personally, but in their capacity of legal representatives. The persons who had been in possession of the suit lands and who were ordered to give up possession thereof were U Shew Dun and Ma Kho U the (defendant 1) U Shwe Dun died leaving as his heirs and legal representatives the defendants In Civil Regular No. 34 of 1927 the defendants were sued for mesne profits and it was not stated whether any and if so which of them were sued as legal representatives of U Shwe Dun. The decree was passed against all the defendants personally. Mr. Paw Tun for the respondents concedes that this was erroneous The decree as regards the mesne profits should have been passed against defendant 1 personally and against all the defendants as heirs and legal representatives of U Shwe Dun deceased. There is no reason why all the defendants, who must be taken to have wrongfully resisted the suit, should not pay the costs in their personal capacities It should be stated that the ground of appeal covered the case of all the defendants, but defendant (1) was clearly liable in her personal as well as in her representative capacity.

The third ground of appeal is that inasmuch as the plaintiffs based their case on a decree of this Court which is now

"and was at the time of the decision of the present suit the subject of an appeal to His Majesty in Council and could not or should not under such circumstances have been made the grounds for a decision by the trial Court."

If and in so far as the District Court had a discretion to proceed with the trial of the suit, there seems to be no ground for interference with its discretion So long as the decree of this Court stood the plaintiffs had a right to sue and there was no reason why the proof of their claims and the realization of the amount due to them should be postponed for an indefinite time:

Mr Young for the appellants relies on S 10, Civil P C. That section, so far as material, prohibits a Court from proceeding "with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title where such suit is pending" before His Majesty in Council

Mr Young's argument would appear to be that, inasmuch as the defendants were appealing to the Privy Council, the District Court was bound to stay the suit. His position is, apparently, that the "matter" in issue in the present suit was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit inasmuch as the right to recover the mesne profits depends on the title to the land. The authorities cited by him are not helpful to his argument

In Wahidunnissa Bibi v Zamin Ali Shah (1), Z and J brought a suit against W and other heirs of W's deceased husband, claiming certain property in virtue of a deed of gift from the mother of the deceased The suit was decreed and an appeal was filed from the decree. Pending the appeal, W brought a suit against Z and J and another, in which she claimed one-sixth of her dower debt, exempting the other heirs of her late husband In the second suit the deed of gift in favour of Z and J was again brought in question, the plaintiff alleging that it was invalid and inoperative. In this suit the Court, at the instance of the defendants made an order under S 10 staying proceedings until the appeal in the former suit should have been decided The High Court on revision refused to interfere with this order Both the learned Judges of the High Court appear to have regarded the matter as one for the exercise of discretion as to whether the second suit should or should not be stayed

In Jamini Nath Mallik v Midnapur Zamindary Co (2), which was an application for revision, two suits involving claims for certain cesses against the petitioners were decided against them and were pending in appeal, when a rent suit was brought against the petitioners. They applied for stay of the suit under S 10, inasmuch as it concerned cesses alleged to be due for a subsequent period Rankin, J, held that although appeals fall within the purview of the section yet it was not applicable to the case before him, which was a suit for a different debt altogether and for a debt which was not in existence when the last of the previous suits was brought.

In Kuberan Nambudri v. Koman Nair (3) it was held by Srinivasa Aiyangar, J, that the expression "Matter in issue" in S. 10 has reference to the entire subject in controversy between the parties and the mere fact that one of the issues in two suits is common is not sufficient to attract the operation of S. 10. The common issue in the case before him was whether the plaintiff had been validly adopted.

Applying the two last named cases, which seem to have been well decided, to the matter before us, if we take the chronological test adopted by Rankin, J., the right to mesne profits accrued subsequently to the institution of the prior suit and was not in existence at the date of such institution, while it is manifest that although there is an issue common to the two suits, they do not embrace the entire subject in controversy between the parties

For these reasons alone the appeal must fail. There are yet other reasons. As is pointed out in Nainappa Chetty v. Chidambaram Chetti (4).

"the mere applying for, or obtaining leave to appeal to the Privy Council cannot of itself amount to the pendency of an appeal till such appeal is actually filed, for it may happen that the parties, who obtain such leave, may never appeal at all against such decree or order."

At the time when the defendants applied to stay the suit, the application for a certificate that the case was a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council had not been heard, and it would be to somewhat violently stretch the language of S. 10 to hold that an appeal was pending before the Privy Council The certificate was granted on 6th December 1927, the defendants took no steps to amend the written statement, and consequently, when the suit came on for ex-parte hearing, it was tried on the single issue which had been previously fixed As has been said above the certificate was brought to the notice of the Court only after the case had been heard, namely on 20th January 1928, and it was not until 30th January 1928 that the appeal to the Privy Council was admitted It is not necessary for the decision of this appeal to decide the exact point of time at which an appeal may be said to become pending before the Privy Council, whether it is when it is registered as such in the Privy Council Office, or when it is admitted by the High Court or when the certificate of fitness is given It is sufficient to say that even if the last mentioned time is taken, the Court was unaware that the certificate had been granted and there was no issue raised as to S. 10, Civil P. C

Mr. Young has asked us to act under S. 151. If the appellants had been prepared, as was at one time it was suggested might have been the case to deposit the decretal sum in Court, with a view to its ultimate ownership being determined by the result of the appeal to the Privy Council, there might have been ground, which under the existing circumstances is lacking, for the application of that section The decree of the District Court will be modified by a provision that in so far as it is a decree for 4,200 baskets of paddy or Rs 8,400 the value thereof, it shall be a decree against defendant 1 personally and against all the defendants as legal representatives of U Shwe Dun. Civil Misc. Appln. No. 81 of 1928, Decided on 18th September 1928, from judgment of Mosely J., in Second Appeal No 540 of 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 1—Mistake or error—Error of law must be obvious.

An error of law is a proper ground for review when that error is apparent on the fact of the record A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 98, Foll. A. I. R. 1928 Rang. 12, Ref. [P 70 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 1—Ground for review—Illegal delivery of judgment depriving right to appeal—Ground is sufficient for granting review.

Delivery of judgment without previous notice to the parties or their pleaders is illegal, and this illegal action, if it deprives a party of a very important right of obtaining leave to appeal, is a sufficient ground for granting a review A I R. 1922 P.C. 112, Ref [P 71 C 1]

P. B. Sen—for Applicants

Paget—for Respondents.

Judgment—This is an application for review of a judgment of Mosely, J., and comes before me because he is no longer attached to the Court. The first ground of the application is that the decision is wrong in law. It has been urged by the advocate for the applicants that an error of law is a proper ground for review, and in support of this proposition he quotes, among others, the cases of Ma Hta Yi v Ma Pwa Hnit (1) and Murari Rao v. Balavanth Dikshit (2)

I am willing to accept the proposition that an error of law is included within the second category of R. 1, O. 47, Civil P. C, but that error must be one that is apparerent on the face of the record I agree with the view expressed by the learned Judges in the Madras case above quoted, where they say at p. 957 of the report

"We are of opinion that each case must be judged by itself and that where the error of law is such that it is clearly apparent on a perusal of the record, there is ground for granting a review."

In the present case I do not think that there is any such error I do not say that the decision of the learned Judge is correct It may or may not be correct; but I am certainly not prepared to say that it is so obviously incorrect that there is an error apparent on the face of the record The question raised is one that is extremely difficult and controversial It was, in fact, the question on which the whole appeal turned, and it was decided after full consideration by the learned Judge This ground, therefore, in my opinion, must fail.

The other ground is different. The facts are that Mosely, J. was officiating as a Judge of this Court up to 29th May 1928, and after that date ceased to be a Judge of the Court. It is admitted that he delivered judgment in this appeal on 29th May 1928, and that he did so without previous notice being given to the parties or their advocates of the date on which judgment would be given The advocates were informed shortly afterwards that judgmeut had been given, and Mr Sen for the applicants says that he endeavoured on the same day to see the Judge in order to obtain from him a certificate for appeal under Cl 13 of the Letters Patent of this Court He was unable, however, to find the Judge, and, therefore, could not make that application He did subsequently make an application; but this was rejected on the ground that under Cl. 13 of the Letters Patent it is only the Judge who passed the judgment who can declare that the case is a fit one for appeal

The rules of this Court provide that an application for such a declaration may be made orally at the time of delivery of judgment, or afterwards, in writing at any time within one month. The fact that the learned Judge ceased to be attached to the Court from the day on which he passed judgment deprived the petitioners of their right to make such an application in writing, and the fact that the Judge delivered judgment without previous notice to the parties deprived them of the opportunity of making the application orally.

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Rang 12=5 Rang. 610.
(2) A. I. R 1924 Mad. 98=46 Mad. 955.

Delivery of judgment in this way, without previous notice was illegal and by his illegal action the Judge deprived the petitioners of a very important right. In my view this should be held to be a sufficient reason under R. 1, O. 47, Civil P. C. The case was, in my opinion, a very fit one for grant of a declaration under Cl 13 of the Letters Patent, and in all probability, had such an application been made to him, the Judge would have granted the declaration.

I do not think that in holding this to be a sufficient cause for review I am departing from the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (3). There was, in my opinion, an error of procedure apparent on the face of the record, and this brings the matter within the view taken by their Lordships that the words "any other sufficient reason" mean a reason sufficient on grounds analogous to those specified immediately previously.

I, therefore, grant the application for review The judgment of the learned Judge is set aside and the appeal will be re-heard. The question, as I have already said, is an extremely difficult and controversial one, and I think that the appeal is one that should properly be heard by a Bench I direct, therefore, that the rehearing of the appeal be before a Bench, or, should the Chief Justice so decide, before a Full Bench. The respondents are in no way to blame for the error committed by the learned Judge. I, therefore, direct that the costs of this application shall be costs in the appeal when reheard ; advocate's fee in this application three gold mohurs.

J Ch.* 284, Dist. [P 72 C 2]

Shaffee -for Appellant.

Banerji—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a suit upon a mortgage. The mortgage is one covering the mortgagor's life interest in certain immovable property. The parties are Jews. The property is within Rangoon and the mortgage is in the English form with a power of sale, which is the power governed by S 69, T P. Act. The date of the mortgage is 16th May 1919 and the date fixed for payment is 15th May 1924. It is agreed that the mortgagor has been in arrears of interest more than once and that the mortgagee has filed suits against him to recover the interest The last of these suits was filed before the 15th May 1924 The only point for decision in this appeal is whether owing to the filing of these suits the plaintiff is debarred from suing on his mortgage for the recovery of the principal and the interest which subsequently became due.

There is no doubt that at the date of the filing of the last of the suits for interest the principal money had not become due in the ordinary way and that therefore O. 2, R 2, would not bar his suit. It is claimed, however, that by virtue of the power of sale a right of suit on the mortgage for the payment of the principal money would arise before the 15th May 1924, and if this contention is good then no doubt O 2, R 2, would bar the suit The mortgage is a somewhat complicated one, but I would only give the salient points. First of all, in consideration of the sum of Rs. 10,000 the mortgagor assigned all his life interest to the mortgagee subject to the proviso that he might redeem his interest by repaying the mortgage money on 15th May 1924 together with all arrears of interest at 9 per cent. per annum It further covenants for payment of interest month by month on or before the 15th day of the month succeeding that for which the interest is due So far it is clear that the mortgage money had not become due before the 15th May 1924, and it is also clear that there is a separate covenant for payment of it. We then come to the clause giving the power of sale

"It is hereby agreed and declared that if the said mortgagor shall fail to pay the said sum of Rs. 10,000 with arrears of interest due thereon on the expiration of the period of three months from the serving of a notice on him by the mortgagee calling upon him to pay up the said sum of Rs 10,000 and interest on the said 15th May 1924 or if at any time during the continuance of this security, interest due hereunder amounting to Rs. 500 at the least shall be in arrear and remain unpaid for three months then and in such case the mortgagee shall be at liberty and shall have the power to sell the said premises hereby assigned either by public auction * * * * *"

It is argued that in this clause default of payment of interest amounting to Rs. 500 for more than three months gives the mortgagee the right to claim his principal money The appellant relies upon one old English case only, Edwards v Martin (1)

It is quite clear that in these cases the rights of the parties and the question of whether any default accelerates the claim on which the principal money can be called in would depend entirely upon the wording of the mortgage in question. It must also be remembered that English cases are not necessarily good guides for the decision of mortgage suits in the Indian Courts, for the Indian cases are governed by the Transfer of Property Act and the Indian Courts know nothing of the refinements between the legal estate and the equitable estate which form the basis of all such decisions in the Court of Chancery. vide Webb v. Macpherson (2) and Gokul Dass v Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. (3) This particular power of sale is one which is to be exercised by the mortgagee himself personally and not through the agency of the Court, and supposing Rs 500 interest had been in arrears for more than three months, we entirely fail to see how he could approach the Court with any form of suit on this clause. The Court could merely tell him to go away and sell the property himself, if he was advised that the clause conformed with S. 69, T P. Act, and that default had arisen. There is no clause in this mortgage stating that if the interest is in arrears to the extent of Rs. 500 for more than three months, the mortgagee shall have the power to call in the principal money mentioned in the deed.

With regard to the case cited, Edwards v. Martin (1) in this case there was a mortgage of leaseholds upon which interest was payable half-yearly The mortgagee took possession and asked for foreclosure, although the time or the date fixed for repayment had not arrived It was admitted that in this case the capital was not due but it was claimed that the right to foreclose had arisen The circumstances of this case are therefore quite different to the circumstances in the present case. There is no claim to foreclose and the mortgage deed is quite silent with regard to any right to foreclose. In fact the power of sale would appear to negative the idea that any question of foreclosure was contemplated between the parties. It is also to be noted that in this case no reasons are given for the decision but the Court merely followed a dictum in another case for which no reasons have been given.

We are of opinion that as there is no clause providing that on default of payment of interest the mortgagee shall have the right to claim repayment of principal, he had no right of suit on the mortgage before the 15th May 1924. No suit for interest has been filed since that date and therefore O 2, R 2 cannot apply. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Court on its own motion fixed a case for hearing on a particular date, but the defendant, on whom the burden of proof lay, failed to appear, and the Court proceeded with the case and passed order which purported to be on merits,

Held . that the order should not have been on merits and the case must be held to have been decided as ex parte under O. 17, R. 2 · 37 All. 460 , A. I. R. 1923 All. 551 ; A. I. R. 1925 All 182, A. I. R 1923 Bom. 27 and 41 Cal. 956, Rel. on ; 41 All. 663, Dist. [P 74 C 2]

On the date fixed for evidence the defendants did not appear although burden lay on them. The Court made an order to proceed with the case without further reference to defendants' witnesses and began examination of plaintiffs and their witnesses. The defendants then appeared and the Court asked them to cross-examine the plaintiffs' witnesses if they desired to do so.

Chowdhury—for Respondents.

Judgment —In this case the appellants were the main defendants in the lower Court. The suit was filed against them on 10th January 1927, and proceeded on a usual course. Issues were framed on 26th March, and the case was put down for hearing on 17th May On 17th May it could not go forward and was put down for hearing on 31st May. On that date, the hearing could not be proceeded with, because certain proceedings were necessary which were in the High Court, but no date was fixed. The case was mentioned the next day, and the defence advocate asked for an adjournment to consider his position until 4th June He was called upon to furnish security for costs and advocate's fees. On 4th June it was stated that an agreement had been come to, and that a compromise petition would be filed. The 7th June was fixed for this. It was next put over to the 8th and then to the 9th and finally to the 10th, on which date the compromise petition was directed to be filed peremptorily On 10th June it was not so filed, and the case once more went down for peremptory hearing for 22nd and 23rd. On 22nd June some evidence was led, and it was put down for next day, but was not taken up, and further hearing was put down for 21st and 22nd July The case was apparently never put up on 21st July at all, and the diary does not explain why It came up, however, on 22nd July, on another point, and was adjourned till 22nd August, and steps were taken to have a handwriting expert examined. On 4th August a commission was ordered to issue, returnable on 1st September For some reason not apparent in the diary the case was put up on 17th August, and it was then put down for hearing at 10 a m sharp the next day, 18th August On this date the Judge gave the defendants on whom the burden of proof lay eight minutes' grace and, as they did not arrive at 10-8 a. m . he recorded a diary order :

" Under the circumstances the case proceeds without further reference to defendants' witnesses."

The plaintiff was examined, and a few minutes later defendants 1 and 2 arrived, followed by their advocate. Meanwhile, the plaintiffs' witnesses were being examined, and the Judge asked the defendants' advocate if they wished to cross-examine ; they elected not to do so, and the case was put for orders on 25th August, and orders were finally passed on 5th September. This order purports to have been passed on the merits. Against this order the present appeal has been filed.

It is argued that under these circumstances no order on the merits could possibly be passed. With this contention we are in entire agreement Phul Kuar

v. Hashmatullah Khan (1) is authority for holding that under similar circumstances, the case should be decided as though by default :

"When the plaintiff and his pleader are both absent on the day fixed for the hearing of a case and the Court does not intend to give them another opportunity of appearing it ought not to decide the suit on the merits but should dismiss it for default of appearance."

In the present case the burden of proof lay upon the defendants, and, therefore, it should have been decided, as though ex parte, against them.

In another Allahabad case, Ram Charan Lal v. Raghubir Singh (2), in a similar case, the defendants' advocate was present, but said he had no instructions One defendant, who was present, asked for an adjournment, but failed to get it. The Subordinate Judge took the evidence produced by the plaintiff, and, as there was no evidence produced on behalf of the defendants, he disposed of the case at once It was held that the case must be held to have been decided under O 17, R. 2, Civil P. C.

The same point came up again in the case of Ram Adhin v Ram Bharose (3) The headnote of this runs:

"On a date to which the hearing of a suit had been adjourned for the production of the defence evidence the defendant was absent and the Court passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. No order or rule was mentioned in the judgment."

The High Court in appeal held that the decree must be taken to have been passed ex parte under O. 17, R. 2, Civil P C.

Ratanbai Bhratar Shivlal v Shankar Deochand (4) is to the same effect. The point also arose in Enatulla Rasunia v. Jiban Mohan Roy (5) In this case it has been pointed out that there is a definite difference between O 17, R. 2, and O. 17, R 3, Civil P C, and that when O 17, R. 3, is applied there must have been an adjournment at the instance of a party. In the present case there seems to have been no adjournment at the instance of any party, but the Court merely set the case down for hearing of its own motion

The only case which has been cited against these is Sukkhu Koeri v Ram Lotan Koeri (6). This is a very peculiar case In it the plaintiff had had his case partly heard, but, then though appearing in Court, he failed to continue with it His action is given in the judgment:

Here he seems either to have lost his head or to have shown unnecessary obstinacy. It would probably have been better if he had put his witnesses in the box, but he declined either suggestion. He did not in our opinion withdraw the suit, but merely confessed his inability to go on any further."

The facts in this case are obviously quite different to the facts in the present one, and in that case the judgment, which was passed, was stated to have been under O 17, R 3, Civil P. C

We are quite unable to understand the procedure of the learned Judge offering the defendants a chance of going on and cross-examining the plaintiffs' witnesses, although refusing to examine their own witnesses, who are said to have been present in Court . Two courses, in our opinion, were open to him. He could either have refused to hear the defendants any more, which seems to have been his original intention, in which case the suit would be regarded as proceeding ex parte, or, when the defendants put in an appearance a few minutes, after he had begun to examine the plaintiff, he might have cancelled his previous order and allowed the suit to proceed in the ordinary way To allow the defendants to cross-examine and continue the contest to that extent, while at the same time refusing them permission to examine their witnesses, appears to us quite unjustified.

Following the first ruling quoted above Phul Kuar v. Hashmatullah Khan (1), we hold that there should have been no decision on the merits, and that the case must be held to have been decided under O 17, R. 2, Civil P. C, as ex parte Holding this as we do, the defendants would have their remedy of applying to have the ex-parte decree set aside, if they can show good cause, in the ordinary way for their nonappearance at the time and date fixed. They will be given one month from to-day in which to make application to the District Court ; if they fail to do so in that time, the ex-parte decree will stand in the same way as if they failed to satisfy the Judge of the District Court that they had good reasons for their non-appearance If they satisfy the Judge

Criminal Revn No. 123-B of 1928 (Mandalay), Decided on 10th September 1928

Burma Rural Self-Government Act (1921), S. 12—Abetment of breach of bye-laws is not offence under Penal Code, S. 109.

The abetment of a breach of the bye-laws framed by a District Council under the authority of the Burma Rural Self-Government Act is not punishable under S. 109, I. P. C., as it is not an abetment of an offence within the meaning of that section : 23 P. R. 1894 Cr., Rel. on. [P 75 C 2]

Judgment —This case is connected with Criminal Revision No. 122-B of 1928 of this Court, which relates to the conviction and sentence passed upon Pongyi U Kalayana for holding a private market within the compound of his monastery at Pale without a license in contravention of S. 7 of the bye-laws framed by the Monywa District Council in exercise of the power conferred by S. 52, sub-S (2), Cl (a), Burma Rural Self-Government Act, 1921 (Burma Act 4 of 1921 as amended by Act 9 of 1922) The penal provision for the breach of the bye-laws is contained in S 12 thereof which enacts, inter alia, that a breach of any of the bye-laws shall be punishable with a fine not exceeding Rs. 50.

The petitioners were some of the persons who exhibited goods for sale at U Kalayana's private market on 30th November 1927, and the prosecution against them was that by exhibiting goods for sale at that market they "committed an offence punishable under S. 12 of the said bye-laws, read with S. 109, I. P. C."

Section 109, I. P. C , prescribes punishment for the offence of abetment, if the act abetted is committed in consequence of the abetment, and provides that where no express provision is made for punishment of such abetment, the abettor shall be liable to be punished with the punishment provided for the offence abetted. Therefore, in any abetment of an offence, which is an offence itself, the substantive charge against the abettor is the abetment The prosecution in this case is therefore one under S 109, I. P. C

The question for determination is whether the abetment of a breach of the bye-laws framed by a District Council under the authority of the Burma Rural Self-Government Act above referred to is punishable under S. 109, I. P C; in other words, whether it is an abetment of an offence within the meaning of S. 109, I P. C. Under S. 40, I. P. C. the term "offence" employed in S. 109 denotes a thing punishable under the Code, or under any special or local law, and it is clear that the Burma Rural Self-Government Act is a local law within the meaning of S. 42 of the Code. But the Act itself has not declared a breach of a bye-law of a District Council to be an offence ; it merely authorizes the District Council by S. 80 (2) to direct, inter alia, that a breach of the bye-laws of the Council shall be punishable with fine not exceeding Rs. 50. Thus, a breach of S 7 of the bye-laws under consideration punishable under S 12 thereof, is not an offence rendered punishable by the Act itself

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the offence under S. 12 of the bye-laws is not an offence within the meaning of S. 40, and, consequently, of S. 109, I. P. C. I am fortified in this opinion by the decision in Ganda Shah v Queen-Empress (1) where it was held, inter alia, that a local law does not necessarily include a rule made under the provisions of a local law It is conceivable that where a local law declares a breach of the rules made under its authority to be punishable then a breach of such rules might constitute an offence within the meaning of S. 40, I P. C.

There being no provision either in the Act or in the bye-laws rendering exhibition of goods at a private market punishable, and as such exhibition cannot constitute an offence of abetment punishable under the Indian Penal Code, I feel constrained to set aside the conviction and sentences passed on the petitioners. I therefore allow their application and set aside the conviction and sentences.

Pratt, Offg. C. J.—Lim Po Leong was in possession of a Dodge Car the property of the plaintiff Company under a hire-purchase agreement The hirer had complete dominion over the car, which was in charge of his driver Maung Po Tin On 29th April 1925 the car was being used as a private taxi by a film troupe. Some films were taken at the Victoria Lakes and the taxi returned to 64, Prome Road. It was found that a mask had been left behind at the Lakes and, as the driver was having his breakfast, defendant Charlie Ba Ket a lad of 16 drove back with his brother and an actor to fetch it.

In the course of the drive he attempted to pass a car in front of him only to meet a car coming from the opposite direction He swerved to the left to avoid the car in front and piled his car up on a heap of laterite on the side of the road Plaintiff's case was that defendant entered and drove the car without the permission of the driver Maung Po Tin and in spite of his protests. It is admitted that, if this were so, defendant committed an independent trespass and would be liable for damages.

The learned trial Judge found on the evidence that the defendant drove the car with the permission and consent of the driver Maung Po Tin, who was at that time in charge of it On the evidence we are satisfied of the correctness of this finding. The Judge also found that there was no negligence on the part of the defendant, which could render him liable for damages, although he was of opinion that he was careless The fact seems to be that defendant drove to the best of his ability and was not negligent, but the accident occurred through his inexperience and want of skill

It has been argued before us that, as defendant was below the legal age to obtain a driving license, and therefore liable to a penalty for driving, a fact which he must have known, his action in driving the car is in itself a trespass It is urged that, if he drove with less skill than an experienced driver, that itself under the circumstances was negligence, and that negligence constituted a trespass I am quite unable to accept this argument The evidence shows that the defendant drove the car with the full consent and concurrence of the driver and of the film actors who had hired the car.

The driver and the actors had apparent dominion over the car, and it is impossible to hold that the action of the boy under the circumstances in driving was a trespass, nor could his merely unskilful driving amount to negligence, because he was not a licensed driver Neither the hirer from plaintiff, nor the film actors, nor the driver Maung Po Tin are parties to the case, and we are not therefore concerned with their liability. If defendant is to be regarded as a bailee and the suit based on contract, then he can have no liability, because he was not of legal age to contract,

It is to my mind impossible to hold also that defendant's lack of skill in driving, which resulted in the damage to the car, amounts to an independent tort. In the English case of Fawcett v. Smethurst (1), which has been referred to it was held that where a minor lad hired a car and drove it for a longer journey than contemplated by the contract, with the result that the car was damaged without negligence on the part of the defendant, his action did not amount to a trespass. The cases are not parallel but the principle involved is similar In my opinion on the facts defendant is not liable in tort I would dismiss the appeal with costs

In a suit, the nature and extent of the rights of the monks to use and occupy monastic lands which is religious property invokes a dispute regarding ecclesiastical matter within the competence of the Buddhist ecclesiastical authorities to decide, consequently, the Civil Courts in Upper Burma have no jurisdiction to entertain the dispute· (1897-01) 2 *U. Mya Bu, J.—This is an appeal made from the judgment in Civil Second Appeal No 105 of 1927, on a certificate issued under Cl. 13, Letters Patent. The grounds of appeal are numerous; but putting the appellants' case before us in a nutshell, it is that the civil Courts have no jurisdiction to decide the dispute between the parties to the case. The parties are Buddhist monks who occupy the monasteries shown on the map (Ex. A), at Pakokku, in Upper Burma, and the dispute between them is concerning monastic land The question for determination is whether the dispute is of the nature cognizable by the civil Courts

The appellants before us were the appellants in the Second Appeal, in which it appears that they did not make a point of assailing the judgment of the Court of first appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction. In view of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ram Lal Hargopal v Kishanchand (1), however, the appellants are not precluded from raising this question now

The Court of first instance, the Court of first appeal and this Court in second appeal, all have regarded the plaintiff-respondents' suit as one for enforcement of an arbitration award The plaint in the case is somewhat vague in its indication as to the nature of the suit; the heading shows that it was a suit for setting up stone-pillars along the red dotted line shown in the map annexed to the plaint It is set out in the plaint that the plaintiffs (respondents) and the defendant U Ahsaya (appellant 1), had a dispute over the boundary line of their monasteries and had in consequence appeared before the Thamuti Gaingok Pondawgyi U Kyi, who with the consent of the plaintiffs and the defendant demarcated the boundary on 1st October 1923 by setting up stone-pillars and writing a memorandum to that effect; and that, however, in Tabaung 1286 B.E. (February and March 1925), the two defendants (the appellants) removed the stone-pillars, with the result that the parties had to approach Sayadaw U Pyinnya of Mahawithutarama Taik in Wazo 1288 B E., who declared the demarcation made by U Kyi as correct, but the defendants would not abide by the decision and prohibited the plaintiffs from setting up stone-pillars and defendant 1 also wrote to the plaintiffs protesting against the setting up of stone-pillars The plaintiffs, therefore, prayed that the suit be decreed with costs

"allowing the setting up of stone-pillars along the red dotted line as shown in the map according to the decision of the pongyis."

The defendants in their written statement denied having agreed to submit

(1) A. I. R. 1924 P. C 95=51 Cal. 961=51 I. A. 72 (P.C.).

themselves to the authority either of U Kyi or U Pyinnya or that either of them made the decisions alleged by the plaintiffs They also pointed out that they objected to the plaintiffs setting up stone-pillars in their (defendants') kyaung compound, that the land in dispute belonged to them and not to the plaintiffs, and that as the case was between monks it should be referred for decision to the Thathanabaing. Thus, even in their written statements the appellants did raise the question of jurisdiction of the civil Courts to decide the matter in dispute in the suit But the Court of first instance framed only three issues:

(1) Whether the suit is maintainable for the enforcement of the award without agreement for reference

(2) Whether the alleged decision was arrived at by Pongyi U Pyinnya; and

(3) If so, is the award valid or not?

The learned Judge of the Court of first instance held on the first issue that the plaintiffs failed to prove that both parties agreed to refer the matter in dispute to U Pyinnya for decision, and also held on the issue 3 that the award was invalid as not having been duly stamped, and dismissed the suit accordingly.

The plaintiff-respondents then appealed to the District Court, pointing out in the memorandum of appeal that the issue as to whether the award was enforceable or not was misconceived that they had only mentioned that the reverend ecclesiastics to whom the matter was referred with the consent of the parties set up the demarcation posts, but that the trial Court had wrongly framed and determined the case as if it were one for enforcement of the award. It was further stated in the memorandum, that the reference in the plaint to the decision of U Pyinnya was made merely to show that the latter had made the decision as an ecclesiastical authority; and that, therefore the question of whether the award was enforceable or not was irrelevant. These are the materials from which the nature of the dispute is to be ascertained.

Somehow or other, the Court of first appeal considered that what was relied on as the award was the decision of U Kyi and not the decision of U Pyinnya, and accordingly framed certain issues which were considered necessary for the determination of the question as the validity of the award of U Kyi and remanded the case to the Court of first instance for evidence on those issues. The trial Court having, in obedience of the order of remand, given its findings on such issues, the District Court confirmed them and the plaintiff-respondents' suit was decreed. Thus arose the second appeal from which the present one has arisen.

It appears to me that the suit was not one for enforcement of an award, and it was not one of a mere boundary dispute between the pongyis holding adjacent plots of monastic land It is quite evident that the land occupied or claimed by the two respondents on the one hand and by appellant 1 on the other formed one monastic compound and was held as one piece of monastic property commonly known as a kyaungtaik, and that recently, the plaintiff-respondents and defendant-appellants 1 tried to break up this kyaungtaik, to have separate holdings, with the result that the dispute arose as to the extent of land to which each party was entitled to occupy, and, therefore, when the plaintiff-respondents attempted to set up boundary pillars, the defendant-appellants objected In my opinion, therefore, the suit relates to the nature and extent of the rights of the monks in question to use and occupy monastic land which is religious property and that, consequently, the dispute involved in the suit is purely an ecclesiastical matter.

In the sanad granted to the Thathanabaing, it is provided that the civil Courts will, within the limits of their jurisdiction, give effect to the orders of the Thathanabaing and of the Gainggyoks, Gaingoks, Gaindauks and other ecclesiastical authorities duly appointed by him, in so far as those orders relate to matters which are within the competence of those authorities: see U Tha Gywe's Treatise on Buddhist Law, Vol I, p 234, at 235. In U Thatdama v. U Meda (2), where the plaintiffs sued for a declaration of their right to the ownership of a monastery and certain land appertaining to it, and it was found that the Thathanabaing had declared the monastery to be theinghika property and had forbidden the plaintiffs to interfere with it, it was held that the dismissal of the suit without a decision on the merits of the case was correct: reliance was placed on the earlier rulings in U Teza v U Pyin.

(2) [1897-01] 2 U.B.R. 42

nya (3) and U Te Zeinda v. U Teza (4), which laid down that the orders and proceedings of the Buddhist ecclesiastical authorities so long as they keep within their jurisdiction and do nothing contrary to law, cannot be questioned by the civil Courts. In U Wayama v. U Ahsaya (5), which arose out of a suit for full control by one of the appellants, in trust for the other appellants and respondent, of certain property consisting of tari trees situated in the premises of a kyaungtaik, on the ground of appellant 1's superior ecclesiastical position, it was held that the question in dispute was purely an ecclesiastical matter and the civil Courts are bound by the decisions of the Buddhist ecclesiastical authorities in matters within their competence; and also that civil Courts should abstain from deciding points which fall within the sphere of ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

To my mind, the question in dispute in the present case is purely an ecclesiastical matter, and, therefore, is a matter within the competence of the Buddhist ecclesiastical authorities to decide. consequently, the civil Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain the dispute, for, if the civil Courts also exercised jurisdiction while the Buddhist ecclesiastical authorities have jurisdiction to deal with the matter, there is bound to be a clashing of jurisdiction and a grave deadlock will be the inevitable result In the result, I hold that the plaintiff-respondents' suit should have been dismissed for want of jurisdiction I would allow this appeal, and direct that the suit be dismissed.

Since the appellants did not raise this question of jurisdiction in their original appeal in this Court, I would direct that each party bear their own costs in this Court. But the plaintiff-respondents should pay the defendant-appellants' costs in the Court of first instance and in the Court of first appeal

Baguley, J.—I agree with my learned brother, Mya Bu, J., that the civil Courts in this case have no jurisdiction, but would like to add a few remarks. In the first place I would emphasize that this decision applies to Upper Burma only There is no Thathanabaing in Lower Burma and in consequence disputes of this nature if brought before the civil Courts would have to be settled by them in Lower Burma, there being no ecclesiastical authority having power to decide them.

The question of jurisdiction has to be settled in the first instance on the plaint In the terms of translation of the plaint we find it headed

The trial Court on the statements given in the plaint looked upon the case as one for enforcement of an award and this view was persisted in by the Courts right up to the second appeal in the High Court, but it must be remembered that the original plaint was filed by U Pyinnya and U Thagayya and, when they lost their case in the trial Court, they came on appeal to the District Court of Pakokku in Civil Appeal No. 40 and in their grounds of appeal emphasized the fact that they were not suing to enforce an award at all The first ground of appeal contains the passage:

"But the lower Court wrongly framed an issue as to whether the award is enforceable or not."

The third ground of appeal contains the passage:

"But the lower Court wrongly framed an alternative issue that if the case was one for enforcement of award;"

and the fourth ground of appeal contains the passage:

"Therefore the question whether the award is enforceable or not is irrelevant"

It is therefore quite clear that the plaintiffs themselves were not basing their case on the award, but if they were not basing their case on the award I can see nothing upon which they could base their case, except their right to partition the land which forms the original kyaungtaik. There are no rules of civil law by which a kyaungtaik could be partitioned. The pongyis inhabiting the kyaungtaik are not co-owners or coparceners or tenants-in-common or any other form of owner known to the ordinary civil law. Their rights inter se are entirely governed by ecclesiastical law which must be decided by the ecclesiastical authorities where there are ecclesiastical authorities in a position to do so The argument put forward on behalf of the appellants went so far as to claim that every case between Pongyis concerning religious property is only to be decided by the Thathanabaing I would not myself accept this statement in toto but I agree that in the present case, as the original plaintiffs stressed the fact that they were not basing their claim on an award, the civil Court must be held to have no jurisdiction

PRATT, OFFG. C. J., ORMISTON AND CARR JJ

Wor Moh Lone & Co —Appellants.

v.

Japan Cotton Trading Co. Ltd.—Respondents.

First Appeal No 157 of 1928, Decided on 28th August 1928, from judgment of Original Side in Civil Regular No 96 of 1927

(a) Contract—Construction—(Per Pratt, C. J., and Carr, J.)—Sellor agreeing to sell goods from his or other mills—No intention to supply from particular mill given nor milling notice issued—Seller's mill burnt—Seller is liable under contract—(Ormiston, J., contra).

Vendors contracted to sell a certain quantity of rice. The wording of sale-note did not justify the inference that the parties intended or contemplated, even primarily, the sale by the vendors of the produce of their own mill, nor was there any express statement to this effect. It was found that the contract gave vendors an option of delivery from their own mill if they chose, and that, if they did not so choose, they could deliver from any of the other mills specified in the contract. No intimation of intention to deliver from a particular mill was given and no milling notice was issued. Vendors' mill was burnt down.

Held, that the burning down of the mill did not absolve vendors from liability to perform the contract 11 Bur. L. T. 63, Dist.

(b) Contract—Construction—Construction of contract should not be dependent on convenience only.

Convenience is not the only thing to be considered, and it should not be permitted to persuade a Court to place a construction on a contract which it cannot legitimately bear.

N M Cowasjee—for Respondents

Pratt, Offg. C. J.—Plaintiffs the Japan Cotton Trading Co., Ltd sued the defendants Wor Moh Lone & Co for damages for breach of a contract to supply 2,000 bags of rice on or before the 20th September 1927.. The contract was embodied in a printed Rice Sale Note, Ex. A, in the form commonly used in similar transactions. It contains provisions regarding gunnies, twine, day and night milling of seller's option, delivery ex-hopper, right of sellers to require a deposit in case of a fall in price, payment in cash before removal, etc Cl. 16 runs "accident to machinery, strikes or sickness of mill hands or coolies always excepted."

The final Cl. 19 gives a long list of firms whose milling the defendants have the option of delivery

Defendants' case was that on a true construction of the contract and on the intention of the parties, the contract was one for the supply of rice from defendants' own mill, that Cl. 19 merely gives the sellers the option of supplying rice from the other mills specified, but that the contract was primarily for the sale of rice of defendants' own milling It was contended therefore that as defendant's mill was burnt down they were absolved from performance of the contract.

The learned Judge who heard the case was unable to accept this contention. He held that the contract was generally for sale of a certain quantity of rice of a specified quality, that taking the wording of the sale-note as it stood there was nothing to justify the inference that the parties intended or contemplated, even primarily, the sale by the defendants of the produce of their own mill, nor was there any express statement to this effect He came to the conclusion that the contract gave sellers an option of delivery from their own mill if they chose, and that, if they did not so choose, they could deliver from any of the other mills specified in the final clause As no intimation of intention to deliver from a particular mill had been given and no milling notice issued, the Court was of opinion that the burning down of defendant's mill did not absolve them from liability to perform the contract. Plaintiffs were accordingly granted a decree for damages.

On appeal it has been argued before us that, taking the sale-note as it stands, apart from the last clause, it must be construed as a contract by a miller to deliver rice milled in his own mill, Cl. 19 giving him an added option, at his discretion, of supplying rice from other specified mills. The contract being therefore primarily for delivery of rice from defendants' own mill, when their mill was burnt down, it was optional with them to terminate the contract or deliver rice from any of the mills specified in Cl. 19, but they were not bound to perform their contract by delivering rice from other mills

I agree with the learned Judge on the Original Side that the contract will not bear this construction The form of note used (Ex. A) may have been originally intended for sales by millers of rice from their own mills. The wording is suitable and was probably designed in the first instance for such transaction There is, however, no doubt that the form has become the standard form for bought and sold notes for rice contracts as my learned brother points out in he judgment. Though the wording in the earlier clauses is more especially applicable to the circumstances of sales by a miller of the produce of his mill, yet, as pointed out by the trial Judge, it is not incompatible with the sale of rice from other mills.

It is obvious that too much stress cannot be laid on the exact terms of the earlier clauses, as applying to determine from the seller's own mill, since the last clause gives the option of supplying from any of a long list of mills. It may or may not have been understood that the defendants were at liberty to supply rice of their own milling, but the contract is silent on the point I am quite unable to read the note, as it stands, as a contract by the seller to sell rice of his own milling. He is given the choice of delivering rice milled by a large number of specified firms

Defendants had not elected to supply rice from their own mill or issued any milling notice This fact differentiates the case from that of the Arracan, Co Ltd. v H. Hamadanee & Co (1), in that in the case cited the sellers had issued a milling notice and commenced delivery from their own mill before it was burnt down It is not alleged that there was anything to prevent sellers from milling rice of contract quality from one of the mills specified in Cl. 19 of the contract

In the present instance the defendants had not given notice of intention to deliver rice from their own mill, nor does the contract show that they intended to do so. Cl 16, on which stress has been laid, will refer to the mill from which delivery is to be taken, as pointed out by the Bench in the case already cited. There is no reason to confine its application to defendant's mill, which is not mentioned in the contract Defendants do not allege that they gave notice of their intention to rescind the contract or of their inability to perform it, when their mill was burnt down It is clear that the burning of the mill did not render the contract impossible of performance, and the presumption is that the real reason of non-performance was the unfavourable state of the market I agree with the trial Judge that defendants were not absolved from performance of their contract. I would dismiss the appeal with costs

Ormiston, J.—This is an appeal of the defendants from a decree of the Original Side awarding damages to the plaintiffs for the breach by the defendants of a contract to sell rice. The issues were

(1) Are the defendants exempted from delivery of rice according to the contract by the terms of Cls (16) and (19) of the sold note or by any local usage ? (2) Assuming that the defendants are, by reason stated above, exempted from performing that contract, had they by subsequent conduct waived that claim ? (3) To what damges, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled ?

The learned Judge having answered the first issue in the negative, the second issue did not arise, and he adjourned the hearing for evidence on the third issue At the adjourned hearing the defendants did not contest the issue of damages and a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs for the amount claimed. If the appeal is successful the case will have to be remanded to the original side to take evidence on issue 2 As regards issue 1, two of the grounds of appeal are directed to the finding that the defendants were exempted by reason of a local usage, but no part of the argument has been directed to these grounds.

The contract, which was entered into on 15th January 1927, was that the defendants should sell and the plaintiffs should buy 2,000 bags of rice of a particular quality at an agreed rate, delivery to be taken on or before 20th February 1927. The defendants are rice-millers whose mill was burnt down on 27th January 1927. No milling notice of their own or any other mill was issued by the defendants to the plaintiffs, and no paddy was delivered on or before 20th February 1927. The contract was embodied in what has for many years been the standard form of bought and sold notes for rice contracts. Its material provisions it will be convenient first to summarize.

By Cl. 3 the rice is to be Ngatsin $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ Ngakyauk, at sellers' option, usual S. Q. Quality cleaned rice. The grain to be fair average of quality procurable at the time of milling Cl 4 provides that the buyer is to supply gunnies and twine. If owing to late arrival at mill of his gunnies or other causes, the sellers' gunnies are used, the rate to be paid is prescribed, as is also the rate for the use of his twine Cls. 5 and 6 prescribe rates for bagging, sewing and shipping, and for landing and receiving gunnies at mill. Under Cl 7 the rice is to be milled by day $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ night at sellers' option. Cl. 8 stipulates that delivery is to be taken ex-hopper on or before 20th February 1927, date at seller's option and payment is to be made in cash before any rice is removed, but not in any case later than immediately after milling Payment is to be made in cash on completion of each 1,000 bags if required Cl 10 gives the seller the right of disposing of any rice milled against the contract by private or public sale on buyer's account. By reason of Cl 13 the buyer cannot claim the right of leaving the rice in the sellers' godown after the 15 days allowed for removal have elapsed. Cl 15 gives the seller, on the expiry of the 15 days, the right of removing the rice to other than mill godowns at the risk and expense of buyer after 24 hours' notice has been given. Cl 16 is: " Accidents to machinery, strikes or sickness of mill hands always excepted " Cl. 19 provides that " sellers have the right of delivering under this contract the milling of " some twenty named mills, in which the mill of the defendants is not included.

This form of rice contract provided the subject matter of a decision of a Bench of the late Chief Court of lower Burma in Arracan Co. Ltd. v H Hamodanee & Co. (1). The defendant-appellants agreed to sell to the plaintiff-respondents 10,000 bags of rice, delivery to be taken ex-hopper in April 1916, and gave to them a milling notice on its own mill. The plaintiffs took delivery of 6,442 bags from the defendants' mill up to 26th April when the mill was burnt down and deliveries under the contract ceased Cl 18 (corresponding to Cl 19 of the form before us) gave the seller the right to deliver under the contract the milling of seven specified firms, the defendant's mill not being therein included. The plaintiffs sued for damages and the defendant relied on Cl 16 (the clause exempting accident to machinery) The lower Court held that Cl. 18 applied, not only to the defendants' mill, but to the other mills mentioned therein as well, and that the defendant was bound to deliver from those other mills if it could not deliver from its own mills The appellate Court pointed out that the Judge of the lower Court was " in error in construing Cl. 18, which is clearly inserted for the benefit of the seller, as if it imposed an obligation upon the seller to deliver, in certain circumstances, from all the mills. Cl. 16 clearly refers to the mill from which delivery is to be taken, or is being taken, and means that if that mill breaks down, the seller is absolved from giving or completing delivery of so much rice as the buyer would have had to take from that mill, if it had not broken down. The clause absolves the seller from anticipating and providing against a breakdown in the mill from which delivery is to be given."

Consequently, as the defendant under the contract was entitled to say that it would give delivery from one mill only, and had said so by giving a milling notice on its own mill. Cl 16 applied to a breakdown in the defendants' mill which actually occurred, and the defendant was absolved from any further delivery.

In the case before us the circumstances are different, inasmuch as the defendant have given no milling notice on their own or any other mill. The learned Judge on the original side said that if he could have accepted the defendants' contention that the sale contemplated by the contract was primarily the sale of the produce of their own mill, though an option is given to supply the produce of any one of other specified mills, they were bound to succeed He was, however, unable to accept that contention. Nor was he able to accept the contention of the plaintiff that the defendants were bound to supply rice of the milling of one of the mills specified in Cl. 19, and not from their own mill In his opinion, the clause gave the defendants an option to deliver from their own mill if they choose to do so, and, if they did not so choose, to deliver from any of the other mills specified. As he put it,

"the defendants' mill is, by implication, one of the mills from which they can, if they choose, deliver rice."

He distinguished the Arracan case (1) on the ground that, in the present case, no milling notice had been issued and no election had been made by the seller, and Cl 16 could not begin to operate till such election was made. Consequently, he held that the burning of their mill did not, under Cl. 16, absolve the defendants from liability to perform the contract

Mr. Clark's argument is that, on its construction, the contract is one by a miller to deliver rice which is the product of his own mill; that if his own mill is disabled, Cl 16 applies and he is excused; and that Cl 19 is merely a superadded option, capable of exercise by the seller only, to deliver rice which is the product of other mills Consequently, when the defendants' mill was put out of action, they were at liberty, either to take up the position that they need deliver no rice, or if they chose, to deliver rice from one of the specified mills.

Looking at the contract as a whole, in my view it is cast in a form singularly inappropriate for use by one merchant selling rice to another On the other hand it is entirely appropriate to the case of a miller selling rice the product of his own mill The prescription of charges for the sellers' gunnies if they have to be used owing to the late arrival at the mill of the buyer's gunnies, and of charges for landing gunnies at the mill, the option given to the seller of disposing of rice milled against the contract on the buyer's account, the right given to the seller of removing the rice into other than mill godowns, all point in this direction. I do not think that it is a reasonable construction of the clauses to which I have made reference that they include not only the seller but the miller whom the seller substitutes in his place; for in the case of a sale by a merchant they can have no application. Cls. 7, 8 and 16 point even more strongly in the direction which I have indicated. What is the use of giving to a seller who is not a miller an option to mill by day or by night? How can such a seller deliver ex-hopper? And what is the use of his stipulating for payment on completion of each 1,000 bags? If this were a contract by a merchant, one would have expected, in place of Cl. 16, a proviso exempting him from liability, if, after he had given a notice specifying a particular mill, an accident occurred. For these reasons, in disagreement with the learned Judge on the original side, I would hold that apart from Cl 19, the contract before us is by necessary implication a contract by a miller to sell rice the product of his own mill.

Does then the insertion of Cl. 19 make any difference? Mr Clark's argument is that this clause merely confers an option exercisable by the seller alone, of electing not to give delivery of the rice which by the remainder of the contract he had contracted to deliver, but, in lieu thereof, to deliver the production of the specified mills. If the clause were intended to be an integral part of the primary contract, one would have expected it to be worded somewhat as follows:

"In the performance of the contract, the seller shall have the option of delivering his own rice, or of one or another of the following mills."

But in point of fact the defendants' mill is not amongst those specified. The learned Judge, holding, as I think, correctly, that the seller is not precluded from selling his own rice, but holding, as I think, incorrectly, that the primary contract is not to sell his own rice, holds further that the sellers' mill is by necessary implication included in Cl. 19. As I have pointed out it would have been a perfectly simple matter expressly to have included it in Cl. 19. And, on the view I take, the contract being for the sale of the defendant's own rice, there is no necessity for any implication that their mill is to be included amongst those specified in the clause.

There is, to my mind, no tenable construction of the contract intermediate between that adopted by Mr Clark and that adopted by Mr. Cowasjee. Mr. Cowasjee accepts the finding of the learned Judge, but does not accept the reasoning on which it is based. Mr. Cowasjee's main contention is that, under the contract, the seller must deliver rice the product of one of the mills specified in Cl 19. Reading as I do, the contract as primarily one for the delivery of rice the product of the defendants' mill, with a proviso that the seller may deliver rice the product of the specified mills, I am unable to accept this contention. It involves the startling conclusion that the whole of the specified mills must have been disabled before Cl 16 can come into operation.

Mr. Cowasjee's secondary contention is based on the Arracan case (1). That case decides that if a seller elects to deliver from a particular mill and to that end gives a milling notice, whether on his own mill or on one of the specified mills, he is absolved from liability if there is a breakdown of the mill in respect of which notice has been given. Consequently he argues, inasmuch as in the case before us, no milling notice at all has been issued, and therefore, no election has been made, Cl. 16 cannot come into operation. Herein he adopts the reasoning of the learned Judge on the original side. I agree that a decision of a Bench of the Chief Court is not lightly to be set aside but it does not necessarily follow that the same considerations apply to deductions from such a decision Although the deduction which Mr. Cowasjee and the learned Judge drew from the decision may seem to be its logical corollary, it has to be remembered that the case before us was not the case before the Court which decided the Arracan case (1) The Arracan case (1) could quite well have been decided on the narrower construction of the contract which I have adopted. The circumstances of that case were more strongly in favour of the seller than those of the present case, and it was not necessary to put forward the interpretation which I consider to be correct. Nor had the Court to consider what the consequences would be, if, subsequent to the delivery of a milling notice on a mill included in Cl. 18, the mill had been burnt down

I do not consider it to be a necessary implication from the view I take that, as the learned Judge says, it would be :

> " open to the seller to say, if any of the 26 mills is burnt down, that that particular mill is the one from which he intended to deliver his rice. "

For, on my view, the only mill to which Cl. 16 applies is the sellers' own mill. If the decision in the Arracan case (1) is to be taken to be correct, and it proceeded on a construction of the contract with which I do not agree, it by no means follows that the sellers would be entitled to adopt the fraudulent contention imagined by the learned Judge ; for I think it must be taken that an intention to elect to deliver from a particular mill is quite a different thing from an expression of that intention. It follows from the construction of the contract which I adopt, that the performance of the primary contract having been excused by the destruction of the defendants' mill and there having been no election on their part to deliver from any other mill, they were under no liability to deliver rice to the plaintiff on or before the prescribed date.

I am, of course, aware that a somewhat unreal atmostphere has surrounded the discussion of this case It is quite possible that all that the parties in effect intended to do was to buy and sell, or purport to buy and sell, rice and that from that point of view, nearly the the whole of the printed form was surplusage Nevertheless in the construction of the contract such a consideration should not be allowed to have weight. I am also aware that the construction put upon the contract by the learned Judge is in some respect convenient, But convenience is not the only thing to be considered, and it should not be permitted to persuade a Court to place a construction on a contract which it cannot legitimately bear. In my opinion the construction of the learned Judge does not fulfil the condition precedent. The decision at which I have arrived will cause me the less regret, if it should result in the substitution of a new form of rice contract for one which is utterly unsuited to the conditions of modern business in Rangoon. (His Lordship being of opinion that the appeal should be allowed the case was referred to a third Judge under Cl. 34, Letters Patent).

Carr, J.—The facts of this case appear sufficiently in the judgments of the learned Judges whose difference of opinion has been referred to me. The question before me is whether upon its proper construction the contract in the suit is a contract for sale and delivery of rice from the defendants' own mill only with the addition of an option to the seller only to deliver from other mills specified in Cl. 19 but without any obligation upon him to do so in the event of it being impossible for him to deliver from his own mill, or whether it is merely a contract for the sale and delivery of rice which may be delivered from any one or more of the mills so specified and which it is incumbent upon the defendant to deliver from some one or more of such mills so long as it is possible for him to do so.

The learned Judge on the Original Side arrived at a construction intermediate between the two above stated, holding that the contract was merely one for the sale of rice which might, at the sellers' option, be delivered either from any of the specified mills or from the sellers' own mill. He thought that the seller's own mill, though nowhere mentioned in the contract, was by implication included among the mills from which delivery might be given I do not think that the question of the correctness of this construction comes before me on this reference, but in any case it is unnecessary to decide upon it, for unless the construction first set out above, which is that put forward by the defendant-appellants (the sellers), can be accepted the appeal must necessarily fail

The case of the Irrawaddy Co., Ltd. v. H. Hamadanee & Co (1) has been referred to. I have referred to the original records and find that in all matters material to the present question the contract in that case was identical with the one now in dispute. But I do not think that that decision is of any assistance in the present case There was no interpretation of the contract in respect of the question now arising. The parties had in fact so far interpreted it for themselves , the seller had given a milling notice for his own mill, which had been accepted by the buyer and delivery was in progress when that particular mill was burnt down. What the learned Judges said on this subject was merely :

"In the present case the plaintiff accepted a milling notice on the defendants' mill. It must be taken therefore that the parties had agreed that the defendants should be at liberty to give delivery under the contract from their own mill. . . ."

The contract before me contains no mention whatever of the sellers' own mill but the contention for the defendants is that its terms are such as necessarily to imply a primary intention that the rice should be delivered from their mill. In supporting this contention Mr Clark has strongly urged that the contract must be construed strictly upon its own terms, without reference to extrinsic circumstances. But he has at the same time emphasized the fact that the defendants are (or at that time were) millers, and had a mill of their own. In this he is somewhat inconsistent for that itself is a circumstance extrinsic to the contract.

Looking to its terms alone the contract in my opinion is simply one for the sale of rice which is to be delivered from a mill immediately after milling Apart from Cl. 19 the seller could satisfy this contract by delivery from any mill, so long as he complied with the other terms of the contract. In my view of it Cl. 19 not only gives the seller the option of delivering from any of the mills named but also debars him from delivering from any other mill

The defendants claimed that the terms of the contract are such that they can only mean that the rice is to be delivered from the seller's own mill They rely particularly on the references to milling in Cls. 3, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 12. None of these seem to me to justify the importing into the contract of words which it does not contain. The contract is clearly one for rice which is to be milled and to be delivered immediately after milling, but I can see no reason why we should imply from this that the rice is to be milled by the seller himself. The seller has undertaken to deliver rice on those terms and whether he himself has or has not a mill it is incumbent on him so to deliver the rice.

The clauses which seem to me to lend most support to the appellant's contention are Nos 12, 13 and 14. Cl. 12 provides that the buyer will be charged godown rent should he fail to remove the rice within 15 days after milling ; Cl. 13 that the buyer cannot claim the right of leaving the rice in the seller's godown after the 15 days and Cl. 14 that on the expiry of the 15 days the seller has the right of removing the rice to other than mill godowns Here the use of the words seller's godown in Cl. 13 and of mill godowns in Cl 14 certainly does suggest that the two godowns are the same and that the contract contemplates that the mill referred to is the seller's mill. But I do not think that this alone is sufficient to justify the interpretation put forward. We must read the contract as a whole and if it can be said that these clauses are inconsistent with any other interpretation than that put forward then we must equally say that they are inconsistent with Cl. 19.

Reliance has been placed also on Cl. 4, which provides:

"gunnies and twine to be supplied by buyer or if seller's gunnies are used owing to late arrival at mill of buyer's gunnies or other causes"

they will be charged for at a certain rate. This seems to me to lend only the flimsiest support to the appellants' contention. It does, perhaps, presuppose that the sellers' gunnies will be available at the mill at any time and so suggest that the mill is to be the sellers.' But I do not think that this inference is inevitable. If the buyer can send gunnies to some other person's mill it is equally open to the seller to do so, or to arrange for them to be available there And should he exercise his option under Cl 19 he would necessarily have to do so

My learned brother Ormiston has referred to Cl 10 as supporting the appellants' interpretation of the contract. This clause reads:

"sellers have the right of disposing of any rice milled against this contract, by private or public sale on buyers' account, should he fail to pay for it within 24 hours of the presentation of the bill. . . ."

I can see nothing in this to support the appellants in any way. It is provided in Cl. 8 that the buyer is to pay for the rice in cash not later than immediately after milling, and if he fails to do so the seller will have the resale under S. 107, Contract Act. The principal effect of Cl. 10 seems to be to modify Cl. 8 by allowing the buyer 24 hours grace for payment. Possibly also it may to some extent modify the operation of S. 107. But I can see nothing in it which would not be entirely appropriate had the contract been one for the sale of rice already milled and stored in a godown (except of course the use of the words "milled under this contract," which in the present connexion are not material).

My brother Ormiston also says:

"Looking at the contract as a whole in my view it is cast in a form entirely inappropriate for use by one merchant selling rice to another. On the other hand it is entirely appropriate to the case of a miller selling rice the produce of his own mill," and his decision seems to have been largely influenced by that consideration. I am not prepared entirely to agree with his view. The form of the contract would, of course, be entirely inappropriate for the sale of rice which a merchant already had stored in his godown, or which he proposed to buy from some other person who had it so stored. But a merchant might equally well be reselling rice which he had already agreed to buy from a miller (or which he proposed so to buy) and which had not yet been delivered. If then he had bought on a contract similar to that in question it would obviously be in his best interests to require his buyer to accept the same terms If he did not do so he might very probably find himself involved in very considerable difficulties For example, if he allowed his buyer the option of fixing the date of delivery he might find himself called upon to deliver before his seller was ready to do so. Similar difficulties might arise out of almost every clause of the contract. On the other hand if the terms of the two contracts are the same as soon as his seller exercises any of his rights of election the merchant can himself exercise his own right in the same sense against his buyer.

In my view of the contract it is simply one for the sale of rice, which would be carried out by the delivery of rice from any one or more of the mills named in Cl. 19 There are in its terms a few expressions which slightly suggest that the contract was intended to be one for the sale of rice from the sellers' own mill. But those suggestions are not, in my opinion, so strong that it must be held to follow as a necessary implication that there was that intention. On that construction the appeal must fail No other question arises but I wish to add that I am not entirely satisfied that the appeal could succeed even if the appellants' contention that the contract was one primarily for the sale of rice from their own mill were accepted The appeal is dismissed with costs

First Appeal No 297 of 1927, Decided on 20th August 1928, from judgment of Dist. Judge, Pyapon, in Civil Regular No. 29 of 1926

Evidence Act S. 92—Person selling land but continuing in possession under oral agreement to repurchase—Vendee selling property to third person—Original vendor can prove against the subsequent purchaser, oral agreement to repurchase and fraudulent nature of subsequent purchase.

Section 92 does not prevent proof of a fraudulent dealing with a third person's property, or proof of notice that the property purporting to be absolutely conveyed belonged to a third person, who was not a party to the conveyance. [P 87 C 1]

Where a person conveys property to another but continues in possession under an oral agreement of repurchase such person can prove against his vendee's purchaser that the sale by the vendee was in fraud of his agreement of repurchase : *A. Judgment.—Respondents 1 to 3, defendants in the trial Court have filed a cross-objection to the action of the Court in refusing to allow them to prove their case with respect to the holdings other than No. 17-N, which forms the subject of plaintiff's appeal Plaintiff based his title to the holdings in dispute on a conveyance from the P. L A. V N. K. firm. Defendants' case was that although they had given the P L A V. N. K. firm a conveyance of these lands, there was an oral contract of resale in pursuance of which they were in possession, and that the sale by P L. A. V. N. K. to plaintiff, who was fully aware that his vendor had no right to sell, was fraudulent. The trial Court held that defendants were precluded by S. 92, Evidence Act, from giving evidence of the oral agreement for repurchase, relying on the ruling in Maung Bin v. Ma Hlaing (1) The lower Court has overlooked the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (2).

It was then pointed out (at pp. 142 and 137) that S. 92 is applicable to an instrument as between the parties to such an instrument or their representatives-in-interest, but it does not prevent proof of a fraudulent dealing with a third person's property, or proof of notice that the property purporting to be absolutely conveyed in fact belonged to a third person, who was not a party to the conveyance

We consider in view of this ruling that defendants were clearly entitled as against plaintiff to prove that his vendee has not an absolute title, and that they are in possession under an agreement of repurchase. They are also entitled to prove that the sale by the Chettyar firm to plaintiff was in fraud of them

We would point out that as no question of specific performance of contract is involved, S. 21, Specific Relief, Act has no application We set aside the finding and decree of the trial Court so far as holdings Nos. 26 and 27 and the house are concerned and remand the suit for trial on the merits. Defendants will have the costs on their objection in this Court. Costs in the trial Court to follow final disposal.

Byu—for the Crown.

Judgment—(6th August 1928)—The facts of this case have been set out at length in the judgment of the learned District Magistrate and are not really in dispute save in one respect It is alleged by the prosecution that the appellant was the person who used a knife upon the complainant This allegation is strenuously denied. The appellant has produced evidence to prove that at the time the fracas began in the complainant's flat he was in his shop which is below the flat The case really resolves itself into a question of the credibility of evidence

Before deciding this, it is necessary to consider a point raised by Mr. McDonnel, for the appellant. He states, correctly, that he asked the District Magistrate to be allowed to have copies of the statements made by some of the witnesses to the police, in order to cross-examine them on those statements It appears from the evidence of the investigating officer that he took down notes of what each witness know and saw From these notes he compiled his diary and then he thinks he destroyed the notes This, he says, is the standing practice If this is true, it looks very much as if the practice were a deliberate attempt to defeat the provisions of S 162, Criminal P C and to deprive the accused of the very valuable right to be supplied with a copy of such statements in order to contradict the witnesses in the manner provided by S 145, Evidence Act. The learned District Magistrate refused Mr. McDonnell's request on the ground that he could not claim to see the case diaries It is quite true that the accused is not entitled to see the police diaries, but his counsel's request was not to see the diaries but for copies of the statements of the witnesses, and in my opinion he was entitled to have these copies in spite of the fact that the statements were recorded in a police diary S 162, Criminal P. C. says that no "such statement or any record thereof, whether in a police diary or otherwise or any part of such statement or record be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at any inquiry or trial . . . . ."

Under the proviso when any witness is called for the prosecution in any such enquiry or trial, whose statement has been reduced into writing as aforesaid, the Court shall on the request of the accused refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof, for the purpose of contradicting the witness

It is clear from the language of the section that when the statement of a prosecution witness has been reduced into writing, whether in a police diary or otherwise, the accused is entitled to ask the Court to refer to it and to be furnished with a copy of it

The learned District Magisrate was therefore wrong in refusing to allow the accused to have copies of the statements he required What effect this refusal has had upon the trial cannot be gauged unless this Court examines the police diaries and also examines the investigating officer to make sure whether he has actually destroyed the original statements. If he has, and his evidence certainly indicates this or he would have been in possesssion of the original statements, his procedure cannot be too strongly condemned. It is obviously not in the interests of public justice that police officers who are charged with the duty of investigating crimes should be in a position to take the statements of witnesses, extract as much as they think is relevant or important for entry in their diaries and then destroy the original statement. If such a practice as the investigating officer speaks of really exists it should be stopped at once. It is illegal in so far as it deprives the accused of an important right and it may result in the destruction of valuable evidence in favour of an accused person

I have been asked by the Assistant Government Advocate to adopt the procedure which was followed in the case of Dadan Gazi v Emperor (1) and to satisfy myself whether there is anything in the statements of the prosecution witnesses recorded by the investigating officer, which would justify their being cross-examined on those statements

That case was decided before S 164, Criminal P. C., was amended by Act 18 of 1923 and under the then existing law it was only if the Court deemed it expedient in the interests of justice that it directed the accused to be furnished with a copy of the statements referred to.

Under the present law the Court is bound to refer to such a statement at the request of the accused and is bound to furnish him with a copy thereof provided that, if the Court is of opinion that any part of such statement is not relevant to the subject-matter of the enquiry or trial, or that its disclosure to the accused is not essential in the interests of justice, it shall record such opinion and shall exclude such part from the copy of the statement furnished to the accused. The conditions therefore are not the same as they were when Dadan Gazi's case was decided.

In my view the appellant had an unquestionable right to test the credibility of the prosecution witnesses by reference to their statements to the police. It is impossible to say how far he has been prejudiced by being deprived of that right.

I therefore direct that appellant or his counsel be furnished with copies of the statements recorded by the police, which were asked for at the trial. As soon as these have been furnished, appellant's counsel will inform this Court whether or not he wishes to cross-examine the witnesses on them.

Judgment—(28*th August* 1928)—The facts of the case may be summarized as follows:

There are two flats on the first floor of 15, Sparks Street. At the time this incident occurred one of these was occupied by Dr. Banerjee and his family and the other by the appellant, Sulaiman Mahomed Bholat.

About 3 p.m. on 13th April 1928, a quarrel broke out at Dr. Banerjee's door, between one Bechai, a servant of Dr. Banerjee and 3 boy servants of the appellant, who accused Bechai of spitting on the appellant's door. That evening about dusk two ladies visited Dr. Banerjee's family. He himself came in about 7-30 p.m. and on being informed about the quarrel said he would speak to Bholat about it. He then went into an inner room to change his clothes. There was a knock at the front door and Dr. Banerjee thinking it was a patient asked the ladies to withdraw. They went to the entrance of the bed room furthest from the hall door. When Dr. Banerjee opened the door he found the appellant, who asked him to produce Bechai. The latter was called, and asked if he had spat on appellant's door; he denied it. Appellant asked Dr. Banerjee to hand Bechai over; he refused. Appellant moved as if to enter the flat, but the doctor put his hand and warned him against trespassing. Appellant then knocked the doctor down with a blow on his nose. His followers then entered the flat, and assaulted the doctor; he says with kicks and sticks. He got up and defended himself but was driven towards the balcony overlooking the street. At this stage he says he saw the appellant aiming a blow at him with a knife. In a frantic effort to avoid this he fell on the balcony and was at once stabbed on the back. He was also beaten with sticks. He does not remember being brought back into the room, but recollects Sergeant Pascal asking him who stabbed him, and he says that he pointed out the appellant, who was then standing just outside the door. He is not corroborated on this point by any other witness. The evidence generally is to the effect, that the appellant had gone before Sergeant Pascal entered the flat. It may be that the shock sustained by Dr. Banerjee, has played a trick on his memory on this point. The ladies who witnessed the assault are five in number, Prabhati Devi, sister of Dr. Banerjee, Sadha Hansi Devi, his wife, Santa Lota Devi, his sister-in-law, Sudha Lata Ghose, the wife of Dr. Ghose, and Hemlata Mazumdar, his sister. Of these Prabhati Devi gives a full account of the incident. She rushed to her brother's assistance and received a scratch on the hand. She states inter alia, that she saw the appellant stab her brother on the back, with a pen-knife.

Santa Lota Devi, deposes to witnessing the blow with which appellant knocked Dr. Banerjee down, the attack made upon him by the appellant's followers and the stabbing of the doctor by the appellant.

Sadha Hansi Devi, Dr. Banerjee's wife, gives a similar evidence. Mrs. Ghose, one of the visitors, saw Dr. Banerjee fall, and several men enter the room and assault him. Dr. Banerjee resisted, but was carried along towards the verandah where he fell face downwards. The witness saw a man between him with something. She thinks that the appellant was the striker. She identified him as the leader of the attack.

Hemlata Mazumdar, the sister-in-law of Mrs. Ghose, confirms the story told by the other ladies. She saw Dr. Banerjee driven towards the balcony his fall there, and saw the appellant strike him with something, but she did not know what it was. The other intruders pressed upon Dr. Banerjee and some of them beat him with sticks. Then as whistle blew from outside the assailants left the room.

The lady states that the appellant owned a black topee which was subsequently found in the room. Presumably she meant, that he was wearing it, when she first saw him in the room. It may appear strange that neither of the visitors actually saw the knife, which appellant is said to have used whereas the ladies of the house did so, but it is in evidence that Prabhat Devi, and Santa Lota Devi rushed to aid the doctor, and they at least were much closer to him, when he was stabbed, and, therefore probably in a better position to see the weapon In fact Prabhati Devi states that she was actually holding her brother, when he was stabbed The evidence of these ladies is unanimous, that the doctor was struck or stabbed by the appellant, after his fall on the verandah There is, however, a witness D'Silva a telegraphist, who saw something of the affair, from the street. He says he saw women and two men come out to the verandah. The men were fighting and while they were doing so, a third man came, and hit one of the others on the back. The man hit fell forward This is not quite the same, as is told by Dr Banerjee and the ladies, but the discrepancy may be due to various causes, and it is not so serious as to affect the credibility of the testimony given by the ladies

This evidence was quite sufficient to establish a strong prima facie case against the appellant, of having caused hurt with a dangerous weapon

The defence was that he was in his shop, immediately below his flat, when this incident first started, and when the commotion began he went upstairs, and entered his flat.

With regard to this, it is noticeable that Sergeant Pascal who was early on the scene, saw a man disappear into appellant's flat ; Marshall who was with him, says that the man darted out of Dr. Bonerjee's flat, and entered appellant's.

Sergent Pascal found a crowd of men in the hall, some of them armed with sticks He cleared the crowd, and entered Dr. Banerjee's flat He found Dr. Banerjee sitting on the floor, with blood all over him, and the women weeping They told him that the man who had assaulted Dr. Banerjee with a knife had disappeared into the flat opposite. He knocked and banged at the door for 10 minutes, and when it was opened by the appellant, the women with one accord said, "This is the man" So he took him in charge. The appellant admits that he took time to open the door as he was undressing. If his story is true, his conduct cannot but be regarded as extremely strange. Having heard the fracas, which was going on just outside his flat, he went up presumably, to find out what was happening. Instead of doing this, however, he looks himself up, in his flat, and proceeds to undress Even on the arrival of the police, he did not admit them at once. This is certainly not the conduct of an innocent man, and it adds to the strength of the case against him. It suggests that he was trying to rid his appearance of the signs of conflict before facing the police.

The evidence called to prove that the appellant was in his office when the row began, upstairs, must now be considered E E. Dawoodjee, a hardware merchant of substance, says that on the night in question, he was looking at the foundation of a new building he was erecting opposite appellant's shop, and he noticed the appellant, his own nephew E. I. Dawoodjee, one Dursot, and Renderia, in appellant's shop Then he heard some row upstairs, and females crying. The appellant went upstairs, followed by two others, whom he failed to identify. He went away after this This witness is a friend of appellant's father, and went to the police station that night to see if appellant could be bailed out. He may not have known all the circumstances of the charge brought against appellant but it is rather difficult to believe that interested as he was in the release of the appellant, he would not have found out that his evidence was of vital value to him.

E I Dawoodjee, the nephew of the last witness, testifies to appellant talking to him, Renderia, and Dursot, when he heard women crying upstairs. Appellant and Dursot went up he says, and he himself went home One would have thought, that it would have been natural for appellant, to have asked his friends to come up, and see what was happening upstairs, since he lived there himself.

Rendaria gives similar evidence He too very discreetly left after appellant, Dursot went upstairs E. S Dursot, another hardware merchant, whom appellant in his examination calls "one of my men" corroborates the other two On hearing the crying upstairs, he says that he followed the appellant up the steps, but half way up, he met one Ismail, appellant's servant, who told him that he had had a row with Dr. Banerjee who had hit him, and he had retaliated, and Dr. Banerjee had fallen

In cross-examination, this witness contradicted himself badly, and the impression left in my mind is that he is not a truthful witness.

One J. M. Judah, who occupies the flat above Dr Banerjee's, says that on hearing cries of women coming from below, he ran down Whon he got to the landing he saw appellant run up the stairs, and another man run down the stairs. He then went up to his flat A curious piece of evidence brought in to prove that appellant was not in Dr Banerjee's room when the prosecution witnesses say, he was there.

This brings up to the crux of the case. The appellant denies being in doctor's flat at all, yet we have seven people who depose to his presence in that flat, that night, the doctor, five ladies and the servant Bechai Two at least of the ladies were merely friends of the doctor's family and were utter strangers to the appellant, in fact they may all be said to have been strangers to him. They have given an account of the incident which is reasonable, and consistent with the admitted facts. Very strong grounds would therefore have been made out before their evidence can be rejected. To some extent, their evidence is corroborated by the independent evidence of Sergeant Pascal, and Marshall, who saw a man, step into appellant's flat, from the doctor's flat, according to Marshall. Who was this man if not the appellant ?

When he opened his door, what must in the circumstances of the case, be regarded as suspicious delay, the ladies at once denounced him as the doctor's assailant Yet, if his story is true, this emphatic and unanimous denunciation, was a piece of wanton wickedness The only explanation of all this is that it is true that the appellant did enter the doctor's flat that afternoon.

As regards the prosecution story, what had the defence to offer ? An obviously untrue version of the affair, which did not account for the presence of 2 fezzes, in the doctor's room, of the incident seen by D'Silva, or of the stab wound sustained by Dr. Banerjee, and an alibi, which as the learned District Magistrate remarked, separates appellant from the scene of the assault only by a flight of stairs.

On the ground of respectability there is no reason to discriminate between the witnesses for the prosecution, and the defence, but the appellant's witnesses have a much more powerful motive for saying that the appellant was in his shop when the row began, than the prosecution have for saying that he was the person who stabbed Dr Banerjee. If he was in the row from its commencement then the defence evidence is not true. I cannot find any reason for disbelieving the prosecution story corroborated as it is by the immediate denunciation of the appellant, and his suspicious behaviour in locking himself in his rooms after this occurrence.

Had his story really been true, I think it would have been natural to have expected some of his respectable witnesses to have gone upstairs with him to find out what was happening, instead of departing unobstrusively and leaving him to his fate

I am forced to the conclusion that the District Magistrate was right in convicting appellant under S 324, I. P C.

The proper sentence raises a question of some difficulty The District Magistrate considered a term of imprisonment essential. The appellant does not belong to the class of people, who are usually free with the use of the knife, and in his community he is of good social standing Imprisonment to a man of this class is not only a degrading punishment to himself but it brands the whole family with a stigma, which it has not deserved and is a lasting disgrace

The offence is compoundable with the permission of the Court, and imprisonment is not compulsory.

The injury sustained by Dr. Banerjee was 11/10" long, $\frac{1}{2}$" broad, and 12/5" deep obliquely in the right infra scapular region, not a very serious one therefore.

Where a suitable alternative can be found, it does not appear to me, that this is a case in which imprisonment should be the primary penalty to be inflicted. In place, therefore, of the sentence passed by the District Magistrate, I direct that the appellant do pay a fine of Rs 4,000 or do suffer 4 months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Rs. 1,000 of the fine will be paid to Dr. Banerjee as compensation.

Civil Misc. Appeal No 350 of 1928, Decided on 31st July 1928, from judgment of Small Cause Court Judge, Rangoon, in Municipal Appeal No 2 of 1928

Rangoon City Municipal Act (Bur. 6 of 1922), S. 80—Principle of valuation of hereditament is its hypothetical value to any hypothetical tenant - Interpretation of statutes

It is a canon of Rating Law that the principle of valuation of any given hereditament is the hypothetical value of the hereditament as it stands to any hypothetical tenant. It is not appropriate to take as a guide the actual rents paid for other and widely dissimilar buildings occupied on different terms of tenancy. [P 92 C 2]

Cunliffe, J —This appeal must be dismissed It arises in the following circumstances No. 186, Merchant Street, was previously rated at Rs 1,265 per month The assessor to the Municipal Corporation recently increased this valuation at Rs 2,950 per month The assessee who is the owner of the premises appealed to the Commissioner who confirmed the assessment The assessee then preferred an appeal to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court He reversed the order of the Commissioner The Corporation now come to this Court in further appeal

No 186, Merchant Street, is in the occupation of the Rangoon Times Press under a lease for a term of years The reasons adduced to support the enhancement of the valuation were a general advance in the value of house property in the neighbourhood and the fact that occupiers of nearby buildings were paying much higher rents than the rent paid by the Rangoon Times Press to the assessee Elaborate calculations of floor space and so on were set out in the report of the assessor. Before the Commissioner the assessee gave evidence that No 186, Merchant Street, were difficult premises to let and by no means suitable for ordinary business purposes or for tenement dwellings The building was not new.

It is a canon of Rating Law that the principle of the valuation of any given hereditament is the hypothetical value of the hereditament as it stands to any hypothetical tenant. It seems to us not to be appropriate in such a case as this to take as a guide the actual rents paid for other and widely dissimilar buildings occupied on different terms of tenancy This is exactly what the Commissioner has done In our opinion the only evidence in relation to the proper valuation before him was the evidence of the assessee himself To rebut such evidence it would have been necessary to consider the value of a similar building, devoted to a similar business It is for these reasons that we agree with the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court and dismiss this appeal, with advocate's costs ten gold mohurs

Pratt, Offg C J —I add that it is unnecessary under the circumstances to discuss the many authorities, which have been cited on the subject of the principles, which should determine the assessment of the building in question The principles are not disputed, the difficulty is the application of the principles

It is common ground that the assessment should be on the basis of the rent, which a hypothetical tenant would be prepared to pay for the building as it stands, to be used for the purposes of a printing and newspaper press The assessor and the Commissioner considered that the correct way to obtain the rent, which the hypothetical tenant would be willing to pay, was to be obtained by a mathematical calculation based on the rents paid for buildings in the immediate vicinity

The objection to this method is that three of the buildings are of a superior character used for different purposes, and the fourth is the ground floor only of a four storeyed building also used as a press. The learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court did not consider the buildings or the conditions similar, and therefore this fact vitiated the conclusion arrived at He took into consideration the fact that it was not disputed that the building was so constructed that it could not be let in parts to tenants and was not new, and that it was consequently difficult to obtain a trustworthy tenant paying an adequate rent. He did not consider that an allowance of 25 per cent.

The Judge was of opinion that the actual rent paid was more truly representative of the hypothetical rent and was prima facie evidence of the rental value of the building He has given his reasons in a lucid and convincing judgment and I consider no sufficient reason has been adduced to justify our differing from his conclusion

Second Appeal No 489 of 1928, Decided on 14th January 1929

The claim of the landlord on the produce of the tenant for his rent is not strictly speaking a lien, because the produce is not in landlord's possession A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 366, not Appr. [P 93 C 2]

 (b) Landlord and Tenant—Third person taking produce from tenant with full notice of landlord's claim for rent—Landlord can enforce his claim against him under Specific Relief Act, S 27 (b).

Where a third person takes the produce from the tenant with full notice of the landlord's claim for rent, the landlord can enforce his claim against such third person because his claim is analogous to one for specific performance under S 27 (b), Specific Relief Act. A. I. R 1925 Rang 366, Rel. on. [P 94 C 1]

E Maung—for Appellant

Tun Aung—for Respondent

Judgment—The plaintiff-respondent, Maung Sein Han sued one Maung Shwe Hmyin and the appellant, Maung Po Lwin for 375 baskets of paddy valued at Rs 712-8-0, claimed as rent due for paddy land He was given a decree against both defendants for 255 baskets or their value Rs 484-8-0 The land was admittedly leased out to Maung Shwe Hmyin, and Maung Shwe Hmyin did not appeal against the decision of the trial Court Po Lwin was made a defendant on the ground that the landlord had a lien or charge on the crops for his rent and that with full knowledge of this, Po Lwin had taken from the produce of the land 400 baskets Po Lwin appealed to the District Court without success, and has now come to this Court in second appeal.

The appeal is argued on two grounds: firstly it is contended that no cause of action has been made out against Po Lwin, and secondly, it is contended that there is no evidence on the record from which the lower Court could find that 400 baskets of paddy had been taken away by Po Lwin

On the first point, reference has been made to the case of Maung Han v Ko Ho (1) In that case the landlord sued his tenant, and a third party jointly for rent. The third party was impleaded on the ground that he received half the outturn of the land from the defendant with full knowledge of the plaintiff's lien on the crops It was held that he was liable jointly with the tenant It was pointed out in that case that it is the usual practice in this country for the landlords to have a lien for rent over the paddy reaped by the tenant for their rent In the present case, the contract of lease was by written agreement, and in that agreement, the tenant, Maung Shwe Hmyin bound himself not to sell, to move or dispose of the outturn of paddy in the paddy field or fields in any way whatsoever before paying up the full rent to the landlord

I do not think it is strictly speaking correct to speak of the landlords having a lien in these circumstances A lien denotes that the property over which it is claimed is in the possession of the person claiming it and the paddy in this case was admittedly not in the possession of the plaintiff But there is clearly here a personal obligation on Shwe Hmyin not to dispose of the crops in any way without first paying up the rent in full A third person would not of course ordinarily be bound by this contract, but in view of the custom of the country referred to in Maung Han's case, I think the tenant may in a case such as the present, be looked on as holding the property in trust subject to this promise and that anyone who takes the property with knowledge of this promise would be liable to make it good.

Under S 27 (b), Specific Relief Act specific performance of a contract may be enforced against any person claiming under a party by a title arising subsequently to the contract except a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract and it seems to me that the claim in the present case is somewhat analogous to a claim for specific performance under this section. It has been found in the present case that Po Lwin had full notice of the landlord's claim and in the circumstances I am not satisfied that there is sufficient reason for departing from the principles followed in Maung Han's case I do not think therefore there is sufficient reason for interference with the decision of the lower Courts on this point.

There does, however, seem to be some force in the second contention made on behalf of the appellant. Plaintiff in his plaint states that the appellant received 400 baskets of paddy from Shwe Hmyin but he has not given evidence on that point and does not seem to have any personal knowledge on the point. There is evidence as to the abortive attempt at an agreement whereby Po Lwin would take all the paddy and pay all Shwe Hmyin's debts but that agreement fell through and I can find no real evidence of any kind that 400 baskets were given by Shwe Hmyin to Po Lwin. The witness Kha Kha states :

"I went and visited Shwe Hmyin's talin. I saw 500 odd baskets sold. These 500 baskets were given to U Po Lwin, who was present. I did not see Po Lwin carrying them away."

Witness does not state to whom they were sold and he does not state that Po Lwin took the paddy away. I do not see how this can be held to prove Po Lwin to have received 400 baskets. On the other hand there is evidence of Shwe Hmyin that 150 baskets only were taken by Po Lwin and this figure is admitted by Po Lwin himself.

I alter the decree of the trial Court by directing that so far as Po Lwin is concerned the amount payable is 150 baskets of paddy or their value Rs. 285. The decrees of the lower Courts directing Po Lwin to pay cost are also set aside ; the parties will bear their own costs in this appeal.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 38, R. 5—Application to restrain person temporarily from withdrawing amount at his credit and Court's order thereon are really for attachment before judgment.

An application praying for a temporary injunction restraining a person from withdrawing certain amount standing at his credit, and the order of Court issued thereon are, in spite of their wording, really for attachment before judgment. [P 94 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 38, R. 9—Liability of bond executed under R. 9, ceases as soon as suit is dismissed.

Liability on a bond executed in pursuance of the provisions of O. 38 R. 9, ceases as soon as the suit is dismissed by trial Court : A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 310, Appl. [P 94 C 2]

L Choon Foung—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The bond in question was executed to enable the defendant in suits Nos. 221 and 249 of 1926 of the Township Court of Thaton to withdraw Rs. 1,500 which was lying to her credit in the Sub-Divisional Court of Thaton, over which the Township Court in the two cases had issued so-called injunctions restraining Ma Kyu Yin from withdrawing the amount on account of the applications made by the respective plaintiffs in the two suits in the Township Court The application in suit No 221 prayed that an attachment before judgment might be made for Rs 800 out of the aforesaid Rs. 1,500 whereas the application in suit No. 249 prayed for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from withdrawing a sum of Rs 700 out of the aforesaid Rs. 1,500.

In spite of the wording of the prayer and the wording of the order issued by the Township Court to the Sub-Divisional Court, on these applications, the applications and the orders were in reality for attachment before judgment of the sum of Rs. 800 and 700 respectively which were claimed against the defendant in the two suits in the Township Court. The orders were clearly made under the provisions of O. 38, Civil P C , and not under O. 39. The bond executed by the appellant, Maung Ba Kin therefore was one executed in pursuance of the provisions of R 9, O 38 The ruling in Manackjee v. Chettyar Firm (1) is applicable to the case and the appellant's liability on the bond ceased as soon as the suit was dismissed by the trial Court. The order of the lower appellate Court is set aside, and that of the Township Court is restored with costs, advocate's fee in this Court to be two gold mohurs.

Application made by decree-holder merely to issue notice to the judgment-debtor to pay the decretal amount, to the Court which passed the decree is not illegal or to an improper Court, although the judgment-debtor at the time was residing outside that Court's jurisdiction. And if such application is made in good faith for the purpose of executing the decree, it will be a step-in-aid within the meaning of Art 182 (5) : A. I. R. 1926 All. 95 ; *A. I. Ko Ko Gyi and Sanyal—for Appellant

Razak—for Respondent.

Pratt, J—In Civil Suit No 224 of 1923 of the District Court of Mandalay. Maung Cho obtained a decree against C. K. R M. Chetty on 19th April 1924 In Execution Case No 65 of 1927, Ma Hta, successor of the decree-holder, applied to the District Court, Mandalay, on 4th April 1927 for notice to issue to judgment-debtor who was then resident in the Katha District, calling upon him to pay the decretal amount and costs.

A notice to show cause against execution of the decree was posted at the house of the judgment-debtor, while he was temporarily absent on 13th April 6 days before the decree was due to become time barred. The judgment-debtor did not attend Court or show cause and the execution proceedings were closed on 17th May 1927.

It was objected that a later application for execution was barred, it being contended that the proceedings in case No. 65 of 1927 were not bona fide. The District Court held that the application in case No. 65 was according to law and bona fide and held that the later application was not barred by limitation. Against that order the present appeal was filed. It is contended before us that the application in case No. 65 was not competent, that the correct course would have been to apply for transfer of the proceeding to the Katha Court in whose jurisdiction the judgment-debtor resided, since he had no property in the Mandalay District. The decree-holder did not, however, apply for execution against the property or person of the judgment-debtor, but merely for issue of a notice to the judgment-debtor to pay up the amount due on the decree with costs

She had only obtained a succession certificate and may well have thought issue of a notice, as a preliminary step, might be productive, since the judgment-debtor was a banker in business as such No authority has been cited for the illegality of issue of such a notice through another Court to a judgment-debtor, who has ceased to reside within the jurisdiction of the Court which granted the decree, and we are not prepared to say the notice was not competent. Until the decree-holder desired execution by arrest or attachment of property there was no necessity for transfer of the execution proceedings to the Katha Court.

We are of opinion it is impossible to hold that under the circumstances the application was merely colourable and made for the sole purpose of keeping the decree alive or with no intention of taking out execution or a step-in-aid The criterion in such cases as pointed out in the Allahabad Case of Sheo Prasad v. Narain Bai (1) is whether the application was made in good faith to secure execution, or to take a step-in-aid of execution, or was merely colourable with a view to give a fresh starting point for the period of limitation.

We consider the application for issue of notice was, as the District Court held, made in good faith, and, if it was not an application for execution, must yet be considered to have been a step-in-aid within the meaning of Art 182, Cl 5 of the schedule to the Limitation Act. The appeal is dismissed with costs. Advocate-fees 3 gold mohurs.

Otter, J—I agree. There is some authority for holding that an application such as was made in the present case may be an effective step-in-aid to save limitation: see Satya Chandra v Paresh Nath (2) and Gopal Chandra v. Gosain Das (3). I see no reason to think that an application for notice to issue which (as it turned out) had to be executed through another Court was not made in accordance with law and to the proper Court

But (apparently) we must be satisfied that the application was made bona fide for the purpose of obtaining execution: see Sheo Prasad v Narain Bai (1) and cases cited. I think it was so made in this case A succession certificate had to be obtained, and further application was made within a short time

Judgment—Respondents brought a suit for recovery of the amount due on a promissory-note As the promissory-note was not duly stamped they were allowed to fall back upon the original cause of action Part of the consideration of the promissory-note was a sum of Rs. 210 due as arrears of interest on a mortgage-bond Township Judge was of opinion that the fact of the said arrears of interest being due should be proved by the respondents and holding that they had failed to prove the same disallowed that claim

The Additional District Judge thought that the other party should prove that they had paid the said arrears of interest and holding that they had failed to do so decreed that claim.

The learned Additional District Judge has failed to ascertain whether the original mortgage-deed contains a covenant to pay interest which is distinct from and independent of the claim of the mortgagees to recover the principal sum, so that a non-payment of interest may give rise to a separate cause of action. On referring to the mortgage-deed, I find that it does not contain such a covenant. The deed simply states that Rs 500 was borrowed at 2 p. c p m., on the security of a house and its site that the principal and interest should be paid on demand, and before such payment is made the secured property should not be alienated.

As there was no distinct cause of action in respect of interest the District Court was wrong in giving a decree for the arrears of interest The appeal is accepted and the decree of the District Court is set aside with costs throughout.

Order of Reference

Maung Ba, J.—In Criminal Regular Trial No 79 of 1928 of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kyaiklat, the accused Ma Su was convicted of an offence under S. 406, I. P C. and the Magistrate, further under S. 517 (1), Criminal P C. ordered the exhibit property which consisted of certain loose diamonds to be returned to the complainant, one Maung Po Shein. The property was seized from the possession of three persons, Maung Hla Bu, Maung Po Hla, and Ma Ma Gale, and the two latter filed appeals against the order of the trying Magistrate, directing the return of the property to Maung Po Shein, before the District Magistrate, under S 520, Criminal P. C The District Magistrate in his order has upheld the order of the trying Magistrate.

Maung Po Hla has now applied to this Court for revision of the order of the District Magistrate and the question arises as to whether the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order complained of The Sub-Divisional Magistrate was a First Class Magistrate and in the case of Emperor v. Nga Po Chit (1), it was held by a Bench of this Court that in the absence of an appeal to the Sessions Court from a conviction by a First Class Magistrate, the District Magistrate had jurisdiction as a Court of revision to interfere with an order passed by the trial Court under S 517, Criminal P. C. On the other hand, in the case of Maung Mra Tun v. Maung Kra Zoe Pru (2), Das, J., has held that when the trial Court acquitted the accused on a charge of criminal misappropriation and passed an order under S. 517, Criminal P C. for the disposal of the exhibit property, the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to interfere with the order passed by the trial Court under S 517 These two decisions appear to be conflicting and in order to dispose of the matter now before me I consider that the following questions should be referred to a Full Bench for decision :

"(1) Whether, in the case of an acquittal by the trial Court, the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate as a Court of revision has power under S. 520, Criminal P. C. to interfere with the order of the trial Court passed under S. 517, Criminal P. C., regarding the disposal of the property in respect of which offence was committed ; and (2) Whether, in the case of a conviction by a First Class Magistrate the District Magistrate has, in the absence of an appeal to the Sessions Court, power to interfere with an order passed under S. 517, Criminal P. C. by the trial Court."

Opinion

Two questions have been referred to us in this reference : (The questions referred quoted as above). There are two conflicting decisions of this Court bearing on this point In the case of Maung Mra Tun v Ma Kra Zoe Pru (2) the trial Court had acquitted an accused on a charge of criminal misappropriation of a pair of diamond nagats, and ordered the nagats to be returned to the complainant. Das, J, held that, as the trial Court has acquitted the accused there could be no appeal to the Sessions Court and, therefore, the Sessions Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the order passed by the trial Court, nor had it any revisional power in the matter.

The decision of a Bench of this Court in Emperor v Nga Po Chit (1), does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judge in Maung Mra Tun's case. In that case Nga Po Chit had been convicted of criminal breach of trust in respect of three sewing machines by a First Class Magistrate Nga Po Chit did not appeal, but on application by the complainant the District Magistrate revised the order of the trial Magistrate as to the disposal of the sewing machines. It was held that the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order, although there had been no appeal and in any case no appeal would have lain to him

(1) A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 227=1 Rang. 199.
(2) A.I.R. 1928 Rang. 240=6 Rang. 259.

Section 520, Criminal P C , lays down that :

"any Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision may direct any order under S. 517, S. 518, or S. 519 passed by a Court subordinate thereto to be stayed pending consideration by the former Court, and may modify, alter, or annul such order and make any further orders that may be just."

Sections 517, 518 and 519 deal with orders as to the disposal of property before a criminal Court, or regarding which an offence appears to have been committed The meaning of S 520 was considered by a Bench of the Bombay High Court in In Re Khema Rukhad (3). In that case a First Class Magistrate had acquitted certain accused who were charged with theft of cattle and had directed the cattle to be given back to accused 1. On application, the Sessions Judge had modified the order as to the disposal of the cattle It was held that the Court of Sessions was not a Court of appeal within the meaning of S. 520, as an appeal from the order of acquittal would have lain in the High Court, and that it was not a Court of revision, as the Court of revision was also the High Court. This decision was followed by a single Judge of the High Court of Allahabad in the case of Emperor v. Debi Ram (4) and Das, J., followed these two rulings in Maung Mra Tun's case (2).

A different view of the law, however, been taken by the High Court of Allahabad in the earlier case of Empress of India v Nilambar Babu (5). Judgment in that case was delivered in 1879 when the present Code of Criminal Procedure was not in force. It was held under the old Code that when a Magistrate had discharged an accused person and passed orders as to the disposal of the property, the Sessions Judge was a Court of appeal and any one aggrieved by the order should have applied to him. This decision was followed by the High Court of Madras in the case of Queen Empress v. Ahmed (6). In that case the accused had been acquitted and Brandt, J., observed in his judgment :

". . . . It seems to me that the wording of the section is sufficient to show that the Sessions Court, as the Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the decisions of the First Class Magistrate by whom this case was tried, had power to dispose of the question."

The Calcutta High Court took a similar view of the law in the case of Emperor v. Joggeshu Mochi (7) The section corresponding to S 520 of the Present Code, and the Code then in force was S 419, and Anslie, J., remarked :

"The words "Court of appeal" in that section are not necessarily limited to a Court before which an appeal is at the moment pending. It may very often happen, as in this case, that the question of the propriety of an order under S. 418 for the disposal of any property produced before the Court may in no way concern the convicted person, and we think it unreasonable to put such a construction on S. 419 as shall make the power of the Judge to modify, alter or annul a Magistrate's order affecting one, contingent on the accident whether person has or has not chosen to appeal."

It appears therefore, that the narrow interpretation of the terms of S 520 adopted in the recent rulings of the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad is not the view that has been taken by the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta and that the decision of a Bench of this Court in Nga Po Chit's case (1) is supported by previous judicial decisions We agree generally with the reasoning of the late Ma Oung, J., in Nga Po Chit's case (1). We see nothing in the terms of S. 520 of the Code justifying the view that the words "Court of appeal" in that section mean only a Court to which either of the parties to the criminal case has appealed or could appeal. Without the section, when a party to a criminal case has appealed, the Court of appeal would have ample power to pass the necessary orders under S. 423 of the Code. Similarly it seems to us that the words "Court of revision" cannot be interpreted in the narrow sense suggested. The High Court in dealing with cases in revision has ample power under the provisions of S. 439 to pass orders as to the disposal of property in cases which may come before it in revision and the provisions of S. 520 are unnecessary to give it this power.

All First Class Magistrates are subordinate to the District Magistrate of the District, and either the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate can under S. 435 call for any proceedings of any inferior criminal Court in revision The Sessions Judge and the District Magistrate are therefore both "Courts of revision" with regard to the proceedings of a First Class Magistrate within their territorial jurisdiction Their jurisdiction is a concurrent one as it is in the case of revisional powers generally, and it does not seem to us that their jurisdiction in the matter is in any way dependent on the question whether an appeal has been filed or could be filed, against the original order of acquittal or conviction in the case concerned We therefore, answer both the questions referred in the affirmative.

 Succession Act (1925), S. 218—Member of joint Hindu family is not as such entitled under S. 218 to administration of estate of its deceased member—S. 250 has no application—Succession Act (1925), S. 250.

A member of an undivided Hindu family during his life is entitled to the beneficial interest in the family estate, but on his death that interest immediately ceases, and the whole beneficial interest in the estate belongs to the other members of the family. A member of a joint undivided Hindu family therefore is not as such a person entitled under S. 218 to an administration of the estate of a deceased member of the family *A. I. Judgment.—The property in dispute in the present case is the estate of one Tanjore Ramaswamy Massilamany Pillai, deceased. The appellant Tanjore Ramaswamy Gopalswamy Pillai applied on the original side of this Court for Letters of Administration to the estate of the deceased on the ground that he was the brother of the deceased, that they formed between them a joint undivided family under the Hindu law and that he was therefore the only heir and legal representative of the deceased. The deceased left surviving a wife, Meenakshi Ammal the first respondent and a daughter Padamabhai, the second respondent The two respondents opposed the application for Letters. They denied that the appellant and his brother formed a joint undivided Hindu family.

Issues were framed, and a large amount of evidence was recorded but the case was decided on a point of law. By consent of the parties a preliminary issue of law was fixed.

"Can Letters of Administration be granted to the surviving member of a joint Hindu family in respect of the property of that family"?

The learned trial Judge was of opinion that under the Mitakshara School of Hindu law, to which the parties belong, the property of a joint Hindu family passed on the death of one of the members not by succession, but by survivorship and that the surviving member of a family was not an heir to the deceased, and was therefore not a person to whom Letters of Administration could be granted.

The learned Judge did not deal in his judgment with special cases in which the general rule as to the grant of Letters is not followed His finding was merely to the effect that in such a case, the surviving member of a joint family was not a person to whom Letters could be granted, under the provisions of S 218, Succession Act The section lays down that:

"If the deceased has died intestate, administration of his estate may be granted to any person who according to the rules for the distribution of the estate applicable in the case of such deceased, would be entitled to the whole or any part of such deceased's estate."

A large number of decided cases have been cited to us on the subject. The majority of these cases deal with the question of Court-fees payable on the grant of Probate or Letters of Administration and are not therefore directly applicable to the point at issue in the present case.

In In the goods of Pokurmall Augurwallah (1), an application was made for probate of the will of a Hindu who was governed by the Mitakshara law. During his life, the testator had purchased certain property out of the income of the ancestral estate. It was held that, although the property vested in the members of the joint family as tenants-in-common it vested in them as trustees for all the coparceners and that all the property surviving in the estate of the deceased was property held by him in trust and therefore not liable to duty. In the matter of Dasu Manavala Chetty (2) a different view as to the payment of Court-fees was taken. In that case the deceased died intestate and Letters of Administration was applied for It was held that Court-fees must be paid on the share which the deceased was entitled to claim by survivorship. In the case of Kashinath Parsharam v. Gouravabai (3), an application was made for the will of a joint Hindu family and it was claimed that Court-fees were not payable It was held that what had to be looked at in such cases was the estate actually specified in the will and not the estate which could legally be disposed of by the will It was therefore held that the full Court-fees were payable. In Keshavlal Punjalal v. Collector of Ahmedabad (4) the question was whether Court-fees were payable on an application for Letters of Administration. In that case it was held that where an estate consists of a share of a Hindu joint family property no Court-fees were payable.

In all these cases the sole question for decision by the Court was as to whether Court-fees were or were not payable In no case had there been any opposition to the grant of Probate or Letters of Administration In the matter of Dasu Manavala Chetty (2) Miller, J., did state in his judgment:

"I have no doubt that the appellant is a person to whom Letters of Administration may be granted under S. 23, Probate and Administration Act."

But this point was not really a point for decision in the case and was dealt with very shortly.

We have been referred to the dictum of the Privy Council in the case of Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad (5). At p 103 (of 46 All.) of the judgment in that case their Lordships averred:

"It is true that the point was not actually taken so far as appears in any of these cases but when a long series of cases extending over a long period of time, when parties were represented by eminent counsel are decided in a way, where if a plea which was evident had been taken and upheld, the decision would have been the other way, there arises an irresistible conclusion that the plea was not taken because it was felt to be bad."

It is suggested that, as in all these cases, which were decided under the Court fees Act, Probate or Letters of Administration were actually granted and no objection was raised to their grant, the cases are all in favour of the view that the grant of Probate or Letters could legally be made. We do not think that there is very much force in this suggestion In none of these cases cited, does it appear to us that there was any one interested in opposing the grant of Probate or Letters. In no case were the parties represented by eminent counsel, whose cases would have served by raising a plea that the grant of Letters or Probate could not be made. We do not therefore think that these cases are of very much assistance to us for the decision of the present case

A case which appears to us to be more relevant is that of the Bank of Bombay v Ambalal Sarabhai (6) In that case a suit was filed by the son of a deceased Hindu, with whom he was joint and undivided against the Bank of Bombay to have certain shares in the Bank transferred to his name, from that of his father as the sole surviving coparcener Under S. 23, Presidency Banks Act 1876, when by the death of any proprietor or shareholder his stock or shares shall devolve on his legal representative, the Bank shall not be bound to recognize any legal representative of such proprietor or shareholder, other than a person who has taken out from a Court having jurisdiction in this behalf probate of the will or Letters of Administration to the estate of the deceased. It was contended on behalf of the Bank that under this section they were not bound to recognize the plaintiff, unless he took out Letters of Administration. The trial Judge held that the property of a joint undivided Hindu family did not on the death of a member of that family devolve on his legal representative, and that this section was therefore no bar to the bringing of the suit But on appeal this view of the law was held to be incorrect. In the course of the judgment in the appeal Court which was delivered by Jenkins, C J., the following passage occurs :

"It is said that inasmuch as the beneficial interest in the share passed by survivorship, the share would not according to the words of the section, vest in the executor or administrator. But this argument is founded on an obvious fallacy, it confuses the legal title and the beneficial interest, and assumes that because the beneficial interest has survived, the legal title must follow suit. But as I have pointed out, it is with the legal title alone that we are concerned, and that has not survived. We have not at present to consider in what way representation should be taken out or what duty should be paid ; it is sufficient to hold, as in my opinion we should, that the present is a case in which S. 23, Presidency Banks Act, applies, and that, if the Bank so requires, Probate or Letters of Administration must be produced."

There is no direct finding here on the question of law now before us. although difficulties might well arise out of this decision in the case of a joint Hindu undivided family, if the surviving members of the family were not competent to take out Letters of Administration. The difference here is pointed out between the legal title and the beneficial interest and it may be argued on behalf of the appellant that, although the beneficial interest in the property passes by survorship, the legal title vests in the legal representative of the deceased. It does not seem to us, however, that this would help the appellant in the present case. It may be a good argument in favour of the view that Letters of Administration can be taken out in respect of an undivided joint Hindu family estate, But it by no means necessarily follows that a surviving member of that joint family is one of the persons entitled to Letters.

Three cases have been cited to us, which directly supports the view of law taken by the trial Judge. In the case of Kali Kumar v Mt. Munabati Kumari (7) it was held that a member of a joint Hindu family could not apply for Letters of Administration to the estate of the deceased member of that family. The judgment of the Court in that case is very short and it does not seem to have been reported in an official report of the Court. A similar view was, however, taken by the original side of this Court in Ramagiri Guruvaya Naidu v. Govindammah (8) In the course of his judgment in that case Beasley, J remarks,

"In this case, according to Mr. Naidu the property is the property of the joint Hindu family and he is not claiming therefore any property of the deceased but is disputing his right to deal with his property as his own. He has not therefore such an interest in the estate of the deceased as entitles him either to oppose a grant of Letters of Administration to the alleged son or himself to ask for Letters of Administration."

And a similar view was taken by the Chief Court of the Punjab in the case of Mt. Uttam Debi v Dina Nath (9) It appears therefore that such direct authority as there is on the point before us for decision supports the view taken by the learned trial Judge.

The only person entitled to the grant of Letters under S 218, Succession Act, is one, who according to the rules for the distribution of the estate applicable in the case of such deceased, would be entitled to the whole or any part of the such deceased's estate and the question is whether the surviving member of a joint undivided Hindu family is entitled to any part of the estate of a deceased member of that family. The view taken by the Chief Court of the Punjab, and by Beasley, J of this Court in the two cases to which we have referred was that the surviving member would not be entitled to the whole or any part of the deceased's estate, because on the death of the deceased no estate in the joint family property remained in him at all, such estate as he had previously held passed at once to his survivors on his death

The general principles applicable in Hindu Law in such cases are explained in Mayne's Hindu Law, S 246 :

"There is no such thing as succession properly so-called, in an undivided Hindu family. The whole body of such family consisting of males and females, constitute a sort of corporation, some of the members of which are coparceners, that is, persons who on partition would be entitled to demand a share, while others are only entitled to maintenance. In Malabar and Canara, where partition is not allowed, the idea of heirship would never present itself to the mind of any member of the family. Each person is simply entitled to reside and be maintained in the family house, and to enjoy that amount of affluence and consideration which arise from his belonging to a family possessed of greater or less wealth. As he dies out his claim ceases, and as others are born their claim arises. But the claims of each spring from the mere fact of their entrance into the family, not from their taking the place of any particular individual, deaths may enlarge the beneficial interest of the survivors, by diminishing the number who have a claim upon the common fund, just as births may diminish their interest by increasing the number of claimants. But although the fact that A is the child of B introduces him into the family, it does not give him any definite share of the property, for B himself has none. Nor upon the death of B does he succeed to anything, for B has left nothing behind to succeed to. Now in every part of India where Mitakshara prevails the position of an undivided family is exactly the same, except that within certain limits each male member has a right to claim partition, if he likes. But until they elect to do so, the property continues to devolve upon the members of the family for the time being by survivorship and not by succession."

We do not understand the correctness of these principles to be questioned A member of an undivided Hindu family during his life is entitled to the beneficial interest in the family estate, but on his death that interest immediately ceases, and the whole beneficial interest in the estate belongs to the other members of the family. There is no succession to the deceased's estate, because he has left nothing to succeed to No part of the joint family estate is therefore the deceased's estate within the meaning of S. 218, Succession Act, and it therefore seems to us to follow that a member of a joint undivided Hindu family is not as such a person entitled under S. 218 to an administration of the estate of a deceased member of the family It may be as suggested by the judgment of Jenkins, C J , in the case of Bank of Bombay v Ambalal Sarabhai (6) that there is no certain legal title of the deceased which remains in existence after his death and vests in his legal representatives But if that is so, it is not a member of the family estate who obtains that title as such but his heir, and we do not understand it to be disputed that for the purposes of the Succession Act the heir in the present case is the widow or his daughter and not the appellant If therefore there is a legal title still surviving, that is not property to which the appellant as a member of the joint undivided family is entitled, we are therefore of opinion that the general question has been correctly answered by the learned trial Judge

It has been suggested that even though we hold that the appellant is not entitled to Letters under S 218, his claim should nevertheless be considered under S. 250 or 254. S. 250 hardly seems to us to be applicable to a case of the present kind. It may be that the appellant could have made out a case for the grant of Letters of administration under S 254. It is pointed out to us on behalf of the respondents what the appellant really wants to claim is entirely opposed to the interests of the estate of the deceased He claims that the property is his and does not belong to the estate at all If that be so, there are obvious objections to his being made the legal representative of the deceased It is possible that circumstances might arise in which it would be necessary to override these objections and grant of Letters of Administration to the survivor of a joint family, but it does not seem that these questions properly arise in the present case.

The application for Letters was clearly filed under the provision of S. 218, Succession Act The appellant claimed to be entitled to administration of the estate as of right He did not claim that such special circumstances existed that the ordinary rule should not be followed and that S 254 should be applied The case in the trial Court appears to have been decided by consent on the issue of law, which was framed and we do not think that the appellant should be allowed to make out a fresh case for himself now.

The result is that we see no sufficient reason to interfere with the orders passed by the trial Court and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

* (b) Income-tax Act (11 of 1922), S. 13 —Assessee not making honest statement—Random assessment can be made.

If an assessee does not choose to make an honest statement of account, so that the amounts of profits may be strictly determined, he cannot complain if a random assessment is made upon him. Macpherson v. Moore, 6 Tax Cases at pp. 114, 115 Rel. on. [P 103 C 2]

In an ordinary case, particulars in respect of which and the ground on which the Income-tax officer thinks that the statement was either not genuine or complete ought to be given in a notice, especially in cases where the objection is that the accounts are incomplete. But where the finding is that the accounts of the assessee in previous years as well as in the current year were not genuine but merely cooked for Income-tax purposes, the Income-tax officer is under no obligation either in law or in common fairness to set out all the reasons which led him to come to such a conclusion. [P 104 C 1]

Govt Advocate—for Commissioner

Cowasjee & Daniel—for Assessee

Judgment—In compliance with an order of this Bench, in Civil Miscellaneous Case No. 13 of 1928, the Commissioner of Income-Tax, Burma has stated a case on the following points of law.

Can an Income-Tax Officer having rejected the accounts of an assessee as not being genuine proceed to make an assessment (1) on insufficint material and (2) without giving notice of his dissatisfaction to the assessee under S. 23 (2) of the Act ?

In his statement of the case, the Commissioner reviews the circumstances attending the assessment of the present respondent, since the year 1922-23 From this, it appears that the accounts at any rate since the year 1924-25 have been rejected as incomplete and fraudulent and merely made up for Income-Tax purposes. The Commissioner sets out the grounds on which the Income-Tax authorities were satisfied that the statement of account was incomplete and fraudulent and we consider that they had good grounds for forming such an opinion. Whether the statement is incomplete and fraudulent or not is a question of fact for the determination of the Income-Tax authorities and not a question on which this bench can interfere and indeed from the wording of the reference this seems to be taken for granted as it assumes that the Income-Tax Officer was within his rights in rejecting the accounts as not being genuine.

The first question then is: Can he proceed to make an assessment on insufficient material ? We think on this point the quotations which the Commissioner has made from the case of Macpherson & Co v. Moore (1) are very much to the point. In that case, no doubt MacPherson & Co., had failed to make any return but we quite fail to see why a party who has made a false return should be in a better position than one who has failed to make any return. Mr. Cowasjee urges that S 13 only applies to the method and does not empower the Income-tax authority in any way. We cannot see any such limitation in the words of the proviso, which runs as follows :

" Provided that if no method of accounting has been regularly employed, or if the method employed is such that in the opinion of the Income-tax Officer, the income, profits and gains cannot properly be detected therefrom, then the computation shall be made on such basis and in such manner as the Income-tax Officer may determine. "

In this case the Income-tax Officer clearly considered that the income, profits and gains could not properly be detected from the respondent's statement, since he decided that that statement was not genuine He was consequently entitled to adopt whatever method he thought best. Adapting the words of the Lord President in Macpherson's case already alluded to :

" If Chan Lo Chwan does not choose to make an honest statement of account, so that the amounts of profits may be strictly determined, he cannot complain if a random assessment is made upon him by the Crown. "

For years, according to the Commissioner the firm has made defective and dishonest returns for the purpose of income-tax, and it is to be hoped that it will at last dawn upon them that honesty is the best policy and that this Court will not aid them in reducing the administration of the Income-tax law to a nullity.

The second question in the reference is:

" Can the Income-tax Officer make an assessment without giving notice of his dissatisfaction to the assessee under S. 23 (2) of the Act?"

(1) [1919-16] 6 Tax Cases at pp. 114 & 115.

On this point the Commissioner states that two notices were issued under S 23 (2) and also an informal notice requiring the assessee's attendance. The assessee was examined on two occasions and his statements were recorded He admits that the assessee was not questioned on the specific points which form the grounds for the officer rejecting the accounts The controversy on this point seems to come to this . For the assessee it is urged that the Income-tax Officer should give him particulars in respect of which and the grounds on which he thinks that the statement was not genuine, or on which it is incomplete We may say that there is no such provision in the Act, and that the Government Advocate's observation that it was a matter for the legislature rather than the Court seems to be justified In an ordinary case, we have no hesitation in saying that such particulars ought to be given in a notice, especially in cases where the objection is that the accounts are incomplete Here, however where the finding is that the accounts of the assessee in previous years as well as in this year were not genuine but merely cooked for Income-tax purposes, we do not consider that the Income-tax Officer was under any obligation either in law or in common fairness to set out all the reasons which led him to come to such a conclusion We accordingly agree with the answers given by the Commissioner in respect of both questions and we order the respondent to pay the Commissioner's costs seven gold mohurs

Where a party has applied for removal of attachment from his share, the only remedy left is to file a declaratory suit under O 21, R 63 and not a suit under Specific Relief Act, S. 42 A. I R 1924 Rang. 42 and A. I. R. 1926 Rang 124, Foll. [P 104 C 2]

Judgment.—Appellant Ma Than Yin is the daughter of U. Tha Aung by his first wife Ma Yin Kywe, and appellant Ma Than Shwe is the daughter of U Tha Aung by his second wife Ma Thaing Chon married Ko Po Min.

Respondent Sena Mahomed obtained a decree against Ma Thaing Chon and her second husband Ko Po Min, and in execution of that decree attached a house and site Appellants claimed that the said house and site was the hnapazone of U Tha Aung and his first wife Ma Yin Kywe and in Civil Misc Nos 18 and 19 of 1926 applied for the releasing of their shares in that property from attachment. For Sena Mahomed it was contended that questions of title could not be gone into in such cases, but that the claimant's proper remedy was to file a declaratory suit By consent the applications were accordingly dismissed without costs on 26th July 1926 The two appellants did not file their declaratory suit (13 of 1928) till the 27th January 1928 No consequential relief was asked for An objection was raised on two grounds (1) that the suit was time barred under Art 11, Lim Act and (2) that the suit was not maintainable, as no consequential relief was asked for The Township Judge overruled both the objections. The Additional District Judge took a different view He held that the suit must be treated as one under O. 21, R. 63 Civil P C , and not one under S 42, Specific Relief Act, and that Art 11, Lim Act should be applied.

Had appellants not applied for removal of attachment from their shares, they would have been at liberty to bring a suit under S 42, Specific Relief Act, as they would then be claiming a declaration of their own right to property Since there had been a claim under O 21, R 58, Civil P C the only remedy left was to file a declaratory suit under R 63, of that order This view is supported by Pya On Mg v Ma Hla Kyu (1) and K R N A Firm v Po Thein (2).

The decision of the District Court was correct and this appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs

The contention that if the Court wrongly applies the provisions of R. 1, the Court has acted in contravention of the provisions of R. 4 cannot be upheld if after bearing in mind provisions of R. 1 the Court is of opinion that the application should be granted, the granting of the application is not in contravention of the provisions of R. 4 even though the Court has taken a wrong view as to the meaning of R. 1. Order allowing appeal on any other ground is acting without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside in revision.

P. B. Sen—for Applicant.

B K. B Naidu—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The petitioner Lan Tin Ngan brought a suit against the respondent as legal representative of her deceased husband Maung Po Tu for possession of certain property The suit was dismissed by the trial Court, and the petitioner then filed an application for review of judgment. This application was allowed by the trial Court. The respondent appealed to the District Court and that Court holding that no sufficient cause for review had been established set aside the order granting the review. The petitioner now seeks to have the District Judge's order set aside in revision, and the main ground taken is that the order was passed without jurisdiction.

Under the provisions of R 1 (w), O. 43, Civil P. C, an appeal lies from an order under R 4, O. 47 granting an application for review. But O. 47, R. 7 provides that an order granting an application may be objected to on the ground that the application was :

"(a) in contravention of the provisions of R. 2;

(b) in contravention of the provisions of R. 4, or

(c) after the period of limitation prescribed therefor and without sufficient cause.

Such objection may be taken at once by an appeal from the order granting the application or in any appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit."

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that O 43, R. 1 (w), must be read with R. 7, O. 47, and that an appeal against an order granting an application for review only lies on one of the grounds set forth in R 7 The authorities are not unanimous on this point. But with the exception of the High Court of Bombay, the general consensus of opinion appears to be in favour of the view now urged on behalf of the petitioner.

A number of cases have been cited to me, but the case in which the matter has been most fully discussed is perhaps the case of Sikandar Khan v. Baland Khan (1). It was there pointed out that if an unrestricted right of appeal lay under O 43, the provisions of R. 7, as to the grounds on which an order granting a review could be objected to were unnecessary, and it was held that if the two rules were read together there was no necessary inconsistency. R. 7 lays down that the objections referred to therein may be taken either in an appeal from the order granting the application or in any appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit, and the presumption to be drawn from these provisions is that the legislature intended that in any case where such objection was not taken the order granting the review should be final. In the Code of 1882, there was no section corresponding to R 1 (w), O. 43 and had the legislature intended by the new Code of 1908, to modify the law as previously laid down in R. 4, O. 47, they could easily have done so, by amendment of that rule. The earlier rule in the present Code allows an appeal against an order granting the review, but the latter rule while still allowing an appeal lays down that in that appeal certain specific grounds may be taken. It does not seem to me that there is necessarily any inconsistency between these two rules. The restriction on the right of appeal contained in R. 7 applies not only to an appeal from the order granting the review application, but also to an appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit, and the effect of the rule is that subject to the specific grounds which may be taken by way of appeal under that rule the order granting the review application is final The appeal which is allowed in the earlier O. 43 must be treated as subject to this specific provision of this rule.

The same view of the law was taken by the High Court of Calcutta, in the case of Hari Charan Saha v. Baran Khan (2) and a number of other authorities to the same effect are quoted in Sikandar Khan's case (1) The High Courts of Madras, Allahabad, and Patna have decided in the same way and the decision of the Bombay High Court to the contrary does not appear to have been published in the official reports of that Court. My brother Carr expressed himself in favour of this view of the law in the case of A T. K P L. M Muthu Pillay v Lakshiminarayan (3) I am of opinion that the contention of the petitioner on this point must be upheld, and that although an appeal lies against an order granting a review application that appeal can only be entertained on one of the grounds set forth in R 7, O. 47, Civil P C.

It is suggested on behalf of the respondent that even if this view of the law be accepted, nevertheless the words in R 7 "in contravention of the provisions of R 4" are sufficiently wide to cover any objection taken under the provisions of R. 1. I find myself unable to accept this suggestion. No authority has been cited in favour of it, and it appears to me to be against the clear wording of the rule. R 4 (1) need not be considered, that merely deals with the rejection of an application. R. 4 (2) lays down that :

"where the Court is of opinion that the application for review should be granted, it shall grant the same, provided that

(a) no such application shall be granted without previous notice to the opposite party, to enable him to appear, and be heard in support of the decree or order, a review of which is applied for and

(b) no such application shall be granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleges was not within his knowledge, or could not be adduced by him when the decree or order was passed or made, without strict proof of such allegation."

The suggestion is that, if the High Court wrongly applies the provisions of R. 1, the Court has acted in contravention of the provisions of R. 4. But I am unable to see how this contention can be upheld. Under R. 4 (2) if the Court is of opinion that the application for review should be granted, it is bound to grant the same In deciding whether the review should be granted, the Court must bear in mind the proviso of R. 1. But if after bearing in mind these provisions the Court is of opinion that the application should be granted, the granting of the application is not in contravention of the provisions of R. 4, even though the Court has taken a wrong view as to the meaning of R 1. There can be no doubt in the present case, that the trial Court was of opinion that the application for review should be granted. There was therefore no contravention of the first part of Cl. 2, R. 4, and the only way in which the provisions of this rule could have been contravened would be by contravention of the provisions specificially laid down in the proviso to the rule

The other grounds under which objection may be taken are :

(a) that the application was in contravention of the provisions of R. 2, that is to say, that if the application was made to a Judge other than the Judge who passed the order sought to be reviewed, it can be made only on certain restricted grounds The application in the present case was made to the Judge, who heard the case, and an objection on this ground could not have been taken, nor was there any suggestion that the application for review was made after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor The District Judge had therefore jurisdiction to entertain the appeal only on the ground that one of the provisions of R. 4 had been contravened

It is not suggested that proviso (a) has been contravened, or that the opposite party was not served with a notice of the application, nor was the application for review granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence. One of the grounds on which review was asked for was that the applicant had been unable to produce a certain sale-deed at the hearing, but it was not on that ground that the application was granted. The learned Judge held that he had been in error in deciding the suit without considering the admission in argument on behalf of the defendant that the land had been adjudged in other litigation to belong to the plaintiff. The learned Judge finally says :

"A review of judgment may be granted for the ends of justice, where there is an error of law on the face of the judgment, or whenever the Court considers that it is necessary to correct an evident error or omission whether on any ground urged at the original hearing of the suit or not. In the present case I do not think the applicant was given a fair chance to prove his case and in order to meet the ends of justice, I am of opinion that the application for review of judgment should be granted."

This may not have disclosed sufficient reason for granting a review under R. 1, but it is clear that it was not on the ground of discovary of new matter or evidence which the applicant alleged could not have been adduced by him when the original decree was passed, that the application was allowed. The District Court set aside the order granting the review, because it held that the reason for which the review was granted was not sufficient reason within the meaning of O 47, R. 1. In dealing with the appeal that Court was not considering any objection that could have been taken raised under the provisions of R 7 and the Court was therefore in my opinion acting without jurisdiction in setting aside the order granting the review.

I therefore set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court, and restore those of the trial Court granting the review. The respondent, Ma Mya Kyin, will pay the costs of the petitioner, Lun Tin Ngan in this Court and in the District Court. Advocate's fee in this Court to be two gold mohurs.

Civil Suit No. 356 of 1928, Decided on 25th January 1929.

(a) Mahomedan Law—Heirs in possession only mortgaging deceased's property—Debts beneficial to estate—Mortgage would bind all heirs.

The heirs of a deceased Mahomedan actually in possession of his property can create a valid mortgage of the property which would bind all the heirs, if the money is borrowed for purposes necessary or beneficial to the estate. [P 107 C 2]

 (b) Transfer of Property Act, S. 59—Title-deeds already in creditor's possession continuing to be held as security for further loan—Equitable mortgage is created by constructive delivery.

Where title-deeds already in the possession of the creditor are agreed to be held by him as security for further advance, there was constructive delivery of the title-deeds which would be sufficient to create a valid equitable mortgage . 25 Cal. 611 and Ex parte Kensington, (1813) 2 V. & B. 83, Rel. on. [P 108 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a suit by the plaintiff Chettyar firm to enforce an equitable mortgage alleged to have been created by four persons one of whom is personally a party and the others, represented by their direct or indirect legal representatives of the persons who had executed the note, are Shaik Ali Mahomed, a paternal uncle of one Shaik Ismail, Ameerana Bibi, the mother of the said Ismail, Sahara Bibi, a widow of the said Ismail and Shaik Ahmed, another paternal uncle of the same person. These four persons are undoubtedly heirs of Ismail and entitled to a fairly large share in his estate.

Ismail died on 6th May 1923. On 2nd June 1923 all these persons executed a promissory note for Rs. 1,000 in favour of the Chettyar. The promissory note recites, what I have no doubt is, the fact that the amount was borrowed for the funeral and only the 40th day feeding expenses of Shaik Ismail.

It is alleged that there are certain other heirs who have not been made parties to the suit There are rulings both of this Court and of the Indian High Courts, which show that the heirs of a deceased Mahomedan actually in possession of his property could create a valid mortgage of the property, which would bind all the heirs, if the money was borrowed for purposes necessary or beneficial to the estate. If, therefore, the money had been borrowed for that purpose, the transaction would bind the other heirs ; but unfortunately they have not been made parties to this suit, and the learned advocate for the plaintiff does not want leave to amend the plaint or make them parties so as to bind their interest Their interest, whatever it might be, will, therefore, not be bound by the decree which will be passed in this suit.

The suit is defended by defendant 1, a daughter of Ameerana Bibi, Abdul Rashid, son of Sabiran Bibi, Hajee Munshi Abdul Aziz, husband of the same lady. Abdul Rahman, the 2nd husband of Sahara Bibi, the widow of Ismail and Amina Bibi, minor daughter of the said Sahara Bibi. All the persons defending the suit are thus not persons who had executed the promissory note, but they are legal representatives. The parties were at issue on many points which were not correctly represented by the issues I had raised.

The execution of the promissory note and the creation of the equitable mortgage were not admitted The validity of the creation of an equitable mortgage was also denied and a question was also raised as to whether a sum of Rs. 15 was paid on 21st April 1926, as alleged by the plaintiff The significance of the last point is that I had raised an issue as to whether the plaintiff would be entitled to a money decree if I hold that there was no valid equitable mortgage A question was also raised as to, if I held that there was a valid equitable mortgage and if the security was found to be insufficient to discharge the debt what reliefs the plaintiff would be entitled to.

As regards the first point, I am satisfied that these four persons did execute the promissory note The evidence of Raman Chettyar, who was the agent of the firm at that time, is quite clear and I accept his evidence on this point ; and coupled as it is with the inherent probability I have no doubt that these four persons did execute the promissory note It will also be noticed that Shaik Ali Mohamed, one of the actual executant of the note had not defended the suit ; nor has he given any evidence.

As regards the creation of the equitable mortgage, there has been no deposit of title-deeds The title-deeds had already been deposited by Shaik Ismail in respect of a debt contracted by him. It is alleged by Raman Chettyar that these four persons agreed he should hold the title-deeds already deposited by Shaik Ismail as security for the sum of Rs 1,000, which was then being advanced. There can be no doubt that such an agreement was entered into. The entry in the Chattyar's books of that day's transaction in question clearly shows that he advanced them the money on the agreement that the title-deeds already deposited by Shaik Ismail should also be held as security for this further advance. I, therefore, hold that the four executants of the promissory note as a matter of fact agreed that the plaintiff should hold the title-deeds deposited by Shaik Ismail as security for the new debt

The real point for the consideration and about which there is some difficulty is as to the legal effect of such an agreement There has not been any actual deposit of title-deeds. The English cases which proceed on the theory that a deposit is a part performance of an agreement to mortgage are not very helpful in a case of this kind where there is a clear provision in the Act itself S 59, T P. Act, enacts that nothing in that section shall be deemed to render invalid mortgages made in certain towns by delivery to a creditor or to his agent of documents of title to immovable property, with intent to create a security therein. Three things are therefore, essential. There must be : (a) a delivery to a creditor ; (b) of documents of title, and (c) with intent to create a security If the word "delivery" is construed strictly, there has been no actual physical delivery in this case. But this is not necessary, because there may be constructive delivery. In the case of Girendro Coormar Dutt v. Kumud Kumari Dasi (1) where a mortgagor, who had executed a registered mortgage, agreed with the mortgagee that he should hold the title-deeds already handed to him as security for a further advance, Mr Justice Sale, after citing the English case of ex-parte Kensington (2), held that such an agreement would create a vaid equitable mortgage In such cases it may be assumed that the parties agreed to treat the title-deed as having been handed back to the mortgagor and re-handed to the mortgagee. It will be idle to go through purely a form when the agreement itself is quite clear. . I see no objection therefore to treat such an agreement as a constructive delivery of the title-deeds to the creditor The documents of title in this case however, are not the documents relating to the title of actual mortgagor but documents showing the title of their ancestor.

(1) [1898] 25 Cal. 611=2 C. W. N. 356.
(2) [1818] 2 V & B 89.

I had some difficulty as to whether a delivery of documents of title which do not show the title of the mortgagor could be deemed to create an equitable mortgage ; but in this case it is quite clear that the parties actually intended to create an equitable mortgage, which should affect the estate of Shaik Ismail The money was borrowed as is stated in the promissory note itself for his funeral expenses and their intention clearly was to create a mortgage which would be binding on the whole estate, so that though the document deposited is document showing the title of the deceased Shaik Ismail, it was within the competence of his legal representative to redeposit it constructively by entering into an agreement to create a security therein The intention to create a security is perfectly clear from the entry in the Chettyar's book itself.

The decree in the present suit cannot bind the interest of the heirs who are not parties, but as the transaction undoubtedly was intended to bind the shares of the actual executants of the promissory note along with the shares of the others, a decree can be made which will bind their share in the property.

As regards the payment of the sum of Rs. 15 the question does not directly arise now and will be only relevant when after the property having been sold it is found that the proceeds are insufficient to pay the decretal amount. But as all the evidence has been before me, I shall shortly give my finding on that point also.

It is alleged that on 21st April 1926 a sum of Rs. 15 was paid towards the promissory note. The plaint is vague. It does not say who paid this amount but in answer to the interrogatories administered, it is stated that Sabiran Bibi and Asha Bibi made the payment. It is alleged that the payment made to the Chettyar are entered in a small book and that this sum of Rs. 15 does not appear in that book. But that opens with payments of Rs. 68 made towards the debt of Ismail and was apparently confined to payments of that debt. The absence of any entry in that book in respect of this debt does not in any way derogate from the statement of the plaintiff that this sum was received. Asha Bibi has given evidence to the effect that she has not made any payment of Rs. 15 directly or indirectly. She admits, however, that her son used to go and make payments and that her son might have paid this amount on her behalf. If the payment was not actually made by Sabiran Bibi and Asha Bibi and if the Chettyar wanted to set up a false claim, he could easily have stated that the legal representatives of the other executants and the surviving executant also made the payment The sum of Rs. 15 is entered in the day book of the Chettyar firm. It is a matter of common knowledge that it is impossible to interpolate in the account books of the Chettyar firm except by re-writing the whole account books. If therefore this entry were made with fraudulent intention of saving limitation, it must have been made three years before the Chettyar firm actually filed the suit with an eye to the future. There is no reason to suppose that the Chettyar firm anticipated at that time that it might have to file a suit after the period of limitation.

The reasonable assumption is that the Chettyar firm waited to file the suit for some time because there was a payment which saved limitation. I therefore hold that the sum of Rs. 15 was paid towards interest by Sabiran Bibi and Asha Bibi. (The judgment here discusses evidence and holds that the sum of Rs. 15 was paid towards interest by Sabiran Bibi and Asha Bibi. It then proceeds.) The point whether this payment will bind the other executants or not need not be considered at this stage and can be disposed of when an application is made for a personal decree after the sale of the mortgaged property. There will therefore be the usual mortgage decree in favour of the plaintiff Chettyar firm with interest and costs Six month's time is allowed for redemption.

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 37 of 1928, Decided on 7th January 1929, against order of Dist Judge, Lower Chindwin, D/- 23rd June 1928.

Succession Act (39 of 1925), Ss. 299 and 292—Orders passed by District Judge under Succession Act (e.g. one under S. 292) are appealable—Civil P. C., S. 104.

Orders passed by the District Judge under the Succession Act (e.g. order under S. 292) are appealable to the High Court and such appeals are governed in procedure by the provisions of the Civil P. C. relating to appeals : 39 Cal. 563, Doubted and Dist.; A.I.R. 1924 Rang. 237, Cons. [P 110 C 1]

Sanyal—for Appellants.

Gyaw—for Respondents.

Judgment—This is an appeal against the order of the District Court, Monywa, assigning a security bond under S. 292, Succession Act. A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies, relying on the Calcutta ruling in Kulimuddin v. Meharui (1), to the effect that no appeal lies against an order by a District Judge, assigning an administration bond under S. 79, Probate and Administration Act. This ruling was not accepted by this Court in Haji Pu v. Tin Tin (2) where it was held that an appeal lay from an order of a District Judge granting permission to an administrator to sell immovable property.

Even accepting the construction placed upon S 86, Probate and Administration Act in Kulimuddin v. Meharui (1), that the words mean that only such appeals lie as are provided for in the rules under the Civil Procedure Code, it has to be remembered that the wording of S. 299, Succession Act, is different. In that section it is laid down that every order made by a District Judge by virtue of the powers hereby conferred upon him shall be subject to appeal to the High Court in accordance with the provision of the Code of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, applicable to appeals.

The clear meaning of this section is that appeals shall lie from the orders of District Judge passed under the Succession Act and that such appeals shall be governed in the procedure to be observed by the provisions of Civil Procedure Code . S 104 of the Code provides that an appeal shall lie from the orders set forth and from no others save as expressly provided in the body of the Code or by any law for the time being in force. The Succession Act is a law in force and, therefore, appeals provided for under S 299 are recognized by the Civil Procedure Code. There can be no question that the appeal lies. We overrule the preliminary objections (Here the judgment discussed facts and concluded.) We are of opinion that the bond had ceased to be operative and that the order for assignment was under the circumstances wrong The appeal will be allowed and the order set aside with costs in both Courts. Advocate's fee in this Court five gold mohurs.

Special Civil Second Appeal No 455 of 1928, Decided on 12th February 1929.

Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 54—Moveables sold to one creditor in preference to another—Others not injuriously affected—Sale cannot be set aside except under S. 54—Transfer of Property Act, S. 53.

So far as moveable property is concerned mere preference of one creditor at the expense of another if he is not injuriously affected will not make the transaction void or voidable under any law except Insolvency law: 30 Mad. 6, Expl. [P 111 C 1]

Ba Thin—for Appellant.

Kale—for Respondent.

Judgment—On 3rd December 1926, in Suit No 223 of 1926 of the Township Court of Thaton, respondent obtained a simple money decree against one Rajama, and in Execution Case No. 325 of 1926 of the same Court he attached a house and its site and a plot of paddy land belonging to Rajama together with the crops standing on that land in execution of that decree. Appellant applied for removal of the attachment on the crops on the ground that he had bought them from Rajama on 29th November 1926 and he succeeded in getting the attachment removed. Respondent then filed a suit under the provisions of O. 21, R 63, to establish his right to attach the crops. He alleged that the sale to appellant was fraudulent, was intended to delay or defeat his claim as a creditor, was collusive and without consideration, and was void by reason of the provisions of S. 53, T. P Act. The trial Court held that the sale was good, and dismissed the respondent's suit. Respondent appealed and the lower appellate Court found that Rajama's intention in selling the crops to appellant was to delay or defeat respondent's claim, and that apppellant was a party to that intention. It held accordingly that no title to the crops passed by the sale and it declared that respondent had a right to attach the crops as belonging to Rajama, his judgment-debtor. Appellant appeals on the ground that his purchase of the crops was made in good faith and for consideration.

It is clear that the provisions of S. 53, T. P. Act, do not apply to the case, since those provisions apply only to transfers of immovable property and under S. 3 of that Act, immovable property does not include standing crops. But the lower appellate Court said that although S 53 did not apply nevertheless the principles laid down in that section in respect of immovable property are a useful guide to the Courts in dealing with the transfer of moveable property. The learned Judge was presumably following the decision of the High Court of Madras, in the case of Chidambaram v. Sami Aiyar (1) but assuming that the decision in that case is good law, I do not think that it warrants the learned Judge's decision in this case In the Madras case it was said that there is nothing in S 53, T. P. Act "to prevent a creditor (sic) giving a preference, provided nothing more is done by the transaction either with reference to the transferrer or transferee so as to injuriously affect the creditors of the former."

So far as moveable property is concerned there is nothing to prevent preference of one creditor at the expense of another, unless the provisions of the Insolvency law apply to the case, and creditors are left to protect themselves by means of the provisions of law for attachment before judgment. In the present case, there was clearly preference of appellant as a creditor, but mere preference is not sufficient to make the transaction void or voidable. On the question whether or not the transaction between appellant and Rajama affected respandent injuriously, otherwise than as being a preference of appellant, it may be noted that on appellant's own showing the property which he applied to attach for a debt which was ultimately found to be Rs. 373-6-0 consisted of a house, and its site which he himself valued at Rs. 1,000 and a holding of paddy land which he valued at Rs. 3,500 as well as crops in dispute which he valued at Rs. 950. It may be that these properties are subject of other charges, but respondent does not say so, and prima facie, it would appear that the sale of the crops to appellant did not prejudice his chances of recovering his debt of Rs. 373-6-0. Appellant's case was that Rajama owed him Rs. 678 on a promissory note and that he paid Rajama in cash the sum of Rs. 322 which was the balance of the sum of Rs. 1,000 for which he bought the crops, which are now in dispute, as well as four bullocks which he had himself sold to Rajama for Rs 300, two other bullocks belonging to Rajama, and two carts valued at Rs 40 or 50 each. Rajama herself said that she paid Rs. 35 for one of the bullocks belonging to her and Rs. 15 for the other and that the four bullocks which she returned to appellant were very thin when she returned them, the suggestion being of course that they were then worth less than Rs. 300 for which she had bought them The lower appellate Court said that appellant got for the Rs. 1,000 which he was alleged to have paid to Rajama property which was worth at least Rs 1,660 and that this fact was sufficient to show that the transaction between appellant and Rajama was fraudulent But even if appellant did obtain from Rajama more than value for his money, and if the decision in the case cited be correct, respondent could not get the transaction set aside unless he could show that he had been injuriously affected by it, and I am not satisfied that he showed that he was so affected. If he had any reason to believe that Rajama's immovable properties were insufficient to satisfy his claim he would naturally have applied for attachment of her moveable properties before judgment. He did not apply to attach them before judgment and so he left Rajama free to dispose of them to her other creditors or otherwise.

I see no reason to think that he is entitled to avoid the transfer of the crops to appellant, and therefore I set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and restore the decree of the trial Court dismissing the suit. Respondent will pay appellant's costs in all the Courts. Advocate's fee in this Court to be 5 gold mohurs.

Property jointly belonging to Burmese husband and wife was mortgaged by them by means of a registered mortgage-deed. The husband thereafter was sentenced to transporation for 10 years and within a month of his departure the wife alone sold the property to the mortgagee for an inadequate consideration. The mortgagee vendee then mortgaged it to S. When the husband returned he somehow got possession of the property. S then sued on his mortgage, purchased the property in execution, and then took out delivery warrant against the husband who brought the present suit.

Judgment.—This suit paddy land was the joint property of appellant, Maung Shwe Hta and his wife Ma Sin. On 28th March 1908, they mortgaged it without possession for Rs 600 by a registered deed to Daw Hmo, her son-in-law Maung, Tha Hlaing and her daughter, Ma Se Mi On 6th April 1911, Maung Shwe Hta was convicted of dacoity and sentenced to ten years' transporatation. On 1st may 1911 his wife was persuaded to transfer the land to Maung Tha Hlaing by a registered deed. In 1916, Daw Hmo, Maung Tha Hlaing and Ma Se Mi martgaged the said land along with other properties to respondent 9 U Min Din. In 1919 Shwe Hta returned from the Andamans. Somehow he has got back possession of his land and has been working it since. In 1923 U Min Din brought a mortgage suit on his mortgage to which Shwe Hta was not a party against the legal representatives of Daw Hmo, Tha Hlaing and Ma Se Mi as they were no longer alive and he obtained a decree. In due course the suit land was put up to auction, and U Min Din himself bought it on 7th November 1925. On 8th February 1926, U Min Din took out a delivery warrant. On 26th March 1926, Shwe Hta brought the present suit out of which this appeal has arisen.

U Min Din's title depends upon the title of Maung Tha Hlaing Both the Sub-Divisional Judge and the District Judge have held that the sale of the suit land effected by Shwe Hta's wife alone after his transportation in favour of Maung Tha Hlaing was valid. In my opinion this view is incorrect. Shwe Hta and Ma Sin are Burmese Buddists, and so long as marriage subsists the husband or wife cannot alienate their joint property without the consent of the other This principle was adopted as far back as 1891 in Ma The v. Ma Bu (1) and again affirmed in Ma Paing v Maung Shwe Hpaw (2). It was recited in the sale-deed that Ma Sin being in need of money to meet expenses in Shwe Ta's case and to pay off license-fees raised Rs. 280 by selling the property. Her sister's husband Tun Nyein, who also executed that sale-deed gave evidence supporting that recital ; Ma Sin has not given evidence, but in her written statement she supports her husband's version. That version is that the consideration of Rs. 280 simply represents the balance still due on the mortgage of 1908. But this dispute regarding the nature of the consideration seems to be immaterial. As propounded in Ma Paing's case (2) the joint property could only be made liable for the debt no matter whether it was an old debt or a new debt, but it could not be alienated by the husband or wife without the consent of the other. It therefore follows that the sale by Ma Sin to Tha Hlaing was invalid. Tha Hlaing thus acquired no title. Were U Min Din and Ma Sin transferees in good faith without notice? The answer must be in the negative. There was a registered mortgage-deed in 1908. It would show that the land did not belong to Ma Sin alone, but that it belonged to her husband Shwe Ta also. Without much trouble it could be found out that Shwe Ta was transported and that Ma Sin executed the sale-deed within a month for an inadequate consideration.

It is significant that as soon as Shwe Ta returned from the Andamans 8 years later, he worked the land and has continued to work it till now There is a conflict in the evidence as to how he came to re-occupy his land but the fact remains that he re-occupied it immediately after his return and has occupied it since. It is also significant that both the original mortgage-deed of 1908 as well as the sale-deed of 1911 have got back into the hands of Shwe Ta. There can be no question of estoppel. Shwe Ta had not slept over his rights. He got back the land from Tha Hlaing and also filed his suit promptly after U Min Din had taken out a delivery warrant against his property.

The appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Court is set aside and in its place a decree is now passed declaring that the mortgage decrees in C Reg Nos. 11 & 12 of 1923 of the District Court of Yemathin and the sale in execution of those decrees do not affect the suit land. Appellant is entitled to get his costs from respondents 9 and 10 in all Courts.

ORMISTON, J.

U Po Nyan—Applicant.

v.

Maung Kyan—Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. No 199 of 1928, Decided on 15th August 1928.

(a) Burma Co-operative Society's Act (1927), S. 47 (2) (b)—Order under—Civil P. C., S. 115.

An order passed by a civil Court, enforcing on application the order made by a liquidator under S. 47 (2) (b) is not revisable. [P 113 C 2]

(b) Burma Co operative Society's Act (1927), S. 47 (2) (b)—Amendment suggested.

Suggestion is made to the Local Government to provide for an appeal from the liquidator's order under S. 47 (2) (b) either to the civil Court or if that is not expedient to the Registrar of the Co-operative Societies. [P 114 C 2]

Hla Tun Pru—for Applicant.

Order.— The Paungde Co-operative Town Bank, Limited, which is a Co-operative Society governed by the Burma Co-operative Society's Act, 1927, having being ordered to be wound up the liquidator found the sum of Rs. 5,362-8-0 to be due to the Bank by Kyaw Yan (deceased), U Sein Po and U. Po Nyan, and made an order under S. 47 (2) (b) of the Act, that three named legal representatives of U Kyaw Yan, and U Sein and U Po Nyan should pay that sum together with Rs 402-3-0 (being liquidation fee) making in all Rs. 5,764-11-0. Compliance not having been made with that order the liquidator applied to the District Court of Prome for its execution by the arrest of U Po Nyan U Po Nyan filed objections stating that he was about to appeal from the order, claiming that under the instructions issued under the Act, he should have been granted eight months' time within which to pay and urging that his property should be attached rather than that he should be sent to jail. The District Court decided against him and issued a warrant for his arrest U Po Nyan has applied to this Court for revision of the order of the District Judge

It is quite clear that revision does not lie. By S 47 (5) of the Act, an order made by a liquidator under S. 47 (2) (b) shall on application be enforced by any civil Court having local jurisdiction in the same manner as a decree of such Court. The Court is precluded from making an enquiry into the merits or demerits of the order and has no option but to enforce it. It is impossible for me to hold that in acting as it did, the Court either exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. Revision does not lie and the appllcation must be dismissed.

The case, however, discloses such a curious state of affairs that I do not consider that I should be justified in dismissing the application without some further observations. The applicant has filed an affidavit in this Court, in which he states that U Kyaw Yan borrowed Rs. 3,000 from the bank, he and Maung Po Sein Po standing as his sureties for the repayment of the loan, that U Kyaw Yan died about two years ago without paying principal or interest, that the debt had become barred by limitation two years ago, that no legal steps were ever taken to recover the amount either from U Kyaw Yan in his lifetime or after his death, and that the liquidator had made the order without a pretence of an enquiry or investigation into his case.

If the facts are as stated, the liquidator was seeking to recover a debt which at the date of the winding up was already timebarred and therefore not legally recoverable by ordinary civil procedure. It was only by making an order behind which the Court would not go that the liquidator was able to compel the Court to enforce payment of a debt which was not due.

By sub-S 4, S. 47, it is enacted that where an appeal from an order made by a liquidator under section is provided for by the rules, it shall lie to the District Judge, S. 50 empowers the Local Government to make rules inter alia by sub-Cl. (r) to determine in what cases an appeal shall lie from the order of the Registrar. Consequently unless an appeal is provided for by the rules, no appeal can lie and the order of the liquidator under S. 47 (2) (b) is final so far as civil Courts are concerned. No rules of any description have as yet been made under the present Act, but rules were made by the Financial Commissioner's Notification No 22, dated 10th February 1916, under S. 43. Co-operative Societies' Act, 1912 (now repealed) which contained provisions similar to those in the present Act to which I have referred. If they are in force, there is no provision for appeals to a civil Court from orders of a liquidator.

If Civil Regular No. 8-P of 1928 of the District Court of Prome (filed on 20th April 1928) the applicant and U Po Sein sued the liquidator for an injunction to restrain him from taking any action to recover the amount, the subject-matter of his order and for a declaration that the order was ultra vires In the plaint, the case of the applicant and U Po Sein was set out fully. The liquidator contented himself with a bare denial of the facts alleged, and rested his defence on legal grounds. The District Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. He did not cite it, but no doubt he had in his mind S 49 of the Act, under which save as in the Act expressly provided no civil Court is to have any jurisdiction in respect of any matter connected with the winding up of a Co operative Society If the decision is correct, a person against whom a liquidator has made an order under S. 47 (2) (b) has no remedy in a civil Court, no matter how inequitous the order may be.

Nor would he appear to have any other remedy Under the revenue law elaborate provision is made for a series of appeals ending with the possibility of revison by the Financial Commissioner, under which a person aggrieved by an order of a subordinate authority can be pretty certain of obtaining a decision which if not necessarily based on the principles of law as administered by a civil Court is yet likely to be in accordance with substantial justice Under the Burma Co-operative Societies' Act, 1927 and under the rules passed under the Co-operative Societies' Act, 1912, on the other hand there is no provision for appeals from an order passed by a liquidator, or indeed of any sort of control over him Consequently every liquidator of society is a law unto himself and every member thereof is subject to his uncovenanted mercies.

I cannot help thinking that such a state of affairs has arisen from an oversight and am of opinion that the attention of the Local Government ought to be directed to it, with the view of providing an appeal from such an order of a liquidator as I have before me, either to the civil Court or if that be deemed inexpedient to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies.

With reference to the case before me if the facts are as the applicant states, it is obvious that he has suffered a very substantial injustice, and I venture to express a hope, that if they are so found to be, the Local Government will take such steps as possible to remedy it.

Where the truth lies it would be improper for me to express an opinion. I would only point out that the applicant is a second grade pleader of 26 years standing and that the liquidator's reply to the applicant's clearly expressed contention in the suit that the debt was time barred at the time of the order was merely that it was not barred because the order was made under S. 47 (2) (b) of the Act. There is no provision in that Act or elsewhere which attributes to such an order the effect of reviving a debt which is already barred by time. I have no sufficient materials before me to say that the debt was barrred by limitation. The applicant, however, appears to have made out a prima facie case, that it was so barred.

A copy of this order will be sent to the Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Burma, for his information

PRATT AND OTTER, JJ.

Mandalay Municipal Committee—Appellants.

v.

Maung It—Respondent.

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 40 of 1928, Decided on 20th December 1928

 Land Acquisition Act, S. 20—Person for whom property is acquired is not "person interested"—No notice to him under S. 20 is necessary, although he can appear and adduce evidence.

"Persons interested" in sub-S. (b) means persons interested by reason of their interest in the land acquired as owners, tenants and the like, and not persons interested as acquiring the land through the Secretary of State. Such a person is not entitled to separate notice under S. 20, though he has the right to appear and adduce evidence. [P 115 C 2]

A. C. Mukerjee—for Appellants.

Judgment.—A piece of land belonging to Maung It was acquired by the Collector under the Land Acquisition Act, on behalf of the Mandalay Municipal Committee

Maung It did not accept the Collector's award and claimed a reference to the civil Court under S. 18, Land Acquisition Act,

The Collector made a reference and the Court, after issue of notice to the claimant and the Collector, took evidence, and passed orders enhancing the compensation awarded to Maung It.

The Municipal Committee was not represented at the proceedings before the Court, and applied to the Court to set aside the award made ex parte and reopen the proceedings in order to give the Committee an opportunity of contesting Maung It's claim.

The Court held that the Municipal Committee was not a necessary party to the proceedings, and that their application to have the order set aside and to contest Maung It's claim on reference was not maintainable

The appeal has been argued before us almost entirely on the basis that the Committee is a person interested in the objection within the meaning of S. 20 (b) of the Act.

No direct authority has been cited on the point in dispute and we have been able to find none

It is common ground that no notice was issued to the Committee under S. 20.

Under that section the Court is bound to issue notice of the day, on which it proposes to determine the objection, and to direct the appearance of:

(a) the applicant,

(b) "all persons interested in the objection, except such (if any) of them as have consented without protest to receive payment of the compensation awarded,"

and

(c) if the objection is in regard to the area or to the amount of the compensation—the Collector.

Reading sub-S. (b) as it stands the natural construction is that "persons interested" in sub-S. (b) means persons interested by reason of their interest in the land acquired as owners, tenants, and the like, and not persons interested as acquiring the land through the Secretary of State

This interpretation is confirmed by the definition in S 3, where it is laid down that the expression:

"person interested" includes all persons claiming an interest in compensation to be made on account of the acquisition of land under this Act, and a person shall be deemed to be interested in land, if he is interested in an easement affecting the land."

It is apparent that this definition does not contemplate the case of the person in whose interest the property is acquired.

Had this been the intention, it would have been perfectly simple to include such persons in the definition

Moreover it is provided in S. 50 that no local authority or company, at whose cost the Act is put in motion, is entitled to demand a reference under S 18, although the local authority or company is allowed to appear and adduce evidence for the purpose of determining the amount of compensation.

As the Judge of the District Court pointed out, the Municipal Committee is not a necessary party to the proceedings before the Court, though it has the right to appear and adduce evidence

In such a case the Municipality is represented by the Collector, who has acquired the property on its behalf, and if it is represented otherwise in Court, is there to assist the Collector.

The Municipal Committee is not entitled to separate notice, and if it wishes (in case reference to the Court is made under S. 19) to contest the claim, must make its own arrangements to ascertain, if a claim is made, and when the objection is fixed for hearing, in case the Collector fails to keep it au fait with events in Court subsequent to his award.

The appeal is dismissed.

Civil Misc. Appln. No. 174 of 1928, Decided on 17th December 1928, for permission to appeal in forma pauperis.

(a) Limitation Act, S. 12—Date of judgment is date of decree—Time does not stop till decree is actually signed.

The date of a decree for the purposes of the Limitation Act is the date of the judgment and time can only be allowed as time requisite for obtaining copies if the applicant or appellant has actually made an application for a copy.  (b) Limitation Act, S. 5—Pleader accepting Court clerk's statement that application for copy cannot be accepted until decree is signed—Mistake is not bona fide and time cannot be excused.

No doubt a bona fide mistake on the part of a pleader is sufficient cause for admitting an appeal after time, but no mistake is bona fide unless made in spite of due care and attention. Time cannot be excused under S. 5 on the ground that the pleader accepted the statement of the clerk of the Court that an application for copy would not be accepted until decree was signed : 8 L. B. R. 566, Rel. on. [P 116 C 2, P 117 C 1]

Judgment.—The applicant, Maung Po Kyaw has applied for permission to appeal in forma pauperis. He wishes to appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tharrawaddy, and the judgment on which that decree is based is dated 11th October 1928. The period allowed for filing his application is 30 days after that date, or allowing eight days, the time he took to obtain a copy of the judgment and decree, 38 days The application was not filed until 4th December, 16 days after it was barred by limitation. I have been asked to excuse the delay for reasons given in an affidavit of the pleader of the petitioner. The pleader states that about three days after the judgment he applied for a copy of the judgment and decree but was told by the clerk of the Court that the application could not be accepted as the decree had not been drawn up. He made enquiries from time to time as to whether the decree was drawn up but was told that it was not. The decree was actually signed on 7th November and the application for the copy was made on the 8th. The affidavit goes on to state that the pleader advised his client that for purposes of limitation time would be computed from the date of the decree.

It was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma in 1905 in the case of Maung Kin v. Maung Sa (1), that the date of a decree for the purposes of the Limitation Act is the date of the judgment, and that time can only be allowed as time requisite for obtaining copies if the applicant or appellant has actually made an application for a copy. Now in this affidavit the pleader says that he applied for the copy, but it would appear from his affidavit that he accepted the statement of the clerk of the Court that such an application would not be accepted until the decree was signed. It does not seem to me that this was an effective application for the copy and the time requisite for obtaining the copy cannot begin to run until 8th November with the result that the application is actually barred by 16 days ; nor am I satisfied that sufficient reason has been made out for accepting this application under S. 5, Lim. Act

It was held in the case of Ma Mai Gale v. Tun Win (2), that a bona fide mistake on the part of a pleader may be sufficient cause for admitting an appeal after time, but that no mistake is bona fide unless made in spite of due care and attention. I cannot find anything here to justify the view that the pleader's advice to his client that limitation would be computed from the date of the decree was made with due care and attention. There is no explanation offered as to why the pleader was not aware of the law as laid down in Maung Kin's case (1), which has ever since been followed by the Courts in this Province. Copies were actually obtained on 15th November and there is no explanation, besides this incorrect legal advice, as to why there was a further delay of 19 days after filing the application In the application the applicant does mention his illness but it is only a vague mention and there is no affidavit in support of this allegation. I am not satisfied that the applicant had made out a case under the provisions of S 5, Lim. Act, and I must therefore hold that the present application is barred by limitation. It is accordingly rejected.

A. I. R. 1929 Rangoon 117

RUTLEDGE, C. J. AND BROWN, J.

K. V Galliara—Appellant.

v.

U. Thet—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 204 of 1928, Decided on 30th January 1929, from judgmont of High Court, Rangoon, original side, under Cl. 13 of Letters Patent.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, S. 41—Mortgagee not giving proper description of properties situate in Rangoon in accordance with provisions of Ss. 21 and 22—Properties not properly indexed in Registration office—Subsequent purchaser making ordinary search but not discovering mortgage—As failure to make proper entry in index was due to negligence of mortgagee, subsequent purchaser would be preferred to him—Registration Act, Ss. 21 and 22.

In a mortgage-deed presented for registration several different properties situate in Rangoon Town were given only one small description and the requirements of Ss. 21 and 22 were not complied with. The result was that the properties in question were not properly indexed; and as the index was not properly written up, the subsequent purchaser while making search in the ordinary way could not discover the mortgage.

Held: that as the failure to make a proper index in the registration office was primarily due to the negligence in giving proper description of the properties on the part of the mortgagee, the subsequent purchaser would be preferred to him. [P 119 C 2, P 120 C 1]

(b) Registration Act, S. 22 (3)—Description of property given in mortgage-deed not in compliance with terms of Ss. 21 and 22 but from careful study of document property could be indentified—Document is not disentitled for registration.

Where the description given of the mortgaged properties in the mortgage-deed is inadequately meagre and not in compliance with the terms of Ss. 21 and 22, the document can nevertheless be admitted for registration if the description given is not misleading and if from a very careful study of the document it would be possible to discover the property mortgaged 18 Cal. 556 (F.B.), Dist.

S. S Patkar—for Appellant.

E. W. Lambert—for Respondent

Judgment.—The respondent U Thet, brought a suit on a mortgage document against one U Tin and joined the appellant as a subsequent transferee There were various properties set forth as mortgaged in the mortgage-deed, but we are concerned in this appeal with only one of these properties, the property known as Lot No. 51, Block No. 10-I/2 in the Town of Rangoon.

The mortgage sued on is dated 25th June 1924 and the appellant bases his claim on a registered sale-deed, dated 9th February 1925. He claims that his title should be preferred to the title of the respondent, under the mortgage-deed, on the ground of gross negligence on the part of the respondent, whereby he was bona fide led to believe that the land was free from incumbrances, when he made his purchase The learned trial Judge has decided that the appellant has not established gross negligence on the part of U Thet, and has given a mortgage-decree against this property as well as against the other properties mortgaged. The appellant claims that the decree so far as this property is concerned is not justified. He raises a number of grounds in appeal, but the main ground is that the respondent U Thet was guilty of gross negligence and was therefore estopped from denying the validity of the appellant's title.

The body of the mortgage-deed simply sets forth the general terms of the mortgage and leaves the description of the properties mortgaged entirely to the schedule. In the schedule the properties are described serially:

Serial No. 1 is described as:

A piece of paddy land being holding No. 315 of 1922-23, situate in Kyaikasan Bautaw Kwin, Kambe Circle, Insein Township, Insein District, and measuring 13 acres

Serial No 2.

A piece of garden land being holding No. 316, 1922-23, measuring 4.28 acres. and situate in Kyaikasan Bautaw Kwin, Kambe Circle, Insein Township, Insein District.

Serial No. 3.

Leasehold land in Pazundaung Circle, in Blocks 9-K/2, 10. I, 10 I/2 being second class Lots Nos. 16, 17, 78 and 51 of the Rangoon Development Trust.

Serial No 4

All buildings, fixtures, trees and plants standing thereon.

Ths first two items consist of comparatively small properties, and are each of them described in great detail. Item No. 3, however, which contains no less than three entirely different pieces of property in Rangoon Town, contains one short description of all these pieces of property. The first piece of property mentioned therein is situate in Block No. K/2, whereas the other two pieces are in Blocks I, and I/2 respectively and the description does not show which lot number refers to which block numbers

It appears that registered documents in Rangoon are indexed in accordance with the Block numbers of the properties, to which they relate. Thus all properties in Block K/2 can ordinarily be traced in the index by referring to the entries in the Register under K/2 and similarly properties in Block I and I/2 can be traced by referring to entries under I, and I/2. But when the document in suit was registered no entry whatever was made in this index under Blocks I, and I/2. This omission was clearly due to the manner in which the schedule of the document was drawn up. A copy of the schedule taken from the copy of the document in the registration office makes that clear. There the property is shown as Blocks 9. K/2. 10-I and 10-I/2, second class Lots Nos. 16, 17, 78. and 51 "This clearly does not show any of the properties to be in Block I, or I/2 and the figure "1" having in each case been substituted for the letter "I" It is stated on behalf of the appellant that search was made in the index, before the appellant purchased the property and that the index did not disclose the present mortgage. This fact is not disputed, nor is it suggested that the appellant was in any way negligent in not making a further search

It is admitted, that the method employed in searching the registration records in the case was the method ordinarily employed by advocates and pleaders in Rangoon. It is true that there is another index which could have been searched, the personal index, but in view of the similarity of Burmese names, that would admittedly have been a very laborious process and is not the procedure which is ordinarily followed. Had the index been properly written up, it is clear that the appellant would have discovered existence of this mortgage before purchasing the property.

The learned trial Judge has found this to be the case, and he has also found that there has been negligence, but he holds the negligence to have been on the part of the office or clerks of the Registration office and not on the part of U Tin, the defendant, or his pleader.

Under S 21, Registration Act, no testamentary document relating to immovable property shall be accepted for registration, unless it contains a description of such property sufficient to identify the same and

"houses in towns shall be described as situate on the North or other side of the street or road (which should be specified) to which they front and by their existing and former occupancies and by their numbers if the houses in such street or road are numbered."

By rules issued by the Local Government under S 22 of the Act, the description of lands in towns must include the block, division and the holding number of the block.

So far as the description of the house is concerned in the present case, it is clear that the requirements of S. 21, Registration Act, have not been complied with. The numbers of the blocks were all classed together in one short description and all the buildings were given one comprehensive description as "buildings, fixtures, trees, and plants, standing thereon." It seems clear therefore that the requirements of the Registration Act were not properly complied with. This is not in itself sufficient to disentitle the document to be registered, as S. 22 provides that if the document is sufficient to identify the property the failure to comply with the provisions of Ss. 21 & 22 will not disentitle the document to be registered. Although the description given in the Schedule to the document is exceedingly meagre, from a very careful study of the document it would have been possible to discover that the property now in suit was mortgaged.

It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that on account of the faulty description we should hold that there has not really been any registration at all with regard to this property and that the mortgage as regards this property is therefore invalid, and we have been referred to the case of Baij Nath Tewari v. Sheo Sahoy Bhagu (1) In that case it was held that the registration of the document was invalid, but the facts of that case are not similar to the facts of the present case. It was not there merely a question of misdescription. The description given in the document in that case was directly misleading. We are not satisfied that the misdescription in the present case was so complete as to disentitle the document to be registered. It does not seem to us, however, that this certainly concludes the matter. There can be no doubt that the description of the property given in the document is not such a description as it is reasonable to expect in such documents, and it is also clear that the failure to give a more satisfactory description is responsible for the failure to enter the mortgage of this particular piece of land in the index under Block I-2 The description in schedule shows Four Second Class Lots Nos. 16, 17, 78, & 51, as being situate in Blocks 9-K/2 10-I/2 & 10-I/2 The learned trial Judge points out that the mistake was due in part to the fact that the letter "I" is used for denoting blocks in Rangoon, and that the letter "I" is exceedingly liable to be mistaken for the figure "1" as has actually happened in this case. But it is clear that the use of the letter "I" would have led to no mistake whatever, had the proper description been given in the schedule and had the word "Block" been used in front of "10-I/2", and of "10-I/2". The manner in which the schedule is drawn up suggests strongly that all the items of property shown in Serial No 3 comprised one piece of property, and no satisfactory explanation has been given as to why each of these pieces of property was not separately and fully described as was done in the case of Serial Nos. 1 & 2. It appears that at the time the mortgage document was executed, the mortgagor was in custody on a charge of murder, and it is suggested that that was why the document was drawn up in such an unsatisfactory fashion. The pleader who acted for the mortgagor, has given evidence, and admits that no title-deed was given to him, no explanation is offered as to why the title-deeds were not produced. We can see no reason why, even though the mortgagor was in custody it should have been impossible to draw up a description of the property in proper detail In fact it is alleged on behalf of the respondent that all the information required as to the property is actually in the document itself, and the fact that the mortgagor himself was in custody cannot explain away the negligence of the lawyer in not using the information at this command in such a way, as to make the matter intelligible to the ordinary reader of the document. The clerks in the registration office are not trained lawyers, and it is no part of their duty to study documents presented to them carefully for the purpose of considering what their legal meaning may be. It seems to us, that with a description such as is given in the schedule in the present case, mistakes such as have occured in the registration office, were only to be expected and in our opinion the failure to make a proper entry in the registration index was primarily due to the grossly careless way in which the deed was drawn up, and the property described.

It must be borne in mind that at the time this document was drawn up, the mortgagor produced no title-deeds whatsoever. At the time of their mortgage the deeds in question were with a previous mortgagee and it has been contended on behalf of the respondent that, however careless the plaintiff may have been in not requiring the production of title-deeds before accepting the mortgage, the title-deeds could not have been procured, even if they had been enquired after. That may be so, but in the absence of the taking of the ordinary precaution of seeing the possession of title-deeds when taking a mortgage of property it was obviously all the more incumbent on the mortgagee to see that the registered mortgage deed was properly drawn up in such a way that a third person making a search in the registration office for any transactions with regard to the property could not be misled. In the circumstances of the case, we are of opinion that the manner of drawing up the registered deed amounted to a gross negligence and that by this negligence on the part of the mortgagee, the mortgagor was enabled to hold himself out to the appellant as the ostensible owner of the property mortgaged.

It has not been suggested that the purchase by the appellant was not in good faith ; nor is it suggested that the appellant did not take reasonable care before making the purchase to satisfy himself as to the vendor's title. We are, therefore, of opinion that the principles laid down in S. 41, T. P. Act, apply to this case, and the transfer of the property to the appellant was a valid transfer and was not affected by the mortgage in favour of the respondent.

It is claimed on behalf of the appellant that in actual fact the money with which he bought the property was utilized for the purpose of redeeming a previous mortgage, and it is claimed that he would, in any case, be entitled to keep this mortgage alive for his protection. The chief difficulty in the way of this contention is that these facts were never pleaded in the trial Court. In view, however, of the conclusion we have come to on the main ground of appeal, it is not necessary to consider this point any further. We allow this appeal and alter the decree of the trial Judge, by omitting Lot No. 51, in Block 10-I/2 from the properties included in the mortgage decree, the respondent will pay the costs of the appellant in both Courts.

Criminal Revn. Nos. 1031-A, 1033-A and 1037-A of 1928, Decided on 15th November 1928, against decision of Township Magistrate, Salin.

Burma Excise Act (5 of 1917), Ss. 30 and 5—Scope.

To prove an offence under the Act it is necessary to show that the place of possession or sale of tari is within five miles of a licensed tari shop. [P 102 C 2]

Judgment.—Two of these cases were tried by the Township Magistrate, Salin, and in them the accused were convicted of illicit possession of tari. The third case was tried by the Additional Magistrate of Pwinbyu, and in it the accused was convicted of illicit sale of tari. This case was carelessly tried and the evidence was inadequate.

In all three cases there is the serious defect that no offence has been either proved or admitted. By para. 1 (4) of Financial Department Notification No.72, dated 18th September 1917 (1), tari is exempted from all provisions of the Excise Act throughout Upper Burma, except in places within five miles of a licensed tari shop. It follows that except within such limits neither the possession nor the sale of tari is an offence. To prove an offence it is necessary to show that the place of possession or sale is within five miles of a licensed tari shop. No attempt was made to prove this in any of the three cases, nor was it in any of them stated in the particulars of the offence to which the accused was required to plead. All the convictions are therefore bad.

I set aside the convictions and sentences in all three cases and direct that each of the accused persons be acquitted and that the fine paid by him be refunded to him.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 1432, 1439 and 1450 of 1928, Decided on 3rd December 1928 against order of 1st Addl Magistrate, Rangoon

Opium Act, S. 9 (c)—Knowledge and control of opium must be conclusively proved.

The term "possession" implies knowledge on the part of the alleged possessor, and before the accused person is required to account for opium there must be proof that such opium has been in his possession or under his control: (1872-92) L. B. R. 573, Foll. [P 121 C 2]

Judgment.—Five persons were convicted of illegal possession of opium under S 9 (c), Opium Act and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment. In the case of two of them, a sentence of fine was added

The facts, as held proved by the prosecution, were briefly as follows: U Ko Ko, Court Prosecuting Officer of the First Additional Magistrate's Court, Rangoon, acting on information, went and waited in front of Kamayut Police-Station with two witnesses, Maung Kya Nyun and Maung Po Hmyin, at about 10 a. m. on 30th September 1928. A Dodge Car, No. RA8423, was then seen coming from Rangoon, and he stopped the car and made a search. He found a ball of opium in each pocket of the waterproof coat, which was folded The waterproof coat was in the pit in front of the rear seat. The appellant, Ba Kyin, was driving the car, and the appellant, Maung Han, sat next to him. The appellant, Swee Kyo, the appellant, Chan Mya, and one Lwang, were seated on the rear seat The two balls of opium weighed 58 ticals, and Ko Ko states that the opium balls were effectively concealed in the pockets of the waterproof. The raincoat fitted Lwang, and Lwang admitted that it belonged to him, but he pleaded that he did not know to whom the exhibit opium belonged. All the four appellants also denied knowledge of the opium.

The driver, Maung Ba Kyin, stated that, as the two Chinamen told his friend, Maung Han, that they wanted to go to Hmawbi, he was taking them there Chan Mya, the Burman, who was one of the three seated on the back seat, said that he was in the car because his friend, Ba Kyin, invited him in. Swee Kyo, who is 55, said that, while he was at a teashop, Lwang came in a car and invited him for a drive, so he got in and did not know anything about the opium. Lwang, who is 22 and who has not appealed, as already pointed out, denied knowledge of the opium, though he admitted to be the owner of the waterproof The car was not a taxi, and the record does not disclose who the owner was Among the appellants, only Swee Kyo examined two witnesses to support his defence. The learned Magistrate rejected their evidence and convicted all the five persons, holding that the three Burmans were helping the two Chinamen in removing the opium out of Rangoon.

The law laid down by Mr Fulton in Queen-Empress v Chit Aung (1), is still good law. The term "possession" implies knowledge on the part of the alleged possessor, and before an accused person is required to account for opium there must be proof that such opium has been in his possession or under his control. Mr Fulton quoted the following remarks of Cave, J., in Reg v. Ashwell (2). His Lordship said:

"If these cases are rightly decided, as I believe them to be, they establish the principle that a man has not the possession of that of the existence of which he is unaware. A man cannot, without his consent, be made to incur the responsibilities towards the real owner which arise from the simple possession of a chattel without further title, and if a chattel has, without his knowledge, been placed in his custody, his rights and liabilities as a possessor of that chattel do not arise until he is aware of the existence of the chattel and has assented to the possession of it."

The question is whether the four occupants of the car, besides Lwang in whose waterproof the opium balls were concealed, could be said to have knowledge of the existence of the opium. Has there been any proof that such opium was in their possession or under their control? It might be that Lwang was the owner of the opium, and that the others were simply helping him in taking it out of Rangoon, or it might be that Lwang concealed the existence of the opium from the knowledge of the other occupants and simply took them with him to avert suspicion.

In the absence of circumstances from which it could be conclusively inferred that the four appellants had knowledge of the presence of the opium, and that such opium was under their control, it would not be safe to punish them on mere suspicion.

I am constrained to hold that the case against these four appellants is not free from reasonable doubt They are accordingly acquitted Bail bonds are cancelled.

U Thin Ohn and others — Accused — Respondents.

Criminal Appeals No. 1064 to 1096 of 1928, Decided on 21st December 1928, against order of 6th Addl Magistrate, Rangoon.

Rangoon City Municipal Act (1922), S. 214 —To offence under S. 125 though continuing one if committed for more than six months, S. 214 applies.

Although the offence of keeping open a private market without a license, is a continuing offence, which is freshly committed every day, still if the offenders are committing the same for more than six months to the knowledge of the Municipality, S. 214 (2) is a valid defence. [P 122 C 2]

N. M. Cowasjee—for the Crown.

Judgment —These are appeals by the Local Government against the acquittal of the respondents by the Sixth Additional Magistrate of Rangoon.

The facts in all the cases are the same, and the point for decision is the same.

The Corporation of Rangoon some time in 1926 sold certain premises to the Commissioners for the Port of Rangoon. It appears that the Port Commissioners let stalls in these premises to the various accused and collected rent from them.

In June 1927, the Commissioner of the Rangoon Corporation took exception to this and entered into correspondence with the Chairman of the Port Commissioners. The final result of the negotiations was that the Port Commissioners agreed to remove the tenants from their stalls by the end of December 1927, and the Commissioner of the Corporation agreed to take no action until then.

It appears that the Port Commissioners gave notice to the respondents to leave their stalls by 31st December. The respondents did not comply with that notice and have continued occupying their stalls and selling at them. Thereupon the Rangoon Corporation instituted these prosecutions under S 125, City of Rangoon Municipal Act 1922, for keeping open a private market without a license All the respondents were finally acquitted by the Magistrate on the ground that the prosecution was barred under S. 214 (1) (b) of the same Act because the complaint had not been filed within three months of the date on which the commission of the offence was first brought to the notice of the Corporation. It is contended in these appeals that that decision is wrong

In my opinion the decision is quite correct The argument put forward by Mr. Cowasjee for the Corporation is that the offence in question is one which is freshly committed every day ; that he has not sought to prosecute the respondents for anything done prior to January 1928 ; and that, as these prosecutions were instituted in that month, the bar provided by S 214 does not apply.

I am unable to accept this contention. It is admitted by Mr. Cowasjee that licenses for private markets are issued, and that in the normal course such licenses are issued, for the Municipal year from 1st April to 31st March in the following year. He says also that licenses issued at any intermediate date would have effect only up to 31st March.

It seems to me, therefore, quite clear that the offence complained of in this case is one which comes within the scope of S 214 (2) of the Act, which provides that :

"failure to take out a license under this Act shall be deemed, for the purpose of sub S. (1), to be a continuing offence until the expiration of the period for which the license ought to have been taken out."

The respondents were committing the offence in June 1927 They continued to do so right up to the time when these prosecutions were instituted, and, since the Commissioner of the Corporation admittedly knew that they were committing the offence in June 1927, S. 214 (1) (b) clearly applies and prevents the Court from taking cognizance of the offence.

Mr. Cowasjee argues that the offence complained of is a continuing offence, which is freshly committed every day. I agree with him on this point; but it seems to me that that is not in his favour, and that the effect of S. 214 (2) is to prevent of the Corporation from raising such an argument as this, and saying that they were not prosecuting for the offence committed in June but for an entirely fresh offence committed in January. If that is not the effect and the intention of sub-S. (2), S. 214, I am unable to find any meaning in it whatever.

I find, therefore, that the judgment of the Magistrate is correct, and I dismiss these appeals.

Special Second Appeal No. 536 of 1928, Decided on 21st March 1929, against decree of Township Court, Yedashe, in Civil Regular Suit No. 136 of 1927.

 Civil P. C., O. 21, Rr. 60 and 63—Order to be in favour of claim under R. 60 must be result of investigation unless investigation unnecessary—Claim preferred under R. 58 but notice not issued to attaching decree-holder—Decree-holder not appearing—Execution proceedings as also claim application closed—Neither order closing execution proceedings, nor that closing claim application, nor also their combined effect, is order under R. 60 or order against decree-holder within R. 63.

An order under R. 60 in favour of a claim must be the result of an investigation arising on a claim being preferred under R. 58 except in cases where the investigation is unnecessary. [P 124 C 2]

In an execution proceeding, a claim was preferred under R. 58 but no notice of the claim application was given to the attaching decree-holder. On the day of hearing the execution proceeding itself was closed owing to the decree-holder's default of appearance and at the same time the claimant's application for removal of attachment was ordered to be closed.

Held: that as no notice of the claimant's application was given to the decree-holder, neither the order closing the execution proceedings, nor the order closing the claimant's application, nor even the combined effect of them both read together can be an order under R. 60 or an order against the decree-holder within the meaning of R. 63: *A. Judgment.—This appeal has arisen out of Civil Regular Suit No. 136 of 1927 of the Township Court of Yedashe, which was a suit for partition and possession of a quarter share in a piece of paddy land known as holdings Nos. 5 and 6 of 1926-27 of Kyetthay-Ahtay Kwin, Thagya Circle, Yedashe Township.

The plaintiff-respondents based their claim on a purchase of that share from Mahomed Moosa who has purchased the right, title and interest of Maung Tun Aung, (the brother of the defendant-appellant, and one of the four children of Ma Kha, deceased) in the land in the Court sale held in Civil Execution No. 12 of 1924 of the Township Court of Yedashi. This execution case was proceeding in which one U Min Din, who had obtained a decree against Maung Tun Aung in Civil Regular No 272 of 1917 of the Township Court of Pyinmana, had the decree executed and the right, title and interest of Maung Tun Aung in the land attached and sold.

It is common ground that the land was originally the property of Ma Kha during her lifetime, and that Ma Kha died leaving four children, two of whom are appellant Maung Tun Hlaing and the above named Maung Tun Aung. But the appellant's case was that he had obtained and received possession of the whole land from Ma Kha before her death by virtue of an oral sale by her in consideration of a sum of money paid by him to her. Before the Civil Execution No. 12 of 1924, he had taken out execution of the same decree in Civil Execution Case No. 224 of 1923 of the Township Court of Yedashe, in which the same land was attached, which led to the filing of an application for removal of attachment by the appellant on 2nd January 1924. This case, however, ended in a dismissal for default of the decree-holder's appearance on the day for the return of the warrant of attachment, namely 7th January 1924 and in a withdrawal of the attachment. In view of the withdrawal of the attachment the appellant's application for removal of attachment, being Civil Misc. No. 2 of 1924 was ordered to be closed at the same time. Two days thereafter the decree-holder filed his application in Civil Execution No. 12 of 1924, it should be noted that no notice was issued to the attaching decree-holder in Civil Misc. No. 2 of 1924.

It is not disputed that the plaint land was put up for sale in Civil Execution No. 12 of 1924, that Mahomed Moosa became the purchaser of the judgment-debtor's right, title and interest, and the sale was confirmed on 30th May 1924, and that the plaintiff-respondents have purchased the same right, title and interest from Mahomed Moosa.

On the facts, the applicant's defence was mainly that the whole land had become his own property on account of Ma Kha's oral sale to him with the consent of all the other heirs in consideration of his payment of Rs. 800 and his having received possession of the land in pursuance of that sale

The appellant also raised some legal defences to the effect that the plaintiffs, or their alleged predecessor-in-title, were not, and had never become the owners of the plaint land or any portion thereof, inasmuch as the alleged purchase by Mahomed Moosa of Tun Aung's alleged share in Civil Execution Case No. 12/24 did not pass any title in the suit land, the proceedings in the said execution case being void ab initio owing to the dismissal of the previous execution proceedings and the removal of attachment in that proceedings.

Both the Courts below have come to concurrent findings against the appellant on his defence on the facts, and I see no sufficient reason to disagree with them. This appeal has been laid under S 11, Burma Courts Act, merely because the lower appellate Court modified the decree of the trial Court The trial Court passed a decree as prayed for in the plaint, viz., for partition and for possession of one-fourth share of the land in suit in the plaintiff's favour; but the lower appellate Court refused to order partition and merely gave declaration of the plaintiff's title to a certain portion of the land.

The main legal question raised on appellant's behalf lies in the contention that the orders passed in Civil Execution No 224 of 1923 and Civil Misc No. 2 of 1924 on 7th January 1924, should be read together, and were tantamount to an order directing removal of attachment, under O. 21, R. 60, Civil P. C, which was conclusive, subject only to the result of a suit under O. 21, R. 63, and consequently barred the fresh application for attachment in Civil Execution No. 12/24 which was therefore illegal and void

A claim proceedings like the one in Civil Miscellaneous No 2/24 falls within the scope of O. 21, R. 58, which enacts that the Court shall proceed to investigate a claim unless it considers that it was designedly or unnecessarily delayed, whereupon such investigation the Court is satisfied of circumstances mentioned in R. 60, it shall make an order releasing the property wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit from attachment. To my mind, a comparison of these rules shows that an order under R. 60 in favour of a claim must be the result of an investigation arising on a claim being preferred under R 58, except in cases where the investigation is deemed unnecessary as for instance, where the attaching decree-holder declines to oppose the claim or consents to its being granted. Now the order passed in Civil Execution No 224/23 was passed in consequence of the decree-holder's default of appearance to prosecute that proceedings and it was in these terms:

"Called, warrant returned duly executed. Neither the decree-holder nor his agent present. Dismissed for default. Attachment withdrawn."

This order would have been passed all the same, even if there was no application for removal of attachment It was therefore, not an order passed in consequence of or as a result of the appellant's application for removal of attachment, because the Court had not even ordered the issue of notice of the appellants' application to the decree-holder, there is nothing to show that the decree-holder was even aware of the appellant's application, and it cannot be said that the decree-holder absented himself to evade an investigation There is thus no ground for reading the orders in the two cases together as if they are interdependent The order for withdrawal of attachment in Civil Execution No. 224/23 cannot in these circumstances be regarded as one under O. 21, R. 60, while the order closing the case in Civil Miscellaneous No. 2/24 in veiw of the dismissal of the execution proceedings and the withdrawal of attachment is by no means such an order or an order against the decree-holder within the meaning of O. 21, R 63. In my opinion the contention is untenable.

The learned advocate for the appellant cites Maung Pya v Ma Hla Kyu (1) in which Duckworth and Po Han, JJ., following the rulings in Venkatratnam v. Ranganayakamma (2); Nogendra Lal v. Fani Bhusan (3) and Gulab v. Mutsaddi Lal (4), held that an order on a removal of attachment application after no investigation of the claim comes within the category of an order made against that party in such a way as to render that order conclusive and thereby prohibit the institution of a suit to establish the same rights after the period of one year allowed by Art 11, Sch 1, Lim. Act, has expired. All these cases are distinguishable from the present case.

In estimating whether an order made on a removal of attachment application without investigation is of the description mentioned in R. 63, it is, in my opinion essential to distinguish an order against the applicant in a claim proceedings from an order against an attaching decree-holder, for, against a claimant an order may be made refusing to investigate the claim on the ground that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed, and the claim may also be dismissed on account of the claimant's default of appearance, or on account of non-prosecution, while it is inconceivable that an order should be made against an attaching decree-holder without having him before the Court except where the case is to be dealt with ex parte against him The order which was considered in Maung Pya's case (1) was an order dismissing the application for removal of attachment for want of prosecution, on the applicant's proposing to the Court that his application should be dismissed without costs

In the Full Bench case of Venkataratnam v Ranganayakamma (2) it was held that an order refusing to investigate a claim to attached property on the ground that there was delay in filing it is an order passed against the claimant within O. 21, R. 63, and that an order on a claim petition merely stating that as it was filed late it will be notified to the bidders is in effect an order rejecting the claim to which O. 21, R 63 will apply. This ruling was considered by Schwabe, C. J., in Abdul Kader v. U. T M. Somasundaram Chettyar (5), where a claim petition put in having been dismissed on the ground that the sale had taken place and that the Munsif had no power to pass an order as it was filed after one year from the date of the order, it was held that O. 21, R 63 had no application. The learned Chief Justice was inclined to treat the decision in Venkatratnam's case (2) as being confined to the facts of that particular case and to cases where the claim was dismissed as too late under the proviso to R 58.

In the case of Nogendra Lal v. Fanis Bhusan (3) it was held that the party against whom the order was made on a claim either allowing or rejecting the claim preferred under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C, may irrespective of whether any investigation took place or not bring a suit to establish his right under O. 21, R. 63. The order under consideration was an order dismissing the claim " for default on the ground of delay." The case of Gulab v Mutsaddi Lal (4), was one where a petition made to the attachment of property under R. 58 was disallowed because the objector did not appear on the date fixed. The case before me is quite distinguishable from Maung Pya's (1), and the cases which it followed In my opinion the order closing the case in Civil Misc. Case No. 2 of 1924 cannot be deemed to be an order against the attaching decree-holder and I do not think that the order in Civil Execution No. 224/23 should be read as an order made in a proceedings under R. 58. Even if the two orders are read together they cannot in my opinion be deemed to be an order made under R. 60.

For all these reasons, I overrule the appellant's learned advocate's contention There is no ground for interference with the judgment of the lower appellate Court, except where it refused to order partition. The decree of the lower appellate Court is, however, bad on account of this refusal I, therefore, set it aside and restore the decree of the Court of the first instance, but I consider that the appellant should pay the respondent's costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 146 of 1929, Decided on 11th March 1929, against decree of Dist. Judge, Pyapon.

Civil P. C., S. 145—Remedy against immovable property given as security under a registered bond can be enforced without recourse to a suit.

In a case where a surety has offered certain specified properties as security for his obligations under the bond, and where because these properties are immovable properties it has been necessary to have the bond registered to make the security effective, the bond can be enforced against the properties without bringing a regular suit A. I. R. 1924 All. 105; 41 Mad. 327, Foll. [P 126 C 2, P 127 C 1]

Tha Kin—for Appellant.

E. Maung—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In suit No. 9 of 1926 of the District Court of Pyapon the present respondent sued Ma Seik Kaung for possession of certain property including a mill, on the strength of a registered conveyance of the properties given to them by Ma Seik Kaung. In connexion with that suit they applied for the appointment of a receiver of the properties and it was ordered that Ma Seik Kaung should be allowed to remain in possession of the mill on payment of a rent of Rs. 1,000 a month and on giving security for Rs. 7,000. The present appellant accordingly executed a security bond for Rs. 7,000 Subsequently further security of Rs. 3,000 was demanded by the Court and appellant executed a registered bond for Rs. 10,000 in favour of the Judge of the Court giving certain immovable properties belonging to her as security for Ma Seik Kaung's duly performing and satisfying any order which might be made against her.

Ma Seik Kaung failed to pay the rent which she had undertaken to pay and for the payment of which appellant had stood surety, and after respondents had obtained a decree in the suit they applied to the Court for the recovery of the arrears of rent from appellant as surety under the provisions of S. 145 (c), Civil P. C

The Court found that appellant was liable on the bond to the extent of Rs 10,000 in respect of the arrears of payable by Ma Seik Kaung and held that respondents were entitled to bring the properties which she had given as security to sale without filing a suit on the bond.

Appellant contends in appeal that the lower Court was wrong in holding that the properties could be sold without a suit on the bond and she says that there was no personal liability under the bond.

A reference to the terms of the bond shows that there is no basis for the latter of these grounds, and the only question which arises in the appeal is whether in a case where a surety has offered certain specified properties as security for her obligations under the bond, and where because these properties are immovable properties it has been necessary to have the bond registered to make the security effective, the bond can be enforced against the properties without bringing a regular suit.

In form the bond in the case did not effect a mortgage of the properties although it was admittedly intended to do so. It was to the following effect:

"I, Ma On Bwin, am hereby bound to the Judge of the District Court in the sum of Rs, 10,000 in the following circumstances. It has been ordered by the Court that Ma Seik Kaung shall be allowed to continue to work the rice mill in suit, on giving security and I have consented to be surety for Ma Seik Kaung for the due performance and satisfaction of any order which may be made against her. Now the condition of the obligation of this bond is that if Ma Seik Kaung shall duly perform and satisfy any order which may be made against her then there shall be no obligation under this bond, but in case of any default by Ma Seik Kaung I shall pay to the Judge of the District Court Rs. 10,000 or such sum as the said Judge shall order in or towards satisfaction of such order."

To that document is annexed a list of the properties which Ma On Bwin had in fact agreed to offer as security for her obligation under the bond, but there is no statement in the bond itself that those properties were offered as security or that they were mortgaged by Ma On Bwin.

It is not, however, the case of either side that the document did not in fact effect a mortgage of the properties mentioned therein, and we shall therefore deal with the matter on the assumption that there was such a mortgage.

The question whether the remedy against immovable property given as security under a registered bond can be enforced without recourse to a suit was considered in the case of Subramanain Chettyar v. Raja of Ramnad (1) where it was decided that such property can be sold by order of the Court without recourse to a suit. There is a similar decision in the case of Mahalakshimi Bai v. Badan Singh (2) and we see no reason to doubt that these decisions are in accordance with the intention of the legislature embodied in S 145 of the Code.

No question of the amount of arrears of rent has been raised in the appeal and therefore we assume that the arrears amount to at least Rs. 10,000.

We are of opinion that the lower Court's finding that the property could be brought to sale without a suit on the mortgage bond was correct and we dismiss the appeal with costs, Advocate's fee in this Court to be five gold mohurs

Judgment—The first and second respondents, who are said to be brother and sister, obtained a number of mortgage decrees against the rest of the respondents, and under those decrees brought the mortgage properties to sale. The sale proceeds were more than sufficient to satisfy the mortgage debts and appellants, who had obtained a money decree for a very large amount against the same judgment-debtors claimed to execute their decree against the sale proceeds The first and second respondents claimed that they were entitled to interest on the mortgage money not only up to the time when the mortgaged properties were sold but also for the time during which the sale proceeds were lying in Court before payment out to them, and the Judge made an order for such interest.

Applicants filed an appeal against that order, but asked that if it should be found that no appeal lay, their memorandum of appeal should be treated as an application for revision We are of opinion that no appeal lies in such a case, but we have no doubt that we have power to deal with the case in revision.

Respondents' learned advocates cannot support the lower Court's order. All that they say is that interest is always in the discretion of the Court, which is of course not true. We see no reason to believe that the mortgagees, that is, respondents 1 and 2 were entitled to any interest on the mortgage money after the mortgaged properties had been sold and the mortgage had come to an end, or that there was any reason why they should be allowed interest on the sale .proceeds of the mortgaged properties while they were lying in the Court.

We, therefore, set aside the lower Court's order for payment of interest on the mortgage money after the date of the sale of the mortgaged properties and we direct the Court to make the necessary consequential alterations in its subsequent orders. Respondents 1 and 2 will pay applicant's costs in this Court, advocate's fee to be 5 gold mohurs.

Second Appeal No 523 of 1928, Decided on 6th March 1929, against decree of Dist. Judge, Thayetmyo, in Civil Appeal No. 41-T of 1928.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 63—Application for removal of attachment being unsuccessful—Applicants bringing regular suit praying for costs in application and for declaration that property was theirs—They can get decree for such costs.

Persons, who, having been unsuccessful in their application for removal of attachment levied on certain property bring a regular suit claiming costs paid by them in respect of such application and also a declaration that the property was theirs, can get a decree for costs on the previous application if they are successful in their suit. *A. Ba Thaung—for Respondents.

Judgment—In this case the respondents made an unsuccessful application for removal of an attachment levied by the appellant upon certain property. This application was dismissed with costs They brought a regular suit under the provisions of O. 21, R 63 claiming the costs paid by them in respect of this application for removal of attachment, and also a declaration that the property was theirs. In that case, they were successful, and got a decree for costs and got the declaration asked for This decision was upheld in the lower appellate Court

Before me the suggestion is that as a matter of law, no decree for the costs of the respondents' application for removal of attachment could have been granted. The wording of O. 21, R 63 is relied on, and the case of Nambi Veettel Tarwad v. Athi Karath Valappil Tarwad (1) is relied on for the appellant

Two cases are relied on for the respondents viz. Sadu v. Ram (2) and Palaneappa Chetty v. Maung Shwe Ge (3). In the former of the two cases, it was said that the Court ought to lean strongly against multiplicity of suits and the result of withholding consequential relief was pointed out. It is true this case and the case in the Upper Burma Rulings conflict with the Madras case relied on by the appellant, but it seems to me that the reasoning underlying the Bombay High Court is irresistible. Moreover in my view there is nothing in the actual wording of O 21, R. 63 which precludes the award of consequential relief in such a case. The appeal therefore must be dismissed with costs

Civil Revn No. 281 of 1928, Decided on 14th March 1929, against judgment of Dist. Court, Bassein, in Civil Misc. Case No. 74 of 1928.

Civil P. C., O. 33, R. 5 (a) — Value for Court-fee wrongly calculated—Application must be dismissed—(Obiter) Right of fresh application may subsist.

Where an applicant has not calculated the Court-fee value in accordance with S. 7 (v) (b), Court-fees Act, his application for leave to sue as a pauper must be rejected. (Obiter) applicant appears to have still a right to present a fresh application. [P 129 C 1]

S. C. Das—for Applicant

N N Burjorjee—for Respondent.

Judgment — Appellant's application for permission to sue as a pauper was rejected by the District Judge of Bassein on the ground that the value for the purposes of Court-fees had been wrongly calculated.

Appellant claims the entire estate of U Tha Ko. According to the schedule filed, the estate consists largely of paddy holdings. There can be no doubt that the values of such holdings should have been calculated at five times the land revenue under Cl. (v) (b), S. 7, Court-fees Act So the valuation in the application is incorrect.

The question is whether such a wrong calculation offends Cl. (a), R (5), O. 33, Civil P. C. A Court shall reject an application for permission to sue as a pauper where it is not framed in the manner prescribed by R. 2. That rule lays down that such applications shall contain the particulars required in regard to plaints in suits. R. (1), O. 7, enumerates such particulars and one of them is a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and Court-fees so far as the case admits. S. 7, Court-fees Act prescribes the mode of computing Court-fee value In the present case applicant has not calculated the Court-fee value in accordance with that section when such a defect occurs in an application for leave to sue as a pauper R 5, O. 33, leaves the Court no discretion, but it must reject the application. The District Court's order was justified. Applicant appears to have still a right to present a fresh application.

The present application for revision is accordingly dismissed with costs, two gold mohurs

F. S. Doctor—for Respondent.

Judgment—This is an appeal from an order of the District Court of Henzada refusing to issue a warrant for the arrest of a minor. It appears that the appellant and the respondent were husband and wife at the time that the minor, a female child was born, about 7 years ago. A month or so after the birth the parties were divorced by mutual consent, and the minor has been living with her mother ever since, either at Mandalay or Sagaing The appellant it seems paid maintainance for the minor up to sometime last year when he applied to the District Court of Henzada under S. 25, Guardian and Wards Act, for possession of the minor. The mother did not appear in person in Henzada or give evidence and an ex parte order was passed in the appellant's favour. The present is an application to execute that order by issuing a warrant of arrest of the minor. This, the District Court has refused to do, on the ground that it has no jurisdiction. The objection in our opinion is well founded, and the appellant was not entitled in law to make this application originally in the District Court of Henzada at all.

The words of S. 4 (5), Guardian and Wards Act, are in our opinion clear "the Court" means

"in any matter relating to the person of the ward, the District Court having jurisdiction in the place where the ward for the time being ordinarily resides."

An application under S. 25 accordingly must be made to the Court where the minor ordinarily resides. This according to the evidence before us, would have been either the District Court of Mandalay or the District Court of Sagaing, but certainly not the District Court of Henzada. The District Court of Henzada accordingly had no jurisdiction to pass an ex parte order and it is accordingly a nullity and of no effect For these reasons the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs 5 gold mohurs advocates' fee.

Order of Reference

Pratt, J —Plaintiff Ma Tok Gyi sued her husband U. Po O, Myothugyi of Monywa and Ma Ngwe Shin for cancellation of two deeds of gift of landed property by defendant 1 in favour of defendant 2, and was granted a decree

The defence was that there had been a divorce between plaintiff and defendant 1, that the suit was not maintainable in its present form and should have been for partition.

The District Judge held that there had been no divorce. It is perfectly clear that there was no formal divorce, and having regard to the social position of the parties it is obvious that a divorce would have been effected with some formality in the presence of witnesses.

We are also satisfied that there had been no desertion which would operate automatically as a divorce.

It is true that defendant 1 entered into an intrigue with defendant 2 and ended by living with her in a separate house some 12 years ago; but it is admitted by him that the income of the joint property was shared by him with the plaintiff and revenue on the land paid by each in turn in alternate years.

Defendant used to visit his wife's house each year on the occasion of annual pagoda festival and stay some four days He kept his gun, his official dah. and his appointment orders in his wife's house.

The fact that his wife did not speak to him from the time he left her house to live with defendant 2 only means that she was incensed with him. It cannot constitute desertion by the husband. It is also admitted that she occasionally sent him food, and it is clear that they must have communicated, through a third person or otherwise.

In the written statement there is no mention of desertion but defendant 1 alleged a divorce by mutual consent 12 years or so ago.

The conditions laid down in Ma Nyun v. Maung San Thin (1) as requisite for a divorce by desertion and lapse of time have obviously not been fulfilled.

The property covered by the deed of gift is joint, and the interest of defendant 1 therein is not determinable. It is contended, however, on behalf of the defendant-appellants that the deeds are valid at least to the extent of defendant 1's interest in the property covered thereby and should not be set aside Reliance is placed on the Full Bench Ruling of the Lower Burma Chief Court in Ma Shwe U v. Ma Kyu (2), which lays down categorically that a sale by a Burmese Buddhist of hnapazone property of himself and his wife made without her consent constitutes a valid transfer of his share and interest in the property sold.

If this ruling remains sound law then it is good authority for the proposition that a gift of joint property would be valid to the extent of the donor's interest.

In the Privy Council case of Ma Thaung v. Ma Than (3) it was observed (at p 178 of 5 Rang.) that in the Burmese social and legal system the wife is, to all intents and purposes a partner.

In Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpaw (4), by a Full Bench of this Court the doctrine of partnership as extended to a Burmese husband and wife was definitely formulated. It was held that husband and wife were partners and all the property of the marriage, whether payin or lettetpwa is partnership property. It was held that where the interest of a Burmese Buddhist husband in property which was either payin, brought, by him to the marriage or was jointly acquired, lettetpwa, is during the subsistence of the marriage sold in execution of a decree for a debt incurred by him in business carried on by him while he was living with his wife, the buyer of that interest does not acquire the right to have the property partitioned and to obtain possession of part of the property as representing the husband's interest in it. It was held also that there is presumption that a suit brought against either of the partners is a suit against the partnership and that in such a suit a partner, who is not joined as a party is represented by the partner who is joined as a party, and a decree against either partner can ordinarily be executed against any partnership property, provided the decree was obtained against that spouse as representing the partnership.

The ruling in Ma Shwe U v. Ma Kyu (2) was not expressly dissented from.

(1) A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 294=5 Rang. 537 (F.B.).

(2) 3 L. B. R. 66 (F. B.).

(3) A. I. R. 1924 P. C. 88=5 Rang. 175=51 Cal. 374=51 I. A. 1 (P.C.)

(4) A.I.R. 1927 Rang. 209=5 Rang. 296(F.B.).

If the position remained where it was left by the Full Bench ruling, there would be no difficulty in holding that the gifts are good to the extent of the donor's interest in the property, subject to the reservation that the donee cannot claim partition or possession during the subsistence of the marriage between U Po O and Ma Tok Gyi. It is common ground that the property covered by the gift was joint, being partly acquired by inheritance and partly by the joint efforts of the partners.

Although the parties to the marriage are partners it is obvious that the partnership can only be applied with limitations. Under the partnership law an assignment by a partner of his share without the consent of the other partners is not wholly inoperative. It entitles the assignee to receive a share of the profits to which the assigning partner would otherwise be entitled, and, in case of dissolution of partnership, the share of the partnership assets to which the assigning partner is entitled (Lindley on Partnership, Edn. 8, pp. 423-28) A partner is at liberty to dispose of his interest in limine which is regarded as real property without reference to his co-owners.

In the present instance therefore the donee whilst having no interest or claim against the wife during the subsistence of the marriage with respect of the partnership property might conceivably be entitled to claim the income of his interest in the property from the donor.

In Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpan (5) however, in applying the Full Bench ruling on the reference, the Bench held that the sale of the husband's interest in the joint property was void and set it aside.

It seems to me, the correctness of this conclusion is open to grave doubt, but, if it is correct, it would seem to follow that a gift of joint property by a husband or wife without the other's consent would be void as held by the District Court I consider the point is one which should be determined by a Full Bench.

I would, therefore, refer to a Full Bench the question whether a deed of gift executed by a husband, without his wife's consent, with reference to lands forming part of the joint property of the marriage is valid to the extent of his interest in the property or is wholly void.

(5) A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 274=5 Rang. 478.

Otter, J.—I concur, and I would observe that the sale of a share in partnership property may be subject to considerations different from those applicable to the facts of the present case. I would further point out that the law relating to a sale of such a share appears to be the same in India as it is in England see Jaggut Chandra Dutt v Radha Nath Dhur (6)

Opinion

Maung Ba, J.— The following question has been referred to a Full Bench :

"Whether a deed of gift executed by a husband, without his wife's consent with reference to lands, forming part of the joint property of the marriage is valid to the extent of his interest in the property or is wholly void."

This reference arose out of a suit brought by a Burmese Buddhist wife against her husband for the cancellation of two deeds of gift whereby the latter had given away valuable lands forming part of their joint property to a servant girl, who had become his lesser wife The old gentleman is Myothugyi at Monywa and the recipient of double decorations, K. I. H. and A. T. M. He is now 77, while his wife is 82, and they have been married nearly 60 years. The girl was the daughter of their syce and was employed in the house as a cook, Some years ago, improper intimacy between her and the old thugyi started and the thugyi's wife drove her out of the house. That measure failed to stop the intrigue. The thugyi bought a small house and went and lived there with the girl and some time later made these gifts to her.

The suit was decreed, and it has been contended that at least the gifts should be held good to the extent of the old thugyi's share and interest. The ruling in Ma Shwe U v. Ma Kyu (2) if it can be considered as still good law, would support that argument. There it was held that though a Burmese Buddhist husband cannot sell or alienate the hnapazone of himself and his wife without her consent or against her will, yet such a sale constitutes a valid transfer of the share of the husband or wife, which is partible even during the subsistence of marriage and is therefore saleable in execution of a decree. This view was dissented from in the later case of Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpaw (4) where it was held that at Burmese Buddist

Law, a Burmese Buddhist husband and wife are partners and all the property of the marriage, whether payin or lettetpwa is impartible and indeterminate so long as marriage subsists and is therefore not saleable in execution of a decree. This decision was based upon the principles laid down in the Full Bench case of Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpaw (4) where it was held that 'at Burmese Buddhist law, a Burmese Buddhist husband and wife are partners and all the property of the marriage, whether payin or lettetpwa is partnership property, that neither partner is entitled to separate possession of any share of the parnership property or of the profits of the partnership until the partnership is dissolved by the death of one partner or by divorce

The learned Judge who made this reference was, however, of opinion that the ruling in Ma Shue U v Ma Kyu (2) had not been expressly dissented from by the Full Bench and that the correctness of the decision in the latter case of Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpaw (4) was open to grave doubt With great respect to that learned Judge, I venture to think that the Full Bench has overruled the ruling in Ma Shwe U's case (2) Heald, J. made a reference to that Full Bench because he considered the ruling in Ma Shwe U's case (2) to be incorrect In the course of his order of reference he observed:

"Most of the cases mentioned above were considered by a Full Bench of the Chief Court in the case of Ma Shwe U v. Ma Kyu (2) where it was held a Burmese Buddhist husband cannot sell or alienate the hnapazone (attetpa) property of himself and his wife without the consent of the wife, express or implied, or against her will, but that a sale by a Burmese Buddhist husband of such property without the consent of his wife constitutes a valid sale of his share and interest in the property sold. These two findings seem to be inconsistent and with all respect I venture to suggest that the latter part of this decision was mistaken."

In my judgment in the Full Bench case it is true that I did not quote Ma Shwe U's case (2) but I quoted an earlier case, viz. Maung Po Sein v. Ma Pwa (7) which had enunciated a similar principle. In the course of my judgment I observed:

"Where one of the Buddhist couple dealt with the joint property singly it has been held that, in the absence of express or implied consent of the other party, the alienation is not wholly void but is still valid so far as the alienator's share is concerned. Such a decision is to be found in Maung Po Sein v. Ma Pwa (7) decided by the learned Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma in 1897, .. That property is lettetpwa and he has not been able to cite any authority from any of the Dhammathats for that view. He has evidently overlooked the main principle of Burmese Buddist Law, that while marriage subsists neither husband nor wife is entitled to alienate or claim separate possession of any property of the marriage.

I have also observed:

"If either husband or wife can dispose of his or her share without the consent of the other, it will no doubt undermine the foundation upon which joint property system of Burmese Buddhist couple has grown up."

Chari, J, in the course of his judgment observed

"It is settled law that no partner can alienate even his own interst in any individual partnership property. This follows from the liability of the whole of the partnership property for the partnership debts. Similarly, in the case of a Burmese Buddhist couple it is not open to either the husband or the wife to alienate his or her own interest in any particular property. To allow him or her to do so will be to throw the burden of the joint debts on to the party who has not disposed of his interest."

I think the above extracts would suffice to show that the previous law in Ma Shwe U's case (2) that a Burmese Buddhist husband or wife can alienate his or her own interest on their joint property without the consent of the other has as a matter of fact been overruled This may dispose of the reference. However, I should like to note that the partnership under the Burmese Buddhist Law is not exactly the same as an ordinary partnership founded upon contract. In the case of an ordinary partnership the assignment of a partner's share without the consent of the other partners brings about immediate dissolution. It cannot for a moment be conceded that such a consequence must follow if a Burmese Buddhist husband or wife, without the consent of the other assigns his or her share in joint property. The partnership under Burmese Buddhist law terminates only on the death of a partner or on divorce. Again under ordinary partnership law, the assignment is not wholly inoperative, but when dissolution results upon assignment without consent, the assignee has a right to sue not as a partner but as an assignee for an account and also for a distinct share. It has therefore been urged that in the case of a partnership under Buddhist law why should not such a right be suspended till dissolution takes place and why should not the assignment be held good for that purpose. In my opinion it would be extremely dangerous and also against public policy to make such a concession. There would be great temptation to the third party to try and bring about death or divorce as the case might be. Besides the assignment of such a nature appears to be obnoxious to the provisions of Cl. (b), S 6, T. P. Act, which says that the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy on the death of a kinsman or any other mere possibility of a like nature cannot be transferred.

For these reasons my answer to the question referred will be :

"A deed of gift executed by a Burmese Buddhist husband without the wife's consent, with reference to lands forming part of the joint property of the marriage is wholly void."

Rutledge, C J. — I will like to add one thing to the judgment of my brother Maung Ba, with whom I am in full agreement, so that it may not be misinterpreted to require in all cases, the consent of the other party in express terms to be proved. As was observed in Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpaw (4) at p. 334 of 5 Rang.

"the partnership assets are liable in respect of all partnership debts and either partner can bind his co-partner in respect of any contract or agreement necessary for or usually done in connexion with such a partnership."

In the transactions before us it cannot be suggested that they were in the interest of the partnership

I agree that the case of Ma Shwe U v. Ma Kyu (2) has in fact been overruled by Ma Paing's case above mentioned.

Brown, J. — I agree that, in view of the decision of the Full Bench and the general principles approved in Ma Paing's case (4) the answer to the question referred must be that the deeds of gift are wholly void. The principles accepted in Ma Paing's case as I understand them, are that during the subsistence of the marriage, a Burmese Buddhist husband and wife have a joint interest in the whole estate of the marriage, but that neither party has a separate interest in any part of the estate. Whilst therefore in the present case the husband has a joint interest with his wife in the whole of the property of the marriage he has no separate interest in the particular part of the estate which he has attempted to transfer by way of gifts. To say that the gifts are valid to the extent of his share is meaningless, because that share is incapable of valuation. He has no definite claim to these particular pieces of properties, and on division he might not obtain any of these properties as his share. The property remains liable to all partnership debts. Even though the whole estate becomes his on the death of his wife, the particular property still remains liable for the debts of the partnership, and there is no guarantee that even in that eventuality he will obtain any rights in the properties. The analogy of the assignment of a share in a partnership by a partner under the ordinary partnership law does not seem to me sound What a partner assigns is not his share in a definite portion of the partnership property, but his share or a part of his share in the whole partnership. It is obvious that the consent of the wife cannnot be implied to the gifts in the present case. In fact it is clear that the gifts were against her wishes and that they were not made in the interests of or on behalf of the partnership I therefore agree in the answer proposed.

Heald, J. — I am of opinion that on the basis of the decision of the Full Bench in Ma Paing's case (4) we are bound to hold that the gift in this case, which was a gift of the property of the marriage made by the husband to a "lesser wife" or mistress without the consent and against the will of the wife was invalid.

It must be admitted that this decision is not in accordance with a passage in Book VIII, S. 3 of the Manugye. That passage says :

"If the husband without the knowledge of his wife made a gift of property which belongs to both he and his wife, and the person to whom the property is given be not the wife or lesser wife or a bought woman or a mistress, the person who receives the gift shall keep it according as it is given. The wife shall not say. "It is the property of both. I do not know of the gift. "The reason for this rule is that the husband is lord of the wife. But if the gift is given with the intention of making the person to whom it is given a lesser wife, a bought woman, or a mistress, then when the wife comes to know of the gift, if in fact it was made without the wife's knowledge half of the property given shall be restored to the wife. As for the other half, it is the share belonging to the husband. If the gift is the gift of property which the wife brought to the marriage there is no right to give in any case whatever. The wife must have the whole of such property because she has to pay the debts which she brought to the marriage. But if the property which is given is property which the husband brought to marriage, the person to whom the property is given shall have the property according as it is given. The wife shall not have the right to say: "I did not know of the gift", because the husband has to pay the debts which he brought to the married. If the wife make a gift to a person, even a person who is not her paramour, without her husband's knowledge, she shall have no right to make the gift without her husband's knowledge. This is said of property which belongs equally to both. If the case arises between a married couple, who have been married before, and the wife without her husband's knowledge give property, which she brought to the marriage, to a person who is not her paramour, let her have the right to give it and let her husband not take it back. As for the penalty for a wife's giving without her husband's knowledge and without telling him, let the husband have the right to punish the wife. But even if the property given, if the property brought to the marriage by the wife, if the gift be to a paramour or to a person whom the husband suspects, let the wife not say: "It is property which I brought to the marriage. Since it is property given without knowledge of the husband, the wife has no right to give it. Let the husband get it all back."

It seems clear that the rules given in that passage belong to a period before the rights of the husband and wife in the property which the other brought to the marriage was recognized and since the section of Manugye in which these rules appear contains also rules for gifts to wives and children into slavery and gifts for lust, which apparently was not reprobated, if the woman to whom they were given were below the age of puberty or over the age of child bearing, it is clearly archaic and cannot be regarded as having force in the present state of civilisation. The adoption of the rules contained in that section regarding gifts by a husband would clearly defeat what we regard as a basic principle of the Burmese Buddhist Law namely that the property of the marriage of a Burmese Buddhist couple is impartible, except on death or divorce, since it would enable a husband by means of a gift of all the property of the marriage to his mistress to effect what was in fact a partition of the property as against the wife. Our judgment in Ma Paing's case (4) was an attempt to lay down the general principles of Burmese Buddhist law as to ownership of property by a Burmese husband and wife, now in force, and although there may be difficulty in applying the law to particular cases, e. g., to the cases of a fine inflicted on a husband for a criminal offence or damages given against a husband for a tort, or a husband's gambling losses or to cases where there are several wives, I see no difficulty in its application in the present case, and I have no hesitation in holding that the gift in this case should be regarded as invalid. Buddhist law does not of course apply to gifts as such, since gifts, as such, are not matters regarding succession, inheritance, marriage, or caste or any religious usage or institution and the particular gift in this case is certainly not such a matter It is not the gift as such that is invalid Its invalidity consists on the fact that the subject matter is something that the giver had no power to give. The defect is not in the gift itself, but in the capacity or title of the giver. We have held that a husband has no power to alienate property which is property of the marriage, without the wife's consent, express or implied, and in the present case no such consent can be imputed. I would therefore concur in the answer proposed to be given in respect of the question referred namely that the deeds of gift in question conveyed no title to the donee in respect of the property which they purported to convey

Rutledge, C J. and Brown, J.—The parties to this appeal are Burmese Buddhist monks. The appellant are trustees of the Thayettaw Kyaundaik in Rangoon, under a scheme settled by the late Chief Court of Lower Burma. They brought a suit for ejectment of the defendant from the Kyaundaik and for possession of the Hmanzin Kyaung. In para. 19 of their plaint they stated:

"that being religious property, the kyaung in suit has nas no market value, and the plaintiffs pay a Court-fee of Rs. 10.

This valuation was accepted by the officer whose duty was to see that the Court-fee was paid within the meaning of S. 5, Court-fees Act, and summons was issued to the respondent In the written statement the respondent stated that the Kyaung and its site were worth at least Rs. 15,000 and that Court-fee should have been paid on that amount.

It was finally agreed between the parties that, if Court-fees had to be paid on the value of the property, the value would be accepted as Rs. 5,000.

The learned trial Judge following a decision of the late Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma, held that Court-fees had to be paid ad volorem and the appellants have contested the correctness of this finding on this appeal.

As no difference arose in the trial Court, between the officer whose duty it was to see that any fee was paid and the plaintiff, the provisions of S. 5, Court-fees Act, do not apply and we therefore think that the learned trial Judge had jurisdiction to pass the order which he did.

The question raised is of some importance and has been the subject of conflicting judicial decisions. In the Upper Burma case, which was followed by the learned trial Judge [the case of Maung Meik v. U Kumara (1),] it was held

"that the provisions of S. 7 (v) (c) Court-fees Act apply to the valuation of religions land and that its value must be deemed to be the amount at which the Court estimates it with reference to the value of similar "non-religious" lands in the neighbourhood."

A contrary view was taken by Regg, J., in U Konma v. U Einda (2). The question of the valuation of a Hindu temple was considered by a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras in the case of Rajagopala Naidu v. Ramasubramania Ayyar (3). It was held that a temple had to be dealt with as a matter not otherwise provided for in Sch. 2, Art. 17, Court-fees Act. This decision had reference to temple only, there was no decision by the Full Bench on the question of religious land, nor does it necessarily follow from their decision that a Phongyi Kyaung, which is not a temple but a building used for the residence of monks has no market value. But it is a matter for consideration how far the principles approved in that case would apply to the present case.

The matter is of some importance, and in view of the conflicting authorities, we think it desirable that the question should be referred to the decision of a Full Bench.

We, therefore, refer the following question:

"In a suit for possession of a Phongyi Kyaung and its site, are Court-fees payable ad volorem on the market value of the Kyaung and the site or are they payable under Art. 17 (vi), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act."

Opinion

Rutledge, C. J.—The following reference has been made for decision of this Full Bench:

"In a suit for possession of a Phongyi Kyaung and its site, are Court-fees payable ad valorem on the market value of the Kyaung and the site or are they payable under Art. 17 (vi), Sch. 2. Court-fees Act ?"

The reference arose in the following circumstances: The appellants, the trustees of the Thayettan Kyaungdaik in Civil Regular No. 225 of 1927 (original side, High Court) sued the respondent to evict them from a Kyaung in the said Kyaungdaik, and paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10 under Art. 17, Cl. (vi), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act. The plaint was accepted by the Deputy Registrar so that no difference arose which could be referred under S 5 for the decision of the Taxing Officer. But the defendant challenged the adequacy of the Court-fee and alleged that the plaint ought to be stamped under S. 7 (v) (c) The trial Judge (Ormiston, J.), following a decision of Heald, J., (then Judicial Commissioner, Upper Burma) in Maung Meik v. U Ku-

(1) 3 U. B. R. 236.

(2) [1920] 13 Bur. L. T. 40=57 I. C. 953.

(3) A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 19=46 Mad. 782 (F.B).

mara (1) upheld the defendant's contention and the plaint accordingly had to be stamped on an ad volorem basis. Heald, J., in the last mentioned case observes:

"The present case is clearly a suit for possession of land. In such suits the plaint must be stamped according to the value of the subject matter, and where the subject-matter is land which pays no revenue and has produced no profits during the year next before the date of presenting the plaint, the value must be deemed to be the amount at which the Court shall estimate the land with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood. The learned advocate argues that no other land in the neighbourhood can be similar to religious land, and that therefore S. 7 cannot apply. I cannot accept this argument. The difference between the land in suit and other land in the neighbourhood is merely a difference of ownership and that difference is merely accidental and not essential."

I am unable to accept the learned Judge's reasoning on this point, which seems to offend the principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Manmatha Nath Mitter v. Secy. of State (4) In that case the claimants claimed compensation in respect of the subsoil of roadways which for a period of years had been dedicated to the public. Lord Hobhouse observes:

"By Ss. 13 and 24 (that is of the Land Acquisition Act) the market value of the land at the time of awarding compensation is to be taken into consideration. It is not suggested that there is any market value of these lands as roadways Mr. Graham argues that when compensation was awarded in this case, the roads had been broken up, and therefore the Subordinate Judge rightly valued the land as belonging absolutely to the plaintiffs free from the burden of the roads, and capable of being used for any purpose. In their Lordships' opinion that would be a very unreasonable construction of the Act . . . . . The time of awarding compensation must be construed as meaning the time of compensation, the time at which the right to compensation attaches. At that time these plots of lands were roadways, and the plaintiffs are claiming for a supposed loss of value which had no existence when the ownership of land was changed."

In other words the Court, in order to ascertain the market value has to take the land as it is, and not what it may become in future There is no question in the case before us, that the land has been dedicated to religious uses in perpetuity and so long as the Buddhist religion continues to be a religion of the Burmese people, is it imaginable that it would pass into secular ownership and so come under the operation of market value? By reason of its dedication at some indefinite period in the past to religious uses, it has, to use a phrase familiar in rating authorities, been "struck with sterility" to my mind, just as definitely as if a macadam road had been laid upon it and dedicated to public use.

In Civil Regular No. 299 of 1919, [U Konma v. U Einda (2)] not reported in authorized Law Reports, Rigg, J., observes:

"The property in dispute is a poggalika Kyaung, and the Phongyi to whom the dedication is made has a life-interest in the Kyaung entitling him to occupy as long as he remains a Phongyi, and entitling him also to put another Phongyi in possession of the Kyaung He is now, however, entitled to dispose of the Kyaung by sale or by mortgage or by gift to any layman It was held in Maung On Gaing v. U. Pandisa (5) that a gift made with a view to a future existence, whether Poggalika or Sangika always retains its religious character and cannot be claimed back for secular uses . . . . . If therefore the Kyaung cannot be transferred by a sale or by a mortgage or by a gift it is difficult to see in what way it can have any market value in the ordinary acceptance of that term."

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Rajagopala Naidu v Ramasubramania Ayyar (3), applying the principle laid down in Manmatha Nath Mitter's case (4) above referred to that things have to be taken as they stand at the time in determining the market value of the property held that a temple which is devoted absolutely and in perpetuity to religious purposes can have no market value. I am unable, for the purposes of the present case, to distinguish between the case of a Hindu temple and a Phongyi Kyaung. Both have been dedicated in perpetuity to religious uses and the Full Bench in the Madras case (4) refrained from deciding whether the Hindu temple was or was not a house. For these reasons I consider the decision in Naung Meik's case (1) erroneous, and would answer the reference that in the suit for possession of a Phongyi Kyaung and its site, Court-fees are payable under Art 17 (vi), Sch. 2, Court-fees Act.

Carr, Maung Ba and Mya Bu, JJ. — We concur

Brown, J.—I agree with the answer proposed. So far as the Phongyi Kyaung is concerned, this directly followed from the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Manmatha

(4) [1898] 25 Cal. 194=24 I. A. 177=1 C. W. N. 698 (P.C.).

Nath Mitter v. Secy. of State (4) If S. 7, Court-fees Act, could be applied the computation of value would under S 7 (v) have to be according to the market value of the Kyaung, and that cannot be estimated.

As regards the site, if the suit were governed by S 7, Court-fees Act, the Court-fees would under S 7 (v) (c) have to be computed at the value estimated with reference to the value of similar land in the neighbourhood. The test here is not the market value of the site in suit, but the market value of similar land in the neighbourhood The question then is whether the site of a Phongyi Kyaung can be considered as being similar to the other land in the neighbourhood of secular nature I agree with the learned Chief Justice that by virtue of its dedication to religious purposes the land must be held to have been " struck with sterility " so far as maket value is concerned, and that the difference between it and other land in the neighbourhood is not merely a difference of ownership It is therefore impossible to estimate the market value of the site for the purpose of S 7, Court-fees Act

Maung Paik San—Respondent.

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 113 of 1923, Decided on 2nd April 1929.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Inheritance.

Under the Burmese Buddhist Law a step-grandchild excludes a nephew from inheritance in respect of the estate of the step-grandmother and the fact that he had received from his step-grandmother the share of inheritance to which he became entitled on his grandfather's death does not debar him from being his step-grandmother's heir. 2 *U. Ba Thaung—for Appellant.

S. Ganguli—for Respondent.

Heald, J.—Respondent who was a nephew of Ma. Ngwe Bwin, deceased, and claims to be one of her heirs, applied for Letters of Administration in respect of her estate. He mentioned in his application that Ma Ngwe Bwin had left an elder sister, and a younger brother still surviving as well as a niece and another nephew Appellant a grandson of Ma Ngwe Bwin's husband Chit Tun, who predeceased her, opposed respondent's application for letters on the ground that he was Ma Ngwe Bwin's sole heir, but he did not himself apply for letters.

The lower Court held that respondent was the nearest relative of Ngwe Bwin, and appellant had no right or title to the estate and granted letters to respondent.

Appellant appeals on the ground that in Burmese Buddhist Law a step-grandchild excludes a nephew from inheritance in respect of the estate of the step-grandmother, and that therefore respondent, not being an heir was not entitled to letters.

Since Ma Gun Bon v. Mg Po Kywe (1) was decided over 30 years ago, it has been regarded as settled law, that step-children or step-grandchildren exclude collateral relatives as heirs of the step-grandparent, and this view of the law was affiirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maung Dwe v. Khoo Haung Sein (2) But it is contended in the present case that the fact that appellant made a claim against Ma Hnin Bwin, when his grandfather Chit Tun died debars him from being recognized as an heir of Ma Hnin Bwin. It is sought to found this contention on the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Ma Thaung v. Ma Than (3), but that was a case in which children who by reason of the death of their mother and in view of their father's remarriage had a right as against their father to claim a share of the property of the marriage of their parents and had exercised that right and received their share of the property, claimed again as against their step-mother on their father's death and the decision in that case is based on an express provision of the Buddhist Law which says that children who have claimed and taken their shares of inheritance from the surviving parent in that parent's remarriage cannot on the death of that parent claim from the step-parent a share in the property of the second marriage. It is contended that this decision establishes a general rule that acceptance of a share of inheritance is in every case a bar to a subsequent claim to inherit, but it seems to me clear that it does not establish any such rule, because what is a bar to a claim as against the step-parent to a share of inheritance as heir of the deceased parent is not necessarily a bar to a claim to inherit as heir of the step-parent himself.

A similar question to that which arises in the present case was considered by a Bench of this Court in the case of Po Saw v. Ma Gyi (4) where the question was whether step-children who have received from their step-mother the share of inheritance to which they became entitled as against her by reason of the death of their father are entitled, as against the step-mother's nephews to inherit the step-mother's estate, in a case where there are no children or descendants of children of the marriage of their father with the step-mother. That case is exactly similar to the present case, except that in this case the claimant is a step-grandchild instead of a step-child or step-children, a difference which in view of the decision in Ma Gun Bon's case (1) is immaterial The contention in that case was the same as that in the present case, namely, the fact that the claimants had already received a share of inheritance barred any subsequent claim to inheritance on their part, and it was supported by the same reference to the Privy Council case of Ma Thaung v Ma Than (3) but the Bench decided that the step-children excluded the nephews. I know of no subsequent ruling which throws any doubt on the decision of that case and in further consideration of question in this case, I see no reason to believe that that decision was mistaken. It follows that if appellant in this case received from Ma Ngwe Bwin a share of inheritance to which he became entitled on the death of his grandfather that fact would not debar him from being his step-grandmother's heir, and therefore it is necessary to consider whether or not in fact he did become entitled to a share as against his step-grandmother on the death of his grandfather. He admittedly claimed and received certain property from Ma Ngwe Bwin, and although if at that time, he had in fact no right of inheritance as against her, the transfer of that property would be rather of the nature of gift than a transfer of property to which he had a right of inheritance, nevertheless even if it was a transfer of inheritance, it would not debar him from being Ma Ngwe Bwin's heir and from claiming inheritance as such heir, and since he is such an heir and as such heir excludes respondent from inheritance, respondent cannot be an heir, and has no right to Letters of Administration.

I would therefore set aside the order of the lower Court granting Letters of Administration to respondent and would direct that the Letters issued to him be withdrawn, and cancelled

I would also direct respondent to bear appellant's costs throughout

Otter, J.—The respondent is the nephew of one Ma Ngwe Bwin deceased and, appellant is her step-grandson The former obtained Letters of Administration to Ma Ngwe Bwin's estate, and the latter appeals against that order

There is no dispute upon the facts and the question is purely as to the respective rights of the parties under the Burmese Buddhist Law The law upon the question under review may be regarded as settled and it is necessary to refer to 2 decisions where the facts were almost identical with those in the present case viz, Ma Gun Bon v Maung Po Kywe (1) Maung Dwe v Khoo Haung Shein (2). The latter case is a decision of the Privy Council and this Court is of course bound by it It may be convenient, however, to set out the head note in the first of these two cases, for down to the year 1923 where it was explicitly approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council that case was regarded as the leading authority upon the matter The facts were identical with those in the present case and the material portion of the head note are as follows :—

"Held after an examination of all the available texts of Buddhist Law on the subject that collateral blood relations or ascendants can succeed to an inheritance only when there are no possible heirs in the descending line ; that step-children are treated as entitled to some share of inheritance, like descendants by blood ; and that in the absence of natural descendants, step-descendants are classed as heirs entitled to succeed, the bond of blood yeilding to the more important consideration of having a descendant heir and representative."

Held further that :

"where there are no children, but only grandchildren surviving, the latter succeed on the same footing as children, although their parent had died without reaching the inheritance or obtaining a vested interest, the principle of Buddhist Law on this point apparently being that this rule is requisite only where a distinction has to be made between the claims of different classes of heirs, and its application unnecessary when the nearest heirs all stand in the same degree of relationship to the deceased owner of the estate to be divided."

In approving of this decision the Privy Council says at p. 33 of the report of Maung Dwe's case :

"Once it is determined, that step-children are descendants they necessarily oust collaterals, for by Buddhist Law the property never ascends as long as it can descend. The learned appeal Judge in this case says :

"The point of view of the Buddhist Law is undoubtedly based on the community of interest between husband and wife. So strong is the bond between them that, in the absence of natural children the husband's or wife's children, as the case may be, rank as the children of the step-parent in the matter of inheritance to the exclusion of collateral blood relations."

"Their Lordships agree with this statement."

One further point may briefly be referred to. The appellants are the step-grandchildren of the deceased Their natural grandfather Ko Chit Tun died before his wife Ma Ngwe Bwin. There was evidence that during the last illness of the latter there was a partition of Ko Chit Tun's properties and that the deceased made over 35/- "3 baskets of seedling sown land" to the appellant The latter admits this, but it is not clear whether all Ko Chit Tun's property was partitioned. It is said that some such partition took place, the appellant lost any right he may have had to inherit the property of Ma Ngwe Bwin.

The case of Ma Thaung v Ma Than (3) is relied on by the respondent. In that case the Privy Council (upon the authority of one Dhammathat) held that where after the death of the wife husband partitioned the property and marries again; the children by the former marriage cannot claim to inherit

The reasoning underlying this claim was that as upon a second marriage, which he was about to contract, all his property would become the joint family property of himself and his proposed wife, it was natural that the husband should provide for his then children during his lifetime. It is only necessary to say that even assuming there was a partition of all Ko Chi Tun's property, the facts of the present case are different. Ma Ngwe Bwin did not marry again, nor is there any evidence that she ever contemplated doing so. The evidence rather is that she was a sick woman. The fact that there may have been some sort of partition is immaterial. I am satisfied on the other hand that under the Burmese Buddhist Law the respondent was not an heir of Ma Ngwe Bwin.

The letters granted to him must be withdrawn and the order granting letters to him is set aside with costs both hear and below

I. E. Moolla and another—Appellants

v.

Official Liquidator—Respondent

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 57 of 1928, Decided on 4th December 1928, against order on the original side in Civil Misc. No. 78 of 1927.

Companies Act, S. 235—Unsuccessful appeal by directors in winding-up proceeding—No order as to costs — Still directors can claim reasonable costs bona fide incurred for company and are not to that extent bound to make up company's amount in their hands.

When an order winding up a company is made, the petitioner and the company will ordinarily have their costs out of the estate, and the mere fact that no order was passed while dismissing company's appeal by the Court as to the costs incurred by the company, is not by itself necessarily an obstacle in the way of reasonable claim put forward by the directors for money bona fide expended by them in the interests of the company especially when they are not asking any sum from Official Liquidator but only claiming set off out of the money in their hands. [P 140 C 1, 2]

N. M. Cowasjee—for Appellants.

Clark—for Official Liquidator.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of the liquidation proceedings of M E. Moolla & Sons, Ltd. An order was passed directing the winding up of the company under the Indian Companies Act on 21s

June 1927. The company appealed against this order and pending the hearing of the appeal asked for stay of the proceedings. At that time it appears that the directors of the company had in their hands a sum of something over a lakh of rupees belonging to the company. By consent an order was passed that the directors should pay over the sum of a lakh of rupees to the Official Liquidator and should give security for the payment of the balance of about eight thousand rupees, if the appeal failed, and the Court held that the company or its directors were not entitled to retain for use this sum for law costs in connexion with the liquidation. The appeal was subsequently dismissed and no orders were passed by the appellate Court as to the costs incurred by the company in the appeal. The total amount retained by the directors was Rs 9,158-0-9. The Official Liquidator called on the directors to refund this amount The directors claimed that they had spent the whole of the amount in expenses of litigation The Official Liquidator then applied to the Court for an order under S 235, Companies Act, calling upon the directors to refund the amount. The matter was heard ex parte so far as the directors were concerned and an order was passed directing them to refund. It is against this order that the present appeal is filed.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that in a case such as the present the company is entitled to its costs in the liquidation proceedings out of the estate, and we have been referred to the case of In re Humber Ironworks Co (1) It was there held that, when an order winding up a company is made, the petitioner and the company will ordinarily have their costs out of the estate. In his original order directing the company to be wound up the learned Judge of the trial Court passed orders directing that the costs of the advocates of the company would come out of the estate. No such order was passed by the appellate Court, and it is contended on behalf of the respondent that it is not open to the directors now to make any claim in this connexion We are not satisfied that this by itself is necessarily an obstacle in the way of the claim now put forward The directors are not now asking that the Official Liquidator should make over any sum out of the estate They are claiming that certain sums of money have been bona fide expended by them in the interests of the estate and that they are not liable to pay those sums to the estate. The matter was not considered by the appellate Court at all, and we think it was open to the Official Liquidator under the directions of the Court to allow the payments claimed, if satisfied that they were made bona fide in the interests of the company The company lost in appeal, and the appeal must therefore be held not in fact to have been in the interests of the company. But it is difficult to hold that the directors did not bona fide at the time believe that they were acting in the interests of the company and we are therefore of opinion that a reasonable amount might have been allowed to them for their costs. We are quite unable to hold that the claim made by them was a reasonable one The claim included sum of Rs 2,000 or over for each of no less than four different advocates, and we are unable to hold that so large an expenditure of money was justified We do not, however, think that the learned trial Judge should have rejected the claim of the directors in its entirety We think that the directors might reasonably have been allowed one set of costs as taxed by the Taxing Master We therefore set aside the order of the trial Judge, and direct that the directors shall be allowed to deduct from the amount payable by them their costs of appeal in Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No 127 of 1927, the costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master as between advocate and client. We pass no order as to the costs of this appeal.

RUTLEDGE, C. J., AND BROWN, J.

Official Assignee, Rangoon — Appellant

v.

R. M. P. V. M. Firm—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 222 of 1928, Decided on 4th January 1929, against judgment on original side in Civil Regular No. 478 of 1927.

Contract Act. S. 216—A mortgaging his Cinema theatre on a leasehold from G to C —Subsequent mortgage with power to sale in favour of G—A again mortgaging the property to E for one lac—C given management of Cinema with power to utilize profits in lieu of principal and interest—G selling the property in pursuance of his power of sale— C purchasing it and getting renewal of lease of Cinema site—C also getting assignment of E's mortgage of one lac for 15 thousand— A was held not entitled to benefit of purchase by C or of the assignment from E by him.

In June 1919 A took a lease of certain land from G for ten years and built a Cinema Theatre. In September 1922 A mortgaged the Cinema to G for Rs. 45,000 out of which Rs. 15,000 were the balance due on a mortgage of January 1921. This Cinema, however, with other property was already mortgaged in June 1922 to C. In April 1923 A executed a further mortgage for one lac to one E, the property mortgaged being the one mortgaged to C and some other property. In September 1923 A under a deed handed over the management of the Cinema to C with power to utilize the profits for payment of principal,and interest due to him G then served notice on A to pay up the amount under his mortgage of September 1922 failing which he threatened to exercise his power of sale under the mortgage. The property was accordingly sold and purchased by C in June 1924. C in July 1924 obtained a new lease of the Cinema site for 16 years. In the same month C also got an assignment of the mortgage of one lac in favour of E for a sum of Rs. 15,000 only. A brought a suit claiming that C should be treated as his agent and that as such A was entitled to the benefit of the purchase of the Cinema and the subsequent lease and of the assignment of his mortgage by E.

Held: that C's possession as mortgagee did not give him any peculiar means or facilities for making the purchase of the property brought to sale under a subsequent mortgage with which he had nothing whatever to do. In making the purchase C was in no way acting or purporting to act under his power as agent. The sale was effected not by A and not by C but by G who had acquired this power of sale long before C had been appointed agent. The principles of S. 216 did not apply to the case and A could not claim the advantages of the sale on behalf of the estate of A. C was also entitled to the full benefit of its purchase from G of the debt due to him. The general rule being that if one person buys the debts of another for less than their face value, he is entitled to claim for the whole debt.

Judgment.—The appellant the Official Assignee brought a suit against the respondents, the R. M. P. V. M. Chettyar Firm, for a declaration that the insolvent's estate which the appellant represents is entitled to the benefit of certain transactions entered into by the defendants The insolvent is one Ahmed Ismail Hashim Atchia On 1st June 1919 he took a lease of certain land from the Goolam Ariff Estate Coy., Ltd, for a term of ten years, one condition in the lease being that he should erect thereon a substantial building costing not less than Rs. 50,000 to 75,000 Atchia erected buildings on the land at a cost of Rs. 1,31,000 and used the same for the purposes of a cinema known as "The Royal Cinema." In January 1921 Atchia mortgaged the Royal Cinema and his interests under the lease to the company for the sum of Rs 60,000. He subsequently repaid Rs 45,000 of this debt, but on 9th September 1922 he executed a further mortgage for the balance of Rs 15,000 due on the earlier mortgage and for a further sum of Rs 30,000. Meanwhile on 13th June 1922 Atchia had executed a mortgage in favour of the Chettyar Firm The property then mortgaged included the Royal Cinema, which had been previously mortgaged to the Company, and also the Cinema de Paris, another property of Atchia's

On 20th April 1923 Atchia executed a further mortgage for Rs. 1,00,000. This mortgage was in favour of his brother-in-law, Ebrahim Ismail Ghanchee and included the Royal Cinema, the Cinema de Paris and other assets of the film agency business and a printing press On 27th September 1923 Atchia executed a deed whereby he handed over the management of the Royal Cinema to the Chettyar Firm Ghanchee was a party to this deed. The Chettyar Firm was empowered to utilize the profits, first for the payment of interest due to them by Atchia, and secondly for payment of the principal sum due It gave the Chettyar Firm a general power to collect moneys due to Atchia and in the event of the bioscope shows not being profitable it gave the Chettyar Firm power to sell the same On the same date a deed was executed whereby Ghanchee agreed to treat the Chettyar Firm as co-mortgagees on his mortgage for Rs. 1,00,000 to secure Rs. 50,000 of the sum of Rs 70,000 due by Atchia to the Firm on unsecured debts. Atchia then left Rangoon about December 1923 for the Andaman Islands and save for one short interval did not return until July 1924

The management of the Royal Cinema was left entirely in the hands of the Firm. Before Atchia left for the Andamans he received a notice from the Goolam Ariff Estate Company calling upon him to pay up the principal sum of Rs. 45,000 due on the mortgage of 9th September 1922, failing payment of which the company would take steps to recover the amount. Atchia asked for further time but this was refused, the company stating that unless the money was paid they would take immediate steps to realize their securities. The company appear to have taken no further steps until about May 1924 when they advertised the properties for sale under the power given in their mortgage-deed of September 1922.

The Chettyar Firm advised Atchia both by letter and by telegram that the company were pressing for their money, urging him to come to Rangoon at once, or if that were impossible to empower some one to act on his behalf. Atchia did not come to Rangoon till the beginning of July or empower any one to act for him. In the meantime the Royal Cinema was sold by auction under the power of sale in the mortgage-deed on 21st June 1924 and purchased by the defendant firm for Rs. 65,000. Rs. 45,000 of this sum was paid to the company in settlement of their debts, and the balance after allowing for the costs of the sale was utilized towards the mortgage debt due to the Chettyar Firm.

On 17th July the Chettyar Firm obtained a new lease of the site of the Royal Cinema for a period of 16 years from the Company, and on 25th July they leased the Cinema to Madan Theatres, Ltd., at a monthly rental of Rs. 2,150. Meanwhile on 2nd July 1924 Ghanchee assigned to the defendant firm the whole of the debt of Rs. 1,00,000 due to him on his mortgage-deed for the sum of Rs. 15,000.

The plaintiff claims that in these circumstances the Chettyar Firm must be treated as Atchia's agents and that Atchia is entitled to the benefit both of the purchase of the Royal Cinema and of the assignment of his mortgage by Ghanchee. The claim is based in part on the fact that the Chettyar Firm were mortgagees in possession and in part on the fact that they were the agents of Atchia. The learned trial Judge held that the plaintiff had not established his case, and except with regard to a sum of Rs. 2,500 given by Atchia as a deposit on taking the lease from the Goolam Ariff Estate Co. in 1919 as to which there was no real dispute, he has dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has now appealed against his decision.

We have been referred to a number of English cases in which the acts of mortgagees in possession or of agents have been held to have been performed on behalf of their principal and to be acts for the benefit of which they were bound to account to their mortgagor or principal In the case of Hobday v. Peters (1), a solicitor's clerk had been giving a client his advice and with the help of the knowledge obtained by him in connexion with this advice he purchased the mortgage granted by the client for less than half the amount. It was held with regard to this purchase that he was a trustee for the benefit for the mortgagor. In the case of White v. City of London Brewery Co. (2), the mortgagees in possession of a public house let the premises with a restriction that the tenant should take beer of their brewing and none other. It was held that they must account for such additional rent as might have been got if the premises had been let without restriction. In the case of Rajah Kishendatt Ram v. Rajah Mumtaz Ali Khan (3), the mortgagee had purchased after his mortgage certain encumbrances on the property mortgaged. It was held in the circumstances of that case that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem the whole estate on paying the original mortgage money plus the money used for the purchase of the encumbrances. The circumstances of that case were somewhat peculiar and not analogous to those of the case now before us The principle followed appears to have been that ,in that case the mortgagee by virtue of his possession had acquired a peculiar means of making the purchase, and in the course of their judgment their Lordships referred to cases in which purchases made by the mortgagee in possession might not be held to be advantageous to the mortgagor. On p 153 of their judgment they remark:

"In such cases the mortgagee can hardly be said to have derived from his mortgagor any peculiar means or facilities for making the purchase which would not be possessed by a stranger, and may therefore be held entitled, equally with a stranger, to make it for his own benefit."

In the case of Mollet v. Robinson (4), Willes, J., remarks at p. 655 of the judgment:

"It is an axiom of the law of principal and agent that a broker employed to sell cannot himself become the buyer, nor can a broker employed to buy become himself the seller, without distinct notice to the principal."

This general rule was approved in the case of Bentley v Craven (5). At p. 30 the Master of the Rolls remarked with regard to this rule:

"It is founded on this principle, that an agent will not be allowed to place himself in a situation which, under ordinary circumstances, would tempt a man to do that which is not the best for his principal, and it is the plain duty of every agent to do the best he can for his principal."

In the case of Dally v. Wonham (6) the purchase by an agent for inadequate price was set aside In that case the purchaser resided on the spot and was fully acquainted with the value of the property, whereas the vendor lived at a distance and had not seen the property for 20 years In the case of Hesse v. Briant (7), specific performance was refused of an agreement entered into to sell a property between two persons, where the same solicitor acted for both parties. In the case of Barker v. Harrison (8), an agent who had purchased lands of his principal, and who, previously to contract, had entered into a secret negotiation for a resale of part of the property at a profit, was declared a trustee for his principal to the extent of that profit.

None of these cases seems to us to be very similar to the case which we have to decide. The Chettyar Firm were in possession of the property which they purchased as mortgagees. But it seems to us impossible to hold that their possession as mortgagees gave them any peculiar means or facilities for making the purchase of the property brought to sale under a subsequent mortgage with which they had nothing whatever to do. They had, it is true, special means of knowing the nature of the property, but it does not appear that there were encumbrances on the property which any stranger with due diligence and due searching at the Registration Office might not have known. In informing Atchia of the intention of the Goolam Ariff Estate Company the Chettyar Firm said nothing whatever about the sale of the property under the power of sale in the mortgage-deed. But they did quite clearly urge Atchia to come to Rangoon without delay, and before he left for the Andamans Atchia had received full notice that the company were likely to exercise their power The sale of the property took place at a public auction, and presumably if the Chettyar Firm had not purchased it would have been purchased by somebody else at a still lower price.

The deed by which the company executed the conveyance in favour of the Chettyar Firm is a somewhat curious one. The sale was under the power of sale in the mortgage-deed subsequent to the date of the Chettyar's mortgage. Quite clearly, therefore, the sale could not affect the Chettyar's mortgage in any way and what was in fact sold was the equity of redemption of this mortgage from the Chettyar. Nevertheless the sale-deed says that Rs 20,000 should be utilized towards the settlement of this mortgage. Be that as it may, we do not think it can be held that in making the purchase under the power of sale the Chettyar Firm were making an unfair and special use of the knowledge acquired by them as mortgagees in possession. In actual fact they purchased only the equity of redemption of their own mortgage amounting to Rs. 50,000 and Rs. 65,000 was not so inadequate a price as it might at first sight appear The deed giving management of the Cinema to the Chettyar Firm not only put them as mortgagees in possession, but also empowered them as agents It gave them power in certain circumstances to sell the property. But we do not think that the cases cited to us are authorities for the contention that in these circumstances a sale by them must be held to have been for the benefit of their principal. The sales in all the cases cited were sales by or to the agent when he was clearly exercising the power of his agency. In the present case it is perfectly clear that on making the purchase the Chettyar Firm was in no way acting or purporting to act under their power as agents. The sale was effected not by Atchia and not by the Chettyar Firm, but by the Goolam Ariff Estate Company which had acquired this power of sale long before the Chettyar Firm had been appointed agents.

The principles of the English law on this subject are incorporated in Ss 215 and 216, Contract Act. S 216 lays down that if an agent, without the knowledge of his principal, deals in the business of the agency on his own account instead of on account of his principal, the principal is entitled to claim from the agent any benefit which may have resulted to him from the transaction It seems to us impossible in the present case to hold that the Chettyar Firm in purchasing at a sale held under the power given to the Goolam Ariff Estate Company long before the firm became the agent was dealing in the business of the agency at all As agents they had no power either to make the sale under the power in the mortgage-deed or to stop it. It seems to us, therefore, that the principles of this section do not apply to the present case and that the appellant cannot claim the advantages of the sale on behalf of the estate of Atchia Nor can we see sufficient reason for holding that the Chettyar Firm is not entitled to the full benefit of its purchase from Ghanchee of the debt due to him. It is true that the Chettyar Firm was in a fiduciary position in regard to a part of the property to which the mortgage for Rs 1,00,000 referred But it does not seem to us that in purchasing this debt the Firm made any special use of the knowledge obtained thereon in such capacity. The general rule undoubtedly is that if one person buys the debts of another for less than their face value, he is entitled to claim for the whole debt. We are unable to see any sufficient circumstance in the present case to bring it outside the ordinary rule.

There are undoubtedly in this case many circumstances which strongly suggest collusion between the Chettyar Firm and the Goolam Ariff Estate Company. But, as pointed out by the learned trial Judge, there is no reference to collusion in the plaint, and we are not prepared in the circumstances to differ from his view that collusion is not established. The trial Court whilst dismissing the main part of the plaintiff's claim passed a decree in his favour for the sum of Rs 2,400 This was the sum originally deposited with the Goolam Ariff Estate Company by Atchia when taking out his original lease in 1919. By taking a fresh lease in their favour the Chettyar Firm obtained the advantage of this deposit and they are admittedly bound to account to the Official Assignee for this sum. No complaint can, therefore, be made as to the decree of the trial Court in favour of the plaintiff for this sum. The defendants, however, have filed a cross-objection on the matter of costs The trial Judge directed that the parties should respectively pay their own costs on the ground that the plaintiff had succeeded in part and failed in part. On this point it is urged that the amount of Rs. 2,400 for which a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff was a small sum compared with the Rs 20,000 at which he valued his main claim ; and further that there never really was any dispute as regards this Rs. 2,400 and that, therefore, no litigation with regard to it was ever necessary There is some force in this contention ; but we are nevertheless not satisfied that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the discretion of the trial Court in the matter of costs We have held that the Official Assignee has not established the main part of his case. But the actions of the Chettyar Firm in dealing with the property and the debts have been of such a nature as necessarily to arouse doubt and suspicion in the mind of the Official Assignee, and we are of opinion that the Chettyar Firm must be held largely responsible for the bringing of this action The result is that we dismiss both the appeal and the cross-objection with costs.

Judgment.—The case raises a somewhat interesting point The matter comes before the Court by way of an appeal from a judgment and decree of the District Court of Prome Mr. Rafi, however, on behalf of the appellant agrees that no appeal lies to this Court for it is a small cause matter of the value of less than 500. He asked me, however, to treat the case as arising by way of revision and in the circumstances, I may do so. In this connexion I would point out that the course should only be taken in exceptional circumstances and where it is apparent that injustice might be done by refusing. The facts are simple. The applicant is a licensed pawn shop keeper and with him was deposited certain jewellery by the respondent. A pawn ticket was issued to which reference must later be made. Subsequently a robbery took place at the pawn shop and the property deposited together with other articles was stolen. The pawn ticket in question upon which appears the thumb impression of the respondent contains a clause exempting the pawn shop keeper from liability in the event of destruction of the property by the "five kinds of enemies, insects and mice." At the foot of the ticket appears a note :

"The following is regarded as acts of providence : destruction of vermin, rats, water, fire or robbery or theft."

There is no dispute between the parties that the respondent is prima facie bound by the terms of the pawn ticket and also that the contract purported to exempt the pawn shop keeper from liability in the case of robbery or theft. The respondent brought a suit in the Township Court of Paungde claiming the property or its value. The learned Township Judge decreed the suit in his favour being of opinion that the applicant was not protected by the terms of the contract. He took the view that bailees such as the applicant are protected only by Ss. 151 and 152, Contract Act, 1872, and that the liability therein provided for cannot be avoided by any special contract between the parties It should be stated that this question was clearly raised upon the pleadings and there is no doubt that the point was both argued before and considered by the Judge of the Township Court On appeal, however, to the District Court of Prome, the learned Additional District Judge makes no mention at all of this matter. He deals only with the question from the point of view of the liability imposed by the sections of Indian Contract Act, to which I have just referred and agrees with the view taken by the Township Judge, which was that the applicant did not take the amount of care laid down in S. 151 of the Act, and dismissed the appeal. So far as I can see from his order, the learned Additional District Judge did not apply his mind to what was the real point in issue.

The first question, therefore, for me is whether in the circumstances the applicant may be said to have brought himself within the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C. It is suggested here that the learned Additional District Judge acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity in that he omitted to decide what was the real question in the case. It should be observed that the question of the present case is one of law.

From among the numerous cases decided in the various Courts of India upon the point three were cited before me. They are Venka Bai v Lakshman Venkoba (1), Zeya v Mi On Kra Zan (2) Kaliyaparama Padiyachi v. C. V. A. R. Chetty (3). The second of these cases was decided by a Bench of the late Chief Court of this province and it will be convenient for me to set out a portion of the head note which is as follows :

"After consideration of the ruling of the Privy Council in the light of subsequent decisions of the High Courts that where the lower Court has applied its mind to the case and duly considered the facts and the law applicable, then although its decision may be erroneous, the error cannot be corrected on revision, but that if the lower Court has failed to take into account some proposition of law or some material fact in evidence, it has acted illegally and its decision may be reversed."

A very large body of authority was examined by the learned Judges in this case and after this full consideration their decision is well summarized in the portion of the head note set out above. Accepting this statement of the law as correct it is evident that this is a case where this Court could exercise its power of revision. The question next arising is whether the applicant is protected from liability by the terms of the clause in the pawn ticket. Apart from the provisions of Ss. 151 and 152, Contract Act, no ground was suggested and I know of none why he is not in this position. S. 151 is as follows :

"In all cases of bailment the bailee is bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed."

And S. 152 provides :

"that the bailee in the absence of any special contract, is not responsible for the loss, destruction, or deterioration of the thing bailed, if he has taken the amount of care of it as in S. 151."

The suggestion before me was that the special contract referred to in the latter section can in law increase but cannot decrease, the amount of liability of a bailee. Upon the face of it the argument lacks conviction, for if such had been the intention of the legislature it would have been a simple matter to give expression to it. Mr. Maung Ni who appeared for the respondent relies on a Full Bench decision of Mahomed Rawthar v. The British India Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. (4). In that case a bill of lading containing a clause exempting the Steamship Co. from liability in certain circumstances was under consideration and one of the majority members of the Court was of opinion that the carriers in India cannot exempt themselves by express contract from liability. It is to be observed that this case may be distinguished from the present case upon the facts. I need not, however, deal further with this authority, for the matter has been the subject of decision by a Full Bench of the late Chief Court of this province in the case of B I S N. Co. Ltd. v Ali Bhai Mahomed (5), In that case the question was whether a common carrier by sea can by the law of India, contract himself out of liability for neglect, and it was held that he can It will be sufficient for the purposes of the present case to quote two passages from the judgment of the members of the Court. At p 299 of the report, Mr. Justice Robinson, as he then was said this :

"Lastly I am quite unable to agree that a bailee cannot limit his liability under S 152 of the Act. That he can do so by making a special contract was pointed out in Moothora Kant Shaw's case. S. 151 lays down the ordinary duty of a bailee in all cases of bailment and S. 152 enacts that that degree of care is to be exacted from him in the absence of a special contract. To read it otherwise than as allowing him to reduce his liability is to hold that the legislature enacted an unnecessary provision and to give a forced meaning to the language used.

At p. 306 Twomey, C. J , said :

"It is not clearly deducible from the terms of S. 152 that a bailee may only make a special contract increasing his responsibility, and that he cannot make a special contract reducing it. This is a proposition curtailing the ordinary right of freedom of contract and we must hesitate to give effect to such a proposition on the strength of a mere inference and in the absence of express enactment "

(5) [1920] 10 L. B. R. 292=62 I. C. 378 (F. B.).

. So far as I know the authority of the last mentioned case has not been questioned in this province It is agreed on all hands that the only question for me is whether as a matter of law, the applicant cannot avail himself of the protection provided for in the pawn ticket. I must hold, therefore, in view of the case I have just referred to and in view of what I think is the meaning of the sections of the Contract Act in discussion that he can. The application must, therefore, be allowed.

As I have already stated the matter came before me by way of appeal. I am of opinion therefore that although this application is successful, the applicant ought not to receive his costs in this Court The application must be allowed without costs in this Court but the respondent will pay the applicant his costs in the two lower Courts.

BAGULEY, J.

Emperor

v.

Maung Po Sein—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 351-B of 1928, Decided on 11th July 1928.

Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, S. 18 (1)—Scope—Burma Gambling Act, S. 17.

The Habitual Offenders Restriction Act does not apply to persons proceeded against under S. 17, Gambling Act A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 182 and A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 98, Rel. on. [P 147 C 2]

The facts are clear from the following report of the District Magistrate of Prome.

REPORT

Subject : — Validity of an order of restriction passed after prosecution under S. 17, Burma Gambling Act.

Under S. 438, Criminal P. C., I submit herewith Criminal Misc. No. 69 of 1926 of the Head Quarters Magistrate, Prome and Criminal Reg Trial No 121 of 1928 of the Township Magistrate, Thegon, for the orders of the Hon'ble Judges.

The facts are as follows :

On 1st March 1926 Nga Po Sein was prosecuted under S. 17, Burma Gambling Act in the Court of the Head Quarters Magistrate, Prome. An order under S. 7, Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act was finally passed on him, restricting his movements to a village tract in Padaung Township for a term of three years His restriction area has since been changed for reasons which are not on the record, but probably to give him a better opportunity to earn his own living.

In view of I. L. R 4 Rang 123 and 4 Rang. 455 it appears more than doubtful whether an order of restriction could legally be passed in a prosecution under S. 17, Burma Gambling Act, but the order did not evoke any comment at the time or when the ruling was published and there is no doubt that rightly or wrongly such orders were passed on several occasions in this district in 1926 and 1927, during a period when a large number of habitual thieves and other offenders were being dealt with under the preventive sections.

Nga Po Sein recently violated his restriction order and absented himself for nearly a month. He was prosecuted under S 18 (1) (a), Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, before the Township Magistrate, Thegon, who has reported the case for orders I am of opinion that the original order was ultra vires and will now have to be set aside and that no action can be taken against Nga Po Sein for his breach of the order It will also, in the event, be necessary to scrutinize the records of the large number of restricted offenders in the district to see if similar orders have been passed under S. 17, Burma Gambling Act. Nga Po Sein is on bail for the time being.

Judgment.—It has already been held in Emperor v. Kyaw Hla (1) that the Habitual Offenders Restriction Act does not apply to persons proceeded against under S. 3, Opium Law Amendment Act, and in Nga Pa v. Emperor (2) that it does not apply to persons proceeded against under S. 64-A, Burma Excise Act. There seems to be, as yet, no recorded case stating whether or not it applies to persons proceeded against under S. 17, Gambling Act.

In my opinion it does not. The wording of the relevant sections is, mutatis mutandis, exactly the same, and probably S. 17, Gambling Act, as the oldest of the three, is the one from which the other two were copied.

There is no need for me to pass any orders in this case. The District Magistrate has powers under the Habitual Offenders Restriction Act to vary or cancel any order passed under it As regards the case from the Court of the Township Magistrate, Thegon, which started this matter, it appears to be in suspense, no orders have been passed under it, and probably the simplest way of dealing with it would be for the learned District Magistrate to arrange with the Public Prosecutor to have it withdrawn. Let the records be returned.

HEALD, J.

Maung Pe Sein and others—Appellants.

v.

Ma Thin Mya—Respondent.

Special Second Appeal No. 391 of 1928, Decided on 3rd January 1929, against order of Dist. Court, Thaton, in Civil Misc Appeal No. 169 of 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 92—Order under—No second appeal lies—Provisions of S. 104, Civil P.C., are not affected by Burma Courts Act, S. 11.

The provisions of S. 11, Burma Courts Act, do not affect those of S. 104, Civil P. C., and no second appeal lies from an order setting aside sale under O. 21, R. 92. [P. 148 C 2]

Po Aye—for Appellants.

Judgment.—In Suit No. 106 of 1926, of the Township Court of Bilin the present respondent obtained a decree against Po Kyaw, now represented by the appellants, for partition and possession of a house and its site or for Rs. 650, as representing the value of her half share of the property.

In Execution Case No. 179 of 1926 of the same Court respondent applied for execution of that decree, and by consent the whole property was sold by Court auction, each party to be allowed to bid at the auction and the costs to be recovered from Po Kyaw's half share of the sale proceeds.

The property was brought in by respondent for Rs. 870.

Po Kyaw applied for the sale to be set aside under the provisions of O. 21, R. 89 on his paying into Court Rs. 870, the price paid for the property at the auction.

The Judge ordered that the sale should be set aside on Po Kyaw's depositing Rs. 43-8-0 as being five per cent. of the purchase money, together with Rs. 438, as being half the purchase money, only a half share of the property having in effect been sold, and Rs. 193-12-0 on account of costs. A sum of Rs. 672-4-0 was accordingly deposited by Po Kyaw and the sale was set aside.

Respondent appealed against the order setting aside the sale, and the lower appellate Court set aside that order.

Appellant comes to this Court in second appeal but it seems clear that no second appeal lies.

An appeal from an order under O. 21, R 92, lies under O. 43, R 1 (j), and under S. 104 (2) of the Code no further appeal lies from any order passed in such appeal. In my view the provisions of S 11, Burma Courts Act, do not affect those of S. 104 of the Code.

I, therefore, hold that the present appeal does not lie and I dismiss it.

Ma On Myaing—Appellant.

v.

Ma Me San—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 12 of 1928, Decided on 7th January 1929, against the judgment of the Dist. Court, Lower Chindwin, in Civil Regular No. 2 of 1927

Buddhist Law (Burmese) — Succession — Minor dying joint with his mother and sister — Mother inherits in preference to sister.

On the death of a minor Burmese Buddhist, living jointly with his parent (mother) and sister, a parent (mother) is not debarred from inheriting his son's property by the fact that his sister (and her daughter) is alive. The rights of his mother in respect of any property belonging to him would have stood upon a different footing from any such rights had he attained his majority and separated himself from the parental roof : *A. J. C. Day—for Appellant.

Ko Ko Gyi—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In this case the short facts are that in the year 1910-11 a man called U Tha Htu died leaving as descendants two grandchildren, who were then minors and of whom one is the plaintiff, and their mother, his daughter-in-law, Ma On Myaing the first and only defendant who need be considered.

The plaintiff claims the whole of her grandfather's property, her brother having died in 1921-22.

The defendant has all along been in possession of and looking after the property, and there was some suggestion that her claim was time barred. As, however, she is only twenty-three years of age now this cannot well be; and moreover, as the lower Court rightly held, defendant 1's possession has been adverse only since she refused to give up the property.

The other points taken in the lower Court were quite rightly not argued in this Court, for upon the facts that Court seems to have come to a correct decision, and indeed no such gift or promise on the part of U Tha Htu as was suggested could have the force of law.

It was said, however, that plaintiff must fail as to her brother's share in the inherited property; for as to that, by the Burmese Buddhist Law of Succession, since he was living with his mother at his death, the latter and not the plaintiff would inherit his share.

Reliance was placed upon three cases Maung Shwe Bo v Maung Pyo (1), Ma Po Hmon v. Maung Kan (2) and Ma Hnin Bwin v. U Shwe Gon (3), the last being a case decided by the Privy Council. It will be observed that the first two cases of these were decided apparently mainly upon the authority of Maung Chit Kywe v. Maung Pyo (4). In the first of these three cases, the following extract from Chit Kywe's case (4) was approved by the Court: see p. 527 of Maung Shwe's case:

" The Buddhist law is opposed to the ascent of inheritance, but when it cannot go by descent the inheritance is allowed to ascend, first to the father and mother, and failing them, to the first line of collaterals, and, in the absence of heirs in that degree, to the grandfather and grandmother and the next line of collaterals."

(2) [1897-1901] 2 U. B. R. 157.
(4) [1892-96] 2 U. B. R. 184.

Now, it is perfectly true that in the case of Ma Hnin Bwin v. U Shwe Gon (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council expressed themselves as not satisfied with the reasons apparently underlying the decision in Chit Kywe's case (4). Indeed, they expressed themselves as satisfied with the authoritative character of the Dhammathats and in particular they at p. 12 of the report, quoted with approval a dictum of the Manukye, which is as follows:

" The general rule is that relatives of previous generations shall not inherit the property of their descendants. But if a person dies leaving neither wife, children, brothers nor sisters his parents become his sole heirs."

The question in the case before the Committee was as to the respective rights of a sister on the one hand, and the father on the other, to the property of two deceased ladies who were respectively sisters and daughters of the rival claimants. These three ladies had lived apart from their father for many years, and it was, as we understand the case, for this reason that their Lordships of the Privy Council decided the matter at issue in their favour. At p. 4 of the report, their Lordships state:

" that the present case should not be held as dealing with or affecting parental rights in cases where the family continues to live together "

Their Lordships go on to lay stress on the important rights of parents in Burma so far as their children are concerned.

In the present case it is admitted that the two minors lived in the house of their mother up till the time of the death of the respondent's brother. Respondent herself also lived on under her mother's roof until her marriage some five years ago. The case therefore upon the facts is different from the Privy Council case. So far as we know there is no reported authority exactly upon the point.

An examination, however, of May Oung's " Leading Cases on Buddhist, Law," second edition, pp. 302—308, makes it clear that it was the view of the learned author that in such a case a parent would succeed to the estate of his or her child in preference to a brother or sister of that child. He says at p. 308:

" The exclusion of parents by brothers and sisters when the family have ceased to live together must be taken as an exception to the rules relating to nearness of relationship."

In this connexion it is evident that a mother stands in relationship nearer to her son than does her daughter by the same father We find, moreover, that the view contended for by the appellant receives the support of the learned author (U Tha Gywe) of "A Conflict of Authority in Buddhist Law." After a discussion of the matter he says, at p 326, that the rule laid down by thair Lordships of the Privy Council does not apply in a case where the family continues to live together. In support of his conclusion he cites the case of Ma Ein v. Tin Nga (5). In that case a Bench of the then Chief Court said:

"The ordinary rule of inheritance under the Buddhist Law is that the husband is sole heir to the wife and the wife sole heir to the husband, whether there be issue of the marriage or not. The texts cited above show that in certain cases the surviving parent of a childless son or daughter is allowed to share with the surviving wife or husband, while brothers and sisters do not come in at all"

It is true that the facts of this case and those dealt with by the text referred to were somewhat different from those in the present case. It appears to us, however, that the position is an analogous one; and although it is also true that the extract from the Dhammathats relied upon by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ma Hnin Bwin's case (3) is entirely unqualified as it stands, yet we feel bound to hold that upon the facts of the present case, a parent is not debarred from inheriting her son's property by the fact that his sister (and her daughter) is alive.

In this view we are strengthened by what appears to have been in the minds of their Lordships when dealing with the rights of children living apart from their parents It must be borne in mind that the respondent's brother was apparently a minor and certainly quite young at his death. The rights therefore, of his mother in respect of any property belonging to him, may well be said to stand upon a different footing from any such right had he attained his majority and separated himself from the parental roof.

It may be that, in some cases it would be difficult to decide whether such separation as would deprive a parent of interest had taken place. In the present case, however, it is clear there was no separation

In all the circumstances, therefore, we feel bound to hold that the appellant is entitled to a half share in the property in dispute

There was no dispute as to the identity of the property in suit. The decree of the lower Court must be modified, and a decree for a half only of the suit property substituted (with the exception of item No. 8) and for Rs 300 by way of mesne profits.

In view of the fact that the point upon which we have decided this appeal is an entirely new point and was not argued in the lower Court, we do not propose to award costs to the appellant.

The appeal is therefore allowed but without costs, and the order of the lower Court as to costs is confirmed

v

Maung Ba Win and others—Accused.

Criminal Revns. Nos. 1160-A to 1177-A of 1928, Decided on 12th December 1928, against orders of First and Second Addl Mag Moulmeingyun

Burma Vaccination Act (1 of 1909), Ss. 4 and 13—Child above six months—Parent refusing to allow child to be vaccinated—Conviction under S. 13 is unsustainable—Procedure must be followed as laid down in Vaccination Act (13 of 1880), Ss. 17, 18 and 22

In Burma Act I of 1909, S. 4 is the only provision under which vaccination of a child can be ordered and that section applies only if the child is under six months of age and has been exposed to infection. There is nothing in Burma Act 1 of 1909 to authorize any officer to require the parent of a child over six months of age to have it vaccinated. In such cases S. 9, Vaccination Act (13 of 1880), would apply and then the procedure prescribed in Ss 17, 18 and 22 must be followed. Conviction of a person under S. 13 (1), Burma Vaccination Act, for refusing to allow his child to be vaccinated cannot be sustained. [P 151 C 2]

Judgment. — One judgment will suffice to dispose of Criminal Revisions Nos. 1160-A to 1177-A inclusive. They are concerned, respectively, with Criminal Regular Trials Nos. 128, 134, 135, 129, 133, 130, 132, 148, 149, 150, 153, 155 and 157 of the First Additional Magistrate, Moulmeingyun, and Nos 75, 76, 84, 85 and 86 of the Second Additional Magistrate, Moulmeingyun. In all these cases the accused were prosecuted by a vaccinator of the name of Maung Han for an offence alleged to be under S. 13 (1), Burma Vaccination Law (Amendment) Act, 1 of 1909, and the accused have all been convicted of an offence under that section of that Act, and fines of Rs 2 have been inflicted in the cases of each of sixteen accused, Rs 3, in one case, and Rs 5 in the remaining case. The complaints filed by Maung Han were all on a printed form in Burmese. The form states that the complaint is laid under S. 13 (1), Burma Act 1 of 1909, and alleges that the accused without cause refused to allow his child to be vaccinated by the vaccinator. In some cases Maung Han laid complaints against both parents, in others against one parent only In one case No. 75 of the Second Additional Magistrate, Maung Han actually prosecuted both parents and also the child, aged four years of age The complaint against the child was exactly the same as that against her parents, namely, that she refused to allow her child to be vaccinated This child was actually summoned to appear before the Court as an accused. The attention of the Magistrate is called to S. 82, I P. C I am glad to note that the child was not convicted. Although in some cases Maung Han instituted proceedings against both parents, in every case the Magistrate was satisfied with inflicting punishment on one parent, and acquitted the other without giving any valid grounds for his acquittal.

The First Additional Magistrate in his cases stated particulars of the offence as follows :

" Without any reason refused to allow his child to be vaccinated when asked by the complainant vaccinator, and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 13 (1), Burma Vaccination Act. "

The Second Additional Magistrate in his cases stated particulars of offence as follows :

" That you ..... failed to submit your children to the vaccinator for vaccination when summoned, and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 13 (1) Burma Act 1 of 1909. "

With one exception all the accused pleaded guilty, but it is obvious that they were pleading guilty to the fact that they had refused to allow their children to be vaccinated, and not to an offence under S. 13 (1), Burma Act 1 of 1909.

It is quite obvious that the Magistrate never referred to S 13 (1), Burma Act 1 of 1909, before accepting these complaints and convicting the accused. S. 13 (1) in the plainest terms relates to the refusal of a person to be vaccinated himself, and has nothing whatever to do with the refusal of parents to allow their children to be vaccinated. The law relating to vaccination in Burma is contained in the Indian Vaccination Act, 13 of 1880, the Burma Vaccination Law (Amendment) Act, 1 of 1909, and S 49, Burma Rural Self-Government Act, 4 of 1921. The provisions of the two former Acts have, under S. 49 of the latter Act, been extended to the Myaungmya District by Department of Public Health Notifications Nos. 112 and 113, dated 10th September 1924.

In Burma Act 1 of 1909, S. 4 is the only provision under which vaccination of a child can be ordered and that section applies only if the child is under six months of age and has been exposed to infection It is not alleged, much less proved, in any of these cases that either of these conditions existed. There is nothing in Burma Act 1 of 1909 to authorize any officer to require the parent of a child over six months of age to have it vaccinated, and for such a provision it is necessary to turn to S. 9, Act 13 of 1880, which requires the parent or guardian of a child who has attained the age of six months to have it vaccinated. S 9, Act 13 of 1880, would therefore seem to apply in the present case. But the proper procedure to be adopted in enforcing S. 9 is laid down in Ss. 17 and 18 of that Act. Under S. 17 a notice must be served on the parent, requiring him to attend at a time and place to be specified in the notice to have the child vaccinated, and then under S. 18, if that notice is not complied with, the Superintendent of Vaccination must report the matter to a Magistrate duly appointed in that behalf, who shall summon the parent and demand his explanation, and if such explanation is not satisfactory, make an order directing the parent to comply with the notice before a date to be specified. It is only on the failure of the parent to obey the order of the Magistrate that he can be convicted of an offence, which offence will fall under S 22 of the Act. This procedure was not adopted in any of the present cases, and consequently the convictions are all unsustainable. The convictions in all these 18 cases are set aside, and the fines must be refunded to the accused.

It is not known from what source the vaccinator, Maung Han obtained the printed forms of complaint which he filed in these cases These printed forms do not set out any offence whatever under the Vaccination Law, and they are entirely illegal. The District Magistrate, Myaungmya, should take steps to see that complaints of this type are not in future received by any Magistrate in his district. It is obvious that in the present cases all these complaints ought to have been dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C. It is most deplorable that ignorant villagers should be harassed by illegal complaints of this kind made against them by public authorities

BROWN, J.

S. S. Somasundaram Chettyar — Applicant.

v.

Ma Shwe Thit and others — Respondents.

Civil Revn. No. 211 of 1928, Decided on 30th January 1929, against order of Sub-Divisional Court, Magwe, in Civil Misc. No. 7 of 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 59 — No enquiry as to decree-holder's right to execute decree can be made under R. 59.

It does not come within the scope of the enquiry under R. 59 to decide whether the attaching creditor had the right to execute the decree. The objectors should not be granted an order removing the attachment merely because the application in execution was time barred. [P 152 C 2, P 153 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act, Art. 182—Applications in execution need not necessarily be in writing—Time begins to run not from opening of execution proceedings but from applications or steps-in-aid of execution.

The opening of execution proceedings is not the same thing as the making of an application in execution, or the taking of some step-in-aid of execution and time begins to run not from the opening of execution proceedings but from the applications or steps-in-aid in execution. [P 153 C 2]

An application in execution was made on 25th January 1923, the second application was not made until 18th September 1926. But during the first execution proceedings on the 21st July and 3rd December applications were made for arrest of the judgment-debtor and attachment of his property the latter of which was granted but could not be effected.

Held : that the application dated 18th September 1926 was within time as further applications in execution which need not have been necessarily in writing were made, and that limitation was thereby saved : 10 L. B. R. 34, Rel. on. [P 153 C 1, 2]

Venketram—for Applicant.

Khin Maung Gyee—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The petitioner obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree attached certain property. The respondents, who were not parties to the decree, filed an application for removal of attachment, and one of the grounds taken by them was that the application for attachment was barred by limitation. The trial Court, without coming to any decision on the merits, held that this contention was correct and removed the attachment. The attaching creditor has now come to this Court in revision. Two main objections have been taken to the order passed by the trial Court. The first is that the respondents not being parties to the original decree were not entitled to question the right of the Chettyar Firm to attach under that decree, and the second objection is that the finding on the point of limitation is wrong.

The procedure to be followed when applications for removal of attachment are made is laid down in R. 58 and the following rules of O. 21, Civil P. C. Under R. 59:

"The claimant or objector must adduce evidence to show that at the date of the attachment he had some interest in, or was possessed of, the property attached;"

and under R. 61:

"Where the Court is satisfied that the property was, at the time it was attached, in the possession of the judgment debtor as his own property and not on account of any other person, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, the Court shall disallow the claim."

It does not come within the scope of the enquiry to decide whether the attaching creditor had the right to execute the decree, and there is considerable force in the contention that the respondents should not have been granted the order they asked for merely because the application in execution was time barred. But apart from this, it seems to me clear, on the face of the record, that the application in execution was not time barred at all. The trial Judge found that it was time barred because the first application in execution was made on 25th January 1923, and, according to him the second application was not made until 18th September 1926. He seems, however, entirely to have overlooked the fact that, although execution proceedings were opened on 25th January 1923, and no fresh proceedings were opened until September 1926, there were several applications made in the course of the earlier proceedings. The first attempt in those proceedings appears to have been infructuous.

On the 21st July a fresh application was made for arrest of the judgment-debtor. This arrest does not seem to have been effected, and on 26th November 1923, the diary of the proceedings shows that the decree-holder's advocate was heard as to whether the judgment-debtor should be arrested. On 3rd December 1923, the diary shows that the decree-holder again applied for arrest of the judgment-debtor and for attachment of certain property. The Judge refused to arrest the first judgment-debtor but issued a warrant of attachment against the property of the second judgment-debtor. On 26th January 1924, a sale proclamation was issued but the sale did not take place, as an application was made for removal of attachment.

Under the provisions of Art. 182 (5), Lim. Act, the period of three years runs: "where the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made, from the date of applying in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order."

This article does not prescribe that the application must of necessity be in writing.

On 3rd December 1923, the decree-holder applied for the arrest of defendant 1 and for attachment of the house of defendant 2. The application was considered on its merits and was actually granted as regards the second prayer. It seems to me that this is a sufficient application within the meaning of the article.

In the case of A. A. Adimuthu Pillai v. Adiappa (1), it was held:

"that, even where there is no actual application on the record, such an application may be presumed in cases where the order made in execution is of such a nature that the Court would not have made it except upon an application for that purpose."

In this case the record shows clearly that an application was made, and I am of opinion that limitation was thereby saved.

It is only in rare cases that this Court will interfere in revision with orders passed on applications made for removal of attachment. The applicant is ordinarily referred to the remedy provided for him by R. 63, O. 21, Civil P. C. But there are special circumstances here which justify a departure from the ordinary rule. The Court has refused to adjudicate on the claim as to whether the property was attachable under the provisions of O. 21, R. 58 and the following rules, and in coming to its decision on the point of limitation, the Court has not really considered the law that is applicable. It has entirely overlooked that the opening of execution proceedings is not the same thing as the making of an application in execution, or the taking of some step-in-aid of execution, and has erroneously refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law. The petitioner will in the circumstances be put to quite unjustifiable hardship if he is compelled to resort to a regular suit. He is, in fact, being denied his right to have the matter adjudicated on by the executing Court I, therefore, set aside the orders passed by the trial Court and direct that the application for removal of attachment be dealt with on its merits. The respondents will pay the costs of the petitioner in this Court.

U Maung Gyi—Appellant.

Maung On Bwin and another — Respondents

Special Second Appeal No 529 of 1928, Decided on 11th January 1929, against judgment of District Court, Amherst, in Civil Appeal No. 139-A of 1928.

Limitation Act, Arts. 142 and 144—In suit under Art. 142 burden of proof lies on plaintiff and in suit under Art. 144 it lies on defendants — Suit for possession of land—But defendants proved to be owner at one time—Plaintiff in possession for last 15 or 20 years—Plaintiff claiming that defendant obtained possession from him — Suit falls under Art. 142 and so if defendant's possession is not proved to be permissive, plaintiff must prove that he was in possession within twelve years of suit.

Ordinarily in a suit under Art. 142 the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff and in a suit under Art. 144 it lies on the defendants.

Where in a suit for possession of land what is proved is that the plaintiff was at one time the owner but that for the last 15 or 20 years the defendants have been in possession, and the plaintiff claims that they obtained possession from him, the suit is one under Art. 142 and if the plaintiff fails to prove the permissive nature of the occupation, the burden would lie on the plaintiff to show that he had been in possession within 12 years of bringing the suit. 16 Cal. 473, (P. C.), Rel. on. [P 154 C 2, P 155 C 1]

Eunoose—for Appellant

Kirkwood—for Respondents

Judgment. — The plaintiff-appellant sued the defendant-respondents for possession of a certain piece of land. The plaintiff's case was that the land originally belonged to him and that about ten years ago he allowed the defendants to occupy the land temporarily. The defendants denied the plaintiff's title and denied that they came into possession with his leave or license. They said that they entered on the land 21 years ago and that they had been in peaceful and uninterrupted possession ever since. It has been found as a fact that the plaintiff did acquire title to the land in the year 1894 by the purchase at a Court auction sale, but that the defendants had been in possession for 15 years or more before the suit was brought, and that the plaintiff has failed to show that they entered into possession with his permission. On these facts the District Court held that the burden of proving that the defendants' possession was permissive and not adverse rested on the plaintiff and that as the plaintiff had failed to discharge that burden the suit must fail. The plaintiff has appealed on the ground that the burden has been wrongly placed.

It is urged that the suit is under Art. 144, Lim. Act, and that under that article the burden is on the defendants to prove that their possession was adverse. Both the lower Courts have discussed a number of authorities on the question of burden of proof in such cases. Ordinarily in a suit under Art. 142 the burden of proof would lie on the plaintiff and in a suit under Art. 144 it would lie on the defendants. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that this is not a suit under Art. 142 because the plaintiff was never in possession. It seems to me, however, that this contention is contradicted by the plaintiff's evidence.

The plaintiff quite clearly says that the defendants requested him to allow them to occupy the land and that he gave them permission. That seems to me tantamount to a statement that it was the plaintiff who put the defendants in possession and that the plaintiff was at that time at least in constructive possession of the land. In fact according to the plaint his possession continued through the defendants until recently when they set up an adverse claim on their own behalf.

In the case of Mohima Chunder v. Mohesh Chunder (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council observe :

" This is in reality what in England would be called an action for ejectment and in all actions for ejectment where the defendants are admittedly in possession, and a fortiori where as in this particular case, they had been in possession for a great number of years, and under a claim of title, it lies upon the plaintiff to prove his own title. The plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title, and it is the opinion of their Lordships that in this case, the onus is thrown upon the plaintiffs to prove their possession prior to the time when they were admittedly dispossessed, and at some time within twelve years before the commencement of the suit, namely, for the two or three years prior to the year 1875 or 1874 and that it does not lie upon the defendants to show that in fact the plaintiffs were so dispossessed. "

If, in the present case, the plaintiff had proved the permissive occupation by the defendants, the burden would then clearly have rested on the defendants to show that they had acquired title by twelve years' adverse possession. But it has been found as a fact that the plaintiff has failed to prove this permissive occupation. All that has been proved is that the plaintiff was at one time the owner, but that for the last 15 or 20 years the defendants have been in possession and it seems to me that the plaintiff's claim is that the defendants obtained possession from him. That being so, the suit was a suit under Art. 142, and on his failing to prove the permissive nature of the occupation the plaintiff could not succeed without at first showing that he had been in possession within twelve years of bringing the suit. For these reasons I am of opinion that this case was rightly decided by the District Court and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—Throughout the hearing of this appeal it has been accepted as settled law that where a widower remarries his children by the first wife at once acquire a right to partition of the estate, and that the share of the children collectively is one half, while the father takes one half. That is the effect of the decision of a Bench of this Court in Maung Po Kin v. Maung Tun Yin (1) and we see no reason to question the correctness of that judgment in this respect It is true that in our former judgment, in this appeal we did not accept that judgment in its entirety but our doubt was only whether the eldest son as such is individually entitled to a fourth share even though he may not have attained the status of orasa. That question, as we said before, is not of practical importance in this case.

In our former judgment we assumed without discussing the question that the estate to be divided was the joint estate of the parents of the appellants, that is the estate as it was at the time of the death of the mother. The question now before us is whether it should not instead be held that the estate in which the children are entitled to share is the actual estate of the father at the time of his remarriage

We have been referred to a number of passages in the Dhammathats but after a careful consideration of these we are unable to find any very definite guidance in them. In no case does any Dhammathats say expressly what estate is to be divided and such indications as are to be found are in our opinion much too vague to form a safe foundation for any definite finding either way We think, therefore, that the question should be decided on considerations of equity having regard to such rules of law of inheritance as can definitely be laid down

In Ma Sein Tun v Ma Son (2), it was ruled by a Full Bench of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma that :

" Subject to any claim by the Orasa ....., a Burmese Buddhist widow has an absolute right of disposal of the whole of the joint property of herself and her late husband as against the children of their marriage."

The same rule of course is applicable to the widower This is now definitely settled law, but it is subject to the qualification that the rule applies only as long as the widow or widower does not remarry, and that on remarriage the children of the first marriage, become entitled to one half of the estate as laid down in Maung Po Kin's case (1).

(1) A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 211=4 Rang. 207.
(2) [1915] 8 L. B. R. 501 = 30 I. C. 588 = 8 Bur. L. T. 203.

On the analogy of the Privy Council judgment in Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (3), it must, we think be held that this right to partition vests in the children from the moment of remarriage of the parent.

Having regard to these rules, there seems to us to be a very strong case for holding that the estate to be divided is that existing at the time of the remarriage, that is, at the time of the vesting of the right to partition. The opposite view clearly brings the rules laid down in Ma Sein Tun's case (2) and Maung Po Kin's case (1) into conflict, for it is very possible that in the interval between the death of the first spouse and the remarriage the surving spouse may, in exercise of his absolute right of disposal have alienated some of the properties forming the joint estate of the first marriage. But such alienation must, we think, be held to be entirely valid and not contestable by the children of the first marriage. If, therefore, these children are bound by such alienation, it is also equitable that they should be entitled to share in any acquisition made by the surviving parent after the death of his first spouse and before his remarriage.

A case which is relied upon as supporting this view is Maung Po San v. Maung Po Thet (4) in which it was laid down that:

"What the Burmese Buddhist Law regards in its rules for partition is the family rather than individuals and so long as the family subsists all who are members of it are regarded as being entitled to partition on its dissolution. On the surviving parent's remarriage, either the old family might be regarded as continuing or a new family might be regarded as being instituted."

On this principle which we accept, the proper conception would be that on the death of one parent the surviving parent and the children remain one family and the property is family property although its management is vested in the parent and the children cannot claim partition. A stepparent introduced into the family is a disintegrating element, whose influence may be detrimental to the interests of the children, and for that reason the right of claiming partition on remarriage of the parent is given.

The Privy Council judgment in Ma Thaung v. Ma Than (5) lends support to this view. It lays down that where there has been a partition on the remarriage of the parent, the children have no further claim to inherit on the death of the parent. In other words, from the time of the partition the family is broken up, and the parent and the stepparent form a new family. This conception is further exemplified in the accepted rule that when there has been no partition on remarriage, the children of the first marriage are entitled to divide the estate with the stepparent on the death of their own parent, but that even then if they do not claim partition they have a further right to inherit on the death of the stepparent. Having regard to all these rules, we think that on equitable considerations the estate to be divided is the estate as it is at the time of remarriage of the surviving parent.

There seems to be no strong grounds for holding this view to be wrong. It is true that in Ma Sein Tun's case (2) the learned Judges speak of the "joint estate of the parents" are liable to partition, thus implying that it is the estate as it stood at the death of the first parent that is so liable But this does not appear to be a considered decision on the question now before us, which in fact did not arise in that case And in Maung Kyaw Za v U DeBi (6) in which one Judge remarked that the share of the children on remarriage of the surviving parent is confined to property in question in that case was property acquired during the second marriage. And this also was quite evidently not a considered decision of the question before us.

It has also been urged that what the children take on the remarriage of the surviving parent is merely their deceased parent's share in the hnapazone estate, and that, therefore, it is that hnapazone estate that is to be partitioned. We are not satisfied of the correctness of this proposition. If it were a question merely of the disposal of the interest of deceased parent, there seems to be no reason why the surviving parent should not receive a share. And there seems to be no reason, why on that basis the children should have no further right to a share on the death of the surviving parent. We think that the more correct view of the matter is that the family is broken up and that it is the family estate that is partitioned We hold, therefore, that when, after the death of one parent, the surviving parent remarries the children of the first marriage are entitled to partition of the estate held by the surviving parent at the time of remarriage, unless of course there has already been a partition between the surviving parent and the children.

On this view of the law it will be necessary to return the case for further evidence The issue framed in the District Court related to debts of Maung Kya Yin and his first wife Ma On, at the time of the latter's death. He must now ascertain what were Kya Yin's debts at the time of his marriage to Ma E Hwi The proceedings are returned to the District Court for a trial of and the finding on the fresh issue :

" What were Maung Kya Yin's debts at the time of his marriage to Ma E Hwi."

This issue should be tried and the finding returned without delay

Second Appeal No 122 of 1928, Decided on 23rd January 1929, against order of the Dist. Judge, Sagaing, in Civil Appeal No. 32 of 1928.

Civil P. C., S. 144—Decree-holder auction purchaser—Sale cannot stand if decree reversed or modified and judgment-debtor pays amount finally decreed.

Where the decree-holder himself is the auction-purchaser, the sale cannot stand, if the decree be subsequently set aside or modified because the purchase is subject to the final result of litigation between the parties. The judgment-debtor seeking to get rid of the sale should have relief only on condition that he paid up what was due under the ultimate decree and the decree-holder would have a charge on the property for the amount ultimately found due by the appellate Court on payment of which the judgment-debtor would be entitled under S. 144 to have the property restored to him on his depositing the decretal amount in Court: 27 Mad. 98, Rel. on. 27 Cal. 810 ; 10 All. 166 (P.C.), Ref.

Judgment.—Ma Ngwe Bon obtained a decree for Rs. 550, which was confirmed in the District Court, against Maung Ban Gyi. In execution of her decree she attached land belonging to the judgment-debtor, which was sold by Court auction on 8th January 1927, the purchaser being the decree-holder herself. The sale was confirmed on 8th February 1927. On 28th March following the High Court modified the decree and reduced the amount decreed to Rs. 110. The judgment-debtor paid Rs. 115 into Court and demanded to be placed in possession of his property under S 144, Civil P. C Both Courts held that there was no ground for setting asid the sale.

In Set Umedmal v Srinath Roy (1) a Bench of the Calcutta High Court pointed out that the Privy Council case of Zainul-ab-din Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (2), is clear authority for the proposition that where the decree-holder himself is the auction-purchaser, the sale cannot stand, if the decree be subsequently set aside. It is true that in the present instance the decree was not set aside, but only modified The principle, however, remains the same. The rule as laid down in Syed Nathadu Sahib v. Nallu Mudalay (3), covers cases in which the decree is modified as well as reversed.

It is, that in the case of decree-holders purchasing at execution sales the purchase is subject to the final result of the litigation between them and their judgment-debtors I have no doubt as to the correctness of this statement of the law on the subject. The object of the rule is explained as being, so far as it relates to judgment-creditors, to prevent the interests of judgment-debtor suffering by sales of their property before their liability is finally determined, and to avoid judgment-creditors profiting at the expense of their debtors by becoming purchasers in sales pending litigation by way of appeal.

It was pointed out further that in cases where the decree is not reversed but modified the view most favourable to a decree-holder purchaser in similar circumstances would be that deducible from the case of Baboo Gawree Boyjonath Pershad v. Jodha Singh (4) that a judgment-debtor seeking as plaintiff to get rid of the sale should have relief only on condition that he paid up what was due under the ultimate decree.

In other words the result would be that in the present instance the decree-holder would have a charge on the property for the amount ultimately found due by the High Court On this view the judgment-debtor was obviously entitled under S. 144 to have the land restored to him on his depositing the decretal amount in Court. There is no injustice to the decree-holder, who did not pay the purchase money into Court but set it off against the decree The appeal must be allowed, the orders of the District and Township Courts set aside, and the judgment-debtor given the relief sought with costs throughout. RUTLEDGE, C. J., AND BROWN, J,

C. T A. M. Chettyar Firm — Appellants.

Ko Yin Gyi and another — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 234 of 1925, Decided on 1st January 1929, against decree of Dist. Court, Tharrawaddy, in Civil Regular No. 24 of 1920.

Civil P. C., Ss. 151 and 152 — District Judge's decree by mistake making defendant against whom relief was not claimed, liable for decretal amount—On plaintiff's appeal High Court increasing decretal amount but not referring to question as to who were bound by decree—Defendant, wrongly made liable, applying for amendment of decree—As even in plaintiff's appeal High Court could have altered decree in favour of applicants under O. 41, R. 33, decree of District Judge merged in that of High Court and so High Court was proper Court to amend decree—It was necessary to order amendment in this case — To prevent abuse of Court's process it was necessary to refund Court-fee paid on review application although this case would not come under Court-fees Act, S. 15.

A decree of the District Judge, by an accidental mistake, made those defendants also against whom no relief was claimed, liable for the decretal amount. On plaintiff's appeal to the High Court, the decretal amount was increased but the question, as to who were bound by the decree, was not referred to in the judgment. Thereafter the defendants whose names were wrongly included in the decree applied to the High Court for the amendment of the decree.

Held : that as the High Court even in plaintiff's appeal could have under O. 41, R. 33, altered the decree and omitted the names of the applicants, the decree of the District Judge must be held to have merged in the decree of the High Court, and so the High Court was the only Court to grant the relief claimed. [P 159 C 2]

Held further that the High Court had power to interfere either under Ss. 151 or 152, and that it was necessary to meet the ends of justice to order the amendment of the decree.

Held further . that although S. 15, Court-fees Act, was not applicable to this case, as it could not be said that on the rehearing the Court reversed or modified its former decision on the ground of mistake of law or fact, still the Court-fee paid on the review application ought to be refunded for the ends of justice and to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court. [P 160 C 1]

K. C. Bose—for Appellants

Anklesaria—for Respondents.

Order —This application arises out of a suit filed by Ma Thet Pon, now deceased, in the District Court of Tharrawaddy in the year 1920 In that suit, she sued for possession of certain land and for mesne profits. The land had been in the possession of U Bauk and Ma Mwe Me, deceased, and the first two defendants were Ma Kyi Oh and Ma Ohn Kin, administrators of the estate of U Bauk and Ma Mwe Me. The present petitioners were joined as defendants because the land in dispute had been mortgaged to them by U Bauk and Ma Mwe Me. There were five other defendants joined for various reasons. In the plaint as finally amended the plaint asked for possession of the land and for mesne profits as against the estate of U Bauk and Ma Mwe Me alone. The suit went to trial and was finally dismissed by the District Court. Ma Thet Pon appealed to this Court and in September 1923 her appeal was allowed and a decree for possession passed in her favour. This decree has subsequently been confirmed on further appeal to the Privy Council.

The decree of this Court directed that the respondent-defendants should make over possession of the land in dispute to Ma Thet Pon, and it then proceeded to say :

"And it is further ordered that as to the rents claimed the case be remanded to the District Court of Tharrawaddy for disposal on the following issues, and that the said District Court of Tharrawaddy do then pass a final decree for the amount due to the appellant-plaintiff :

(1) What quantity of paddy was received as rent by Ma Mwe Me and the administrators after U Bauk's death ?

(2) What was the market value of the paddy at the time of the harvest ?

(3) What sums were paid as land revenue ?"

As a result of this decree, the District Court held an enquiry on the question of mesne profits and passed final orders on 5th May 1925. In this enquiry, the administrators of the estate of U Bauk and Ma Mwe Me were the only contesting parties. The District Judge in his judgment found .

"The amount the plaintiff is entitled to receive from the defendants is therefore Rs. 9,808-7-7. There will be a decree with costs accordingly in favour of the plaintiff."

A decree was then drawn up and that decree includes all the original defendants as defendants and directs that the defendants jointly do pay the amount found due. Against this decree Ma Thet Pon filed an appeal in this Court claiming that she should have been allowed a larger sum. This appeal was decided by us in June 1927. We found that a small sum of Rs. 372 should have been allowed in excess of the amount decreed and the final order we passed was as follows :

"We direct that Rs 372 be added to the sum decreed as mesne profits by the District Court with proportionate costs, and for the rest we dismiss this appeal."

The question as to who were to be bound by the decree was not before us and was not referred to by us at all in our judgment. A decree was then drawn up which so far as the parties were concerned followed the decree of the District Court and directed that

"the decree of the District Court of Tharrawaddy be and the same is hereby modified by directing that respondents-defendants do pay to the appellant-plaintiff the sum of Rs. 10,180-7-7, being the amount of the mesne profits."

The date of our judgment was 14th June 1927. The application now before us is an application for amendment of this decree and is dated 4th May 1928. The delay in filing the application is explained in an affidavit filed by the petitioners. In that affidavit, Thiruvenkatam Pillay, clerk and sub-agent of the C. T. A. M. Firm, deposes that they engaged an advocate, Mr. Krishnaswami, to represent them in the appeal before us and that on our judgment being pronounced the Chettyar firm was informed by Mr. Krishnaswami that the appeal against them had been dismissed and a decree for the further sum of Rs 375 had been passed against respondents 1 and 2, and it was only on 16th April 1928, that the firm knew that there was any decree against them when they received notice to pay up the decretal amount. It is urged on behalf of the petitioners that it is quite clear that it was never the intention of any Court to pass a decree against them for mesne profits, that the inclusion of their names in the decree was entirely accidental and that this is a proper case for the interference by this Court under the provisions of S. 152, Civil P. C.

The decree in the first instance was a decree of the District Court and against this decree the petitioners never appealed. It is, however, contended on their behalf that although they did not appeal, it was open to this Court on the appeal of Ma Thet Pon to alter the decree in their favour under the provisions of R. 33, O. 41, Civil P. C. In these circumstances, although the original decree was that of the District Court that decree must now be held to be merged in the decree of this Court and this Court is therefore the only Court which can grant the relief now claimed.

We are of opinion that this contention is correct. There can in our opinion be no question whatever as to the merits of the present application. The respondent in her final plaint made no claim whatsoever against the applicants for mesne profits and it seems to us perfectly clear that the decree against the applicants on this point was entirely due to accident and that it was never the intention of the District Court or of any Court to direct the petitioners to pay the sum decreed. The only point which requires consideration is whether we have the power to interfere now. Mr. Anklesaria contends that the error can be traced back to the decree of this Court of September 1923. We are, however, unable to agree with this contention. That decree does direct all the defendants to deliver up possession, but it contains no order at all as to who is to pay the mesne profits and no order on that point was necessary as no claim on the point had ever been made except against the first two defendants. In our opinion, it was not until the decree of the District Court of May 1925 that there was any order at all against the petitioners for payment of mesne profits As we have already said, that decree, in our opinion, now merges in the decree of this Court and that decree so far as it directs anyone but the first two defendants to pay mesne profits was clearly never in accordance with the intention of the judgment of the District Court, and it was certainly not in accordance with our intention when the case came before us on appeal. It would be a gross injustice to allow a decree for so large an amount to stand when based on no legal claim of any kind whatsoever, the decree being due entirely to a mistake on the part of the Court. We are of opinion that we have power to interfere either under the provisions of S. 152 or under the provisions of S 151, Civil P. C. The order we propose to make is quite clearly one which is necessary for the ends of justice and to prevent abuse of the process of the Court. The application before us has been made by the Chettyar defendants only, but it is clear that there has been a similar mistake as regards all the other defendants except the first and second.

We direct that the decree of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 234 of 1925 be amended into a decree directing that the first two respondent-defendants, the legal representatives of the estate of U Bauk and Ma Mwe Me, deceased, alone be directed to pay the appellant-plaintiff the sum of Rs. 10,180-7-7, being the amount of the mesne profits. There will be a similar modification of the decree as regards the payment of costs of the enquiry in the District Court. These costs will be borne by the first two defendants alone. The respondents will pay the costs of the petitioners in this application, advocate's fee seven gold mohurs.

(Mr. Bose, the appellants advocate, having applied for a refund of the Court-fee paid in the review application, the judgment proceeded). We have given Mr. Bose an opportunity to show that the Court has power to order a refund of the stamp duty payable upon the review application in this case, and he relies upon S. 15, Court-fees Act. We are not satisfied, however, that S. 15 by itself would give us power to make such an order in the present case. It is true that the application for review of judgment was admitted in the case, but it is not accurate that on the re-hearing the Court reversed or modified its former decision on the ground of mistake of law or fact. It granted, however, all the reliefs which the applicants asked for in a concurrent proceeding for the amendment of the decree under O. 41, R 33, Civil P. C.

On the facts of the case, however, we consider that this is a case where it is necessary, for the ends of justice or to prevent the abuse of the process of the Court, that we should apply the inherent powers of the Court referred to in S. 151, Civil P. C. It is no doubt only in rare and exceptional circumstances that this power can be invoked, but we consider that this is one of those exceptional cases.

The error referred to in our judgment in this case delivered yesterday shows that the error was one of the Court's in not specifying that it was only the contesting defendants-respondents who were liable for the mesne profits. In these circumstances an injustice was done to the applicants and an amount was decreed against them which had never been claimed.

In these circumstances they were quite justified in making alternate applications for relief, as it was difficult on the complicated proceedings to state which was their proper remedy. We are confirmed in the view we take by a decision of a Bench of the Patna High Court, of which the late Chief Justice was a member, in the case of Chandradhari Singh v. Tippan Prasad Singh (1), and also by a recent order of this Court in the case of Ma Thein v Ma Mya (2). We accordingly direct that the Court-fees paid on this application to review be refunded to the applicants.

(a) Civil P. C., O 21, R. 22—Execution after one year—Notice to judgment-debtor essential unless reasons for not issuing notice are recorded—Failure to record reasons renders proceedings void.

When execution is taken out after one year from the date of the decree it is compulsory under O. 21, R. 22, to issue a notice to show cause to the judgment-debtor before ordering his arrest. If no such notice is issued, under Sub-S. (2) Court can issue process, for reasons to be recorded, if it considers issue of notice would cause unreasonable delay or defeat the ends of justice. But if Judge records no reasons for issuing process and overlooks the provisions of R. 22, the failure to issue notice to the judgment-debtor is not a mere irregularity but a defect which goes to the very root of the proceedings and renders them void for want of jurisdiction 44 Cal. 954, Foll. [P 161 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 47—Order of committal to jail passed without jurisdiction—Objection to its legality not taken—No appeal lies—Civil P. C., S. 51.

An order committing a judgment-debtor to jail was passed without jurisdiction. But no objection was made to the committal to jail and the question of its legality was not then raised.

Held, that the order was not under S. 47 and, therefore, not appealable. [P 161 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 115—Non appealable order in execution without jurisdiction likely to cause judgment-debtor irremediable injury—High Court should interfere under S. 115—Civil P. C., S. 151.

Where the existence of a non-appealable order on execution, from which an appeal was filed may do the judgment-debtor an irremediable injury, since he was never given any opportunity of showing cause against execution and the whole of the proceedings were without jurisdiction the case is one where the unusual course of interfering under the revisional powers conferred by S. 115 should be taken. [P 162 C 1]

Tha Kyaw—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In Civil Execution Case No. 37 of 1928, of the Township Court, Amarapura, orders were passed on 26th March 1928, committing the judgment-debtor to jail. Execution was taken out over one year from the date of the decree and it was, therefore, compulsory under O. 21, R. 22 to issue a notice to show cause to the judgment-debtor before ordering his arrest. It is common ground that no such notice was issued.

The District Court on appeal held that the failure to issue notice was merely an irregularity which did not vitiate the subsequent arrest. Sub-S. (2) allows the Court to issue process for reasons to be recorded without first issuing notice, if it considers issue of notice would cause unreasonable delay or defeat the ends of justice. The Judge recorded no reasons for issuing process and obviously overlooked the provisions of R. 22, O. 21. Under the circumstances the failure to issue notice to the judgment-debtor was not a mere irregularity, but a defect which goes to the very root of the proceedings and renders them void for want of jurisdiction as was laid down in Shayam Mandal v Satinath Banerjee (1) There is a consensus of opinion on this point in the High Courts. There can be no doubt that the order for arrest of the judgment-debtor and all the proceedings in execution were void in consequence of the initial failure to issue notice.

For the decree-holder in this Court, however, the objection has been taken that no appeal lies against the order in question, which was passed under S. 51 and cannot be considered as a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed relating to the execution or satisfaction of the decree. It is contended accordingly that no appeal lies. This contention must prevail. No question arose between the the parties for determination. No objection was made to the committal to jail and the question of its legality was not then raised.

Had the judgment-debtor at the time challenged the jurisdiction of the Judge to pass orders in execution, then the order deciding the question of jurisdiction would have been an order under S. 47 and would have been appealable. I hold, therefore, that no appeal lies and the appeal is dismissed, but as the point should have been taken in the District Court there will be no order for costs. It is conceivable, however, that the existence of the order on execution may do the judgment-debtor an irremediable injury, since he was never given any opportunity of showing cause against execution. As the whole of the proceedings were without jurisdiction the case is one where I feel bound to take the unusual course of interfering under the revisional powers conferred by S. 115. The order appealed against is, therefore, set aside. I notice, the decretal amount was subsequently paid into Court. By consent it will remain there for a reasonable time, say one month from receipt of this order, to enable the decree-holder to take fresh proceedings by way of execution, if he wishes to do so.

Second Appeal No. 532 of 1928, Decided on 8th January 1929, against judgment of Dist Court, Bassein, in Civil Appeal No. 78 of 1928.

Civil P. C., S. 11, Expln. iv—Plaintiff and defendant in present suit being co-defendants in former suit—Plaintiff in former suit claiming partition on basis of agreement—Present plaintiff admitting his claim but suit dismissed on ground that other defendants in that suit treated land as their own and that agreement for partition was not proved—Plaintiff in present suit alleging that land was jointly owned by her husband and defendant 1 who transferred it with condition to repurchase—Defendant 1 repurchasing it — Plaintiff claiming half share on payment of half purchase money—Present suit was not barred by res judicata.

The plaintiff as well as defendants in the present suit was co-defendants in a former suit, in which the plaintiff sued for partition of land on the basis of an agreement to that effect. The plaintiff in the present suit admitted the claim of the plaintiff in that suit but the suit was eventually dismissed on the ground that the other defendants were dealing with the land as their own and that the contract of partition was not proved. The present plaintiff alleged in the present suit that the land really belonged to her husband and present defendant 1 but was transferred by them with a condition to purchase and claimed that as defendant 1 had purchased it, she was entitled to half share on payment of proportionate price money. The defendants contended that as this ground of defence was not raised by the plaintiff in the former suit, the present suit was barred by res judicata.

Held: that as the relief claimed by the plaintiff in the former suit was entirely independent of the present claim, the raising of which in the former suit would have made no difference to the decision in the former suit, and as also it was not necessary to decide in the former suit the question raised in the present suit, the present suit would not be barred by the principle of res judicata: *A. Thein Maung—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In Civil Regular No. 42 of 1927 of the Sub-Divisional Court of Kyonpyaw one Maung Aung Ban and two others sued the parties to the present appeal and one other for specific performance of a contract. Their allegation was that the land in suit had originally belonged to the parents of the plaintiffs and of all but one of the defendants. About 1914, the present respondent, Maung Han, and Maung Nge, the husband of the present appellant, Ma Shin, of on behalf of all the heirs made over the land in satisfaction of a mortgage debt, reserving the right of repurchase. About four years later, with the consent of all the heirs, Maung Han and Maung Nge repurchased the land on behalf of all these heirs, and it was agreed amongst the heirs, that, when the purchase money was repaid to Maung Han and Maung Nge the land would be divided amongst all the heirs. They, therefore, asked for a partition of the land on payment of their proportionate shares.

The present appellant, Ma Shin, admitted the plaintiffs' claim in that suit, but the suit was contested by the present respondents, Maung Han, Maung Myan and Po Hla. The suit was eventually dismissed. It was held that Maung Han and Maung Myan had been dealing with the land as their own. As regards the alleged promise to partition the land at the time of repurchase, the finding was somewhat vague; but apparently it was held that the contract was not proved. In the present case Ma Shin has sued the three respondents with regard to the same piece of land. She now says that the land in question was purchased by her husband, Maung Nge, and Maung Han from a Chettyar firm; and that, in 1914, Maung Nge and Maung Han mortgaged the land to Po Hla. Later on they transferred the land outright to Po Hla with an option of repurchase.

In the year 1919 this option of repurchase was exercised by defendant 1, Maung Han. Maung Nge has since died and Ma Shin claims that Maung Han must be held to have repurchased for himself and for Maung Nge and she asks for half of the land on payment of half the purchase money Rs. 920.

The suit is contested by Maung Han and Maung Myan and has been dismissed on a preliminary point. The trial Court has held that the suit is barred by the principle of res judicata on account of Civil Regular No. 42 of 1927, and this decision has been upheld on appeal by the District Court. It is against this decision that the present appeal has been filed.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the case now set up by the appellant was a case which ought to have been set up as a ground of defence in the earlier suit It is difficult to see how the present case would have been a good defence to the earlier suit. The question in that suit was whether the plaintiffs had the right to obtain a share in the land by virtue of a contract entered into by them and the other heirs. Ma Shin's present case is that the land actually belonged to her husband and to Maung Han, and it is on that ground that she is now claiming a share. But this case is not necessarily inconsistent with the case set up by the plaintiffs in the former suit. Even if the land were actually owned by Maung Nge and Maung Han only that fact would not necessarily negative the possibility of a contract. whereby they agreed to partition the land on payment of the proportionate shares by the other heirs. Further, the District Judge does not seem to have given sufficient attention to the fact that in the former suit the contesting parties were Maung Aung Bin and two others on one side and all the present defendants on the other :

The conditions requisite for an adjudication to be res judicata as between co-defendants were discussed in the case of Ma Tok v. Ma Yin (1). It was there laid down that the following conditions should be fulfilled before the principle of res judicata could apply:

(i) that there should be a conflict of interest between the co-defendants;

(ii) that it should be necessary to decide on that conflict in order to give the plaintiff relief appropriate to his suit, and

(iii) that the judgment should contain a decision of the question raised as between the co-defendants.

Now, there is a conflict in the present case between the persons who were co-defendants in the earlier suit, but in that suit the relief claimed by the plaintiffs was based on an alleged contract which is entirely independent of the claim now put forward by Ma Shin. Their success depended on whether they could prove that contract. A decision on the points now raised by Ma Shin could have been of no avail whatsoever to them in that suit, and the raising of the present claim by Ma Shin could have made no difference whatsoever to the decision of the earlier case. It was not necessary to decide this point in the earlier suit; nor can the judgment either directly or impliedly be held to contain a decision of the question now raised.

I have been referred on behalf of the respondents to the case of Maung No v. Maung Po Thein (2). In that case the following observations by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in an earlier case were quoted with approval with reference to Expln. 4, S. 11, Civil P. C. :

> A matter which ought to be raised but which as matter of fact is not raised in a suit cannot be decided in specific terms in that suit. But this fact cannot be fatal to the plea of res judicata, for in that case it is obvious that Expln. 2 (of S. 13 of the former Code) would be meaningless. We must take it therefore that if the effect of the decision in a former suit is necessarily inconsistent with the defence that ought to have been raised but has not been raised, that defence must under S. 13 be deemed to have been finally decided against the person who ought to have raised it."

With these remarks I entirely agree. But they do not seem to me to be of any assistance to the respondents in the present case. The decision in the former suit was to the effect that the plaintiffs in that suit had failed to prove their rights as heirs on a contract to a share in the land. It is quite impossible to hold that this decision is necessarily inconsistent with the case now put forward by Ma Shin. It is true that when the claim of res judicata is based on Expln. 4, S. 11 it is not necessary that there should have been any express decision on the 'matter which ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack. But for the provisions of the sections to be operative at all, the issue, or the matter in issue, must have been heard and finally decided in the earlier case; that is to say, the decision in the earlier case must have been such as to imply an adverse finding on the matter which ought to have been made a ground of defence or attack. These conditions are not fulfilled in the present case, and, in my opinion, the present suit is not barred as res judicata.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 223=3 Rang. 77.

It has been suggested by the learned advocate that when Ma Shin was examined as a witness in the earlier case her statements were not entirely consistent with the case she now puts forward; but I am not now concerned with the merits of her present case. The sole question for decision at present is whether the suit is barred as res judicata, and on that point I must hold that the appellant is entitled to succeed. I, therefore, set aside the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts and direct that the suit be reopened and and tried on its merits by the trial Court. The appellant will be entitled to a refund of the Court-fees paid by her in this Court and in the District Court. The balance of her costs in the District Court and in this Court will be paid by the respondents.

RUTLEDGE, C. J., AND BROWN, J.

E. M. Joseph and others—Appellants.

v.

Samsunder and others—Respondents.

First Appeals Nos. 207 to 209 of 1928, Decided on 4th January 1929, against judgment of original side in Civil Regular Nos. 353, 398 and 399 of 1927

Registration Act, S. 17 (2) (v)—Landlord's letter to tenant informing him "As long as you occupy room we shall not ask you to vacate it" does not amount to lease or agreement to lease and is exempt from registration—Registration Act, S. 2.

In a suit for specific performance on the basis of an oral agreement to lease, the plaintiff filed a letter written to him by the landlord. The letter recited "This is to inform you that as long as you occupy the room. . . . . we shall not ask you to vacate the said room the rent of which will be Rs. 5 per day."

He'd : that the letter did not operate as a lease or an agreement to lease. It was a unilateral letter which at the most gave right to obtain another document, the formal lease. It was therefore exempt from registration under S. 17 (2) (v), and so could be admitted in evidence though unregistered; *A. I. Paget—for Respondents

Judgment—The property in dispute in these three appeals consists of three rooms, Nos. 3, 4 and 5 of house No. 68, Fraser Street, Rangoon. The house in question is part of an estate of which the beneficial owners are the four appellants. The four appellants are brothers and appellant 1, E M. Joseph, is trustee for the management of the estate The rooms in question have for some years been occupied by the respondents as tenants. The respondent, Dwarka Prasad has occupied room No 3, Samsunder and Dwarka Prasad have occupied room No 4 and Samsunder has occupied room No. 5. Appellant 1 as trustee of the estate brought three ejectment suits in the Small Cause Court against the respondents.

It is alleged by the respondents that during the pendency of these suits an agreement was come to whereby they were to be permitted to continue in occupation for the rest of their lives on the payment of Rs 5 per day rent and of a lump sum of Rs 1,000 salami for each room This agreement was never reduced to the form of a legal document, and the respondents sued for specific performance of the agreement As a result the ejectment suits in the Small Cause Court were dismissed.

The appellants, whilst admitting that there was some discussion as to a settlement and admitting that the salami of Rs. 1,000 for each room was actually paid to them, deny that there was ever any definite agreement as to a lease. The trial Court has granted a decree for specific performance in each case and it is against these decrees that these three appeals are filed.

The first question for consideration in these appeals has reference to certain letters written by three out of the four appellants. That these three appellants signed those letters is admitted; but it is argued on their behalf that the letters contain on the face of them an agreement to lease, that they are, therefore, compulsorily registrable under the Registration Act and that as they have not been registered they cannot be accepted in evidence. The letter to Dwarka Prasad reads as follows:

"Sir, This is to inform you that as long as you occupy room No. 3 of house No. 68, Fraser Street, Rangoon, we shall not ask you to vacate the said room the rent of which will be Rs. 5 per day from 1st February 1927. You are not to sub-let the premises."

The letter to Samsunder with regard to room No. 5 is couched in similar terms and the letters to Dwarka Prasad and Samsunder jointly with regard to room No. 4 is also similarly worded except that the last sentence "You are not to sublet the premises,' is omitted.

In accordance with the definition given in S. 2 (vii), Registration Act, the term "lease" includes an agreement to lease, and under S. 17 of the Act a lease of immovable property for any term exceeding one year requires registration. The letters in question state the amount of rent and also declare that the appellants do not propose to evict the respondents.

We have been referred on behalf of the appellants to the case of Ramjoo Mahomad v. Haridas Mullick (1). In that case the defendant had written to the plaintiff a letter in which he said that he agreed to take a certain house on lease and set forth the terms under which he agreed to accept the lease and the plaintiff in reply wrote a letter to the defendant in which he said that he confirmed the defendant's letter. As a result of these two letters the plaintiff occupied the premises and paid the rent agreed on. Some 18 months later a notice was served on him to quit and he then brought a suit for specific performance. It was held that the letters in question amounted to a present demise of the premises and were compulsorily registrable. We do not, however, think that that case is analogous to the case before us. In one letter in that case there was a definite statement of an agreement to take the premises on lease subject to definite terms set forth in the letter and in the letter in reply there was a definite acceptance of the offer and the parties had acted on the letters as creating a lease for 18 months after the letters were written. The letters in the present case do not show any mutual agreement. They do not on the face of them contain any agreement at all. The three plaintiffs merely state in them that they will not ask the respondents to vacate the rooms. There is no mention whatever in the letters of the payments of salami and the letters are entirely unilateral letters. It seems to us clear that the letters were never really intended in themselves to operate as a lease or an agreement to lease, but that they contemplated execution of a formal agreement at a late stage. Formal assent to a proposal is clearly required before there can be any binding agreement. That assent is not contained in the letters at all and if these letters can be said to create a right at all, it seems to us, that was merely a right to obtain another document which would, when executed, create a lessee's interest in the property and that, therefore, the letters were exempted from registration under the provisions of S. 17 (2) (v), Registration Act,

We have been referred also to a case of this Court Maung Ba Sein v. Maung Htoon Shwe (2). but there again the document which was held to be compulsorily registrable was a formal document which set forth definite agreements by both landlord and tenant. We are of opinion that the letters in question have rightly been admitted in evidence by the trial Judge. It remains then to be considered whether the plaintiffs did in fact establish that a definite contract to enter into a lease was made. (Here the judgment discussed evidence and concluded as below). The learned trial Judge appears to have given the decree in somewhat too vague terms but we consider that he was right in granting a decree for specific performance and the orders we are passing are substantially in favour of the respondents. They must therefore be allowed their costs. We alter the decree of the trial Judge in each case to a decree that the defendants or defendant 1 on their behalf shall execute a lease in favour of the several plaintiffs, the conditions of the lease to be that a rent of Rs. 5 a day be paid, that the lease shall continue for the lives of the plaintiffs, that the plaintiffs shall have no power to sublet the premises. The defendant-appellants shall pay the costs of the respondents in both Courts in all the 3 cases.

Gunnu Meah—Appellant.

A. Rahman—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 434 of 1928, Decided on 30th January 1929, against judgment of Dist. Judge, Insein, in Civil Appeal No. 22 of 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100—Suit for enforcement of award praying also that award be filed — Second appeal lies — Civil P. C., Sch. 2, Para. 20.

Where a plaint was headed "Suit valued at Rs. 86 for enforcing an award" and ad valorem Court-fees had been paid accordingly, though at the conclusion of the plaint there was a prayer that the award may be ordered to be filed, but the prayer further asked that a decree be passed in accordance with its terms.

Held: that there was a suit for the enforcement of the award and not an application to file an award before the trial Judge and that a second appeal did therefore lie: 7 Bur. L. T. 279, Ref. [P 166 C 2]

(b) Arbitration—Suit for enforcement of award—Signature of party may not estop him from disputing correctness—Civil P. C., Sch. 2, Para. 15.

The mere signature by a party to an award does not necessarily in all cases estop him from afterwards disputing the correctness of the ward: A.I.R. 1923 Rang. 187, Dist. [P 167 C 1]

N. N. Sen—for Appellant.

Bhattacharyya—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellant, Gunnu Meah, filed a suit in the Township Court of Insein for the enforcement of the terms of an award directing the defendant to convey a certain house to the plaintiff. The plaint set forth that the matter was referred to an arbitration consisting of Mahomedan elders of Insein and that an award was made by them on 25th August 1927. The defendant, while not denying that the matter had been referred to arbitration, pleaded that the award was invalid as it had not been signed by all the arbitrators and also that the award was bad on the ground of misconduct and corruption of the arbitrators. The written statement did not specify what the misconduct and corruption complained of were. Evidence was called to show that the arbitrators refused to examine two of the witnesses named by the defendant.

The trial Court held that the arbitrators to whom the matter was referred consisted of some 30 persons and that only 12 of these persons signed the award. The Court, further, held that the arbitrators had refused to examine witnesses named by the defendant. The suit was therefore dismissed. The findings of fact by the trial Court were accepted by the lower appellate Court, which dismissed the appeal; and the present appeal has been filed under the provisions of S. 100, Civil P. C.

A preliminary objection has been taken on the part of the respondent to the effect that no further appeal lies. It is contended that there was no suit to enforce an award but that in fact the matter before the Court was an application to file an award under the provisions of para 20, Sch. 2, Civil P. C. If that contention is correct, then no second appeal would lie; but I do not think that the contention can be upheld. The distinction between an application to file an award and a suit to enforce an award is pointed out in the case of Nga Hla Gyaw v. Mi Ya Po (1). In the present case the plaint is headed "Suit valued at Rs. 86 for enforcing an award" and ad valorem Court-fees have been paid accordingly. It is true that at the conclusion of the plaint there is a prayer that the award may be ordered to be filed; but the prayer goes on to ask that a decree be passed in accordance with its terms for the conveyance of the said house to the plaintiff. The plaint was accepted as a plaint in a suit and appears to have been treated as such throughout.

I am of opinion that there was a suit for the enforcement of the award before the trial Judge and that a second appeal does therefore lie. But in this second appeal questions of fact cannot be raised and it has not been contended before me that the findings that only some of the arbitrators signed the award and that the witnesses were not all examined can be challenged. The only point argued on behalf of the appellant is that the respondent signed the award himself and is therefore now estopped from challenging its validity.

I have been referred on behalf of the appellant to the case of U Gunawa v. U Pyinnyadipa (2). In that case there had been a reference to arbitration and there had been an irregularity in the proceedings in that at one of the sittings of the arbitrators when witnesses were examined one of the arbitrators was absent. This was the second of the three sittings and no objection was taken at the time, nor was it raised in the pleadings of the case. It was held that by continuing the proceedings without objection to this irregularity, the parties must be held to have condoned the irregularity and could not seek to set aside the award on the ground of that irregularity. I do not think that that decision is very relevant to the present case.

(1) [1914] 2 U. B. R. 26=27 I.C. 31=7 Bur. L. T. 279.

(2) A. I. R. 1923 Rang. 187=1 Rang. 15.

The whole arbitration in the present case was conducted at one sitting. There was no evidence to show that the respondent condoned any irregularity during the course of the arbitration proceedings. It was when proceedings were all concluded and the award had been delivered, that his signature was appended to the award. It was stated in U Gunawa's case (2)

" a party having knowledge of an irregularity cannot lie by without objection and take his chance of an award in his favour and then, when he finds that the award has gone against him, seek to set it aside on the ground of the irregularity to which he failed to object. "

The signature of the respondent in the present case was appended when the terms of the award were known to him and there was no question therefore of his taking a chance that the award would be in his favour. His case is that he was practically compelled to sign the award. I am not satisfied that his mere signature of the award necessarily removes all objection to the irregularity in the award. The chief difficulty in the way of the plaintiff seems to me to be this, that there is no mention in the pleadings of the defendant having signed the award at all. The suit is based on the award itself and not on any agreement by the parties whereby they mutually accepted the award. The question therefore of the acceptance of the award by the defendant was not in issue. If both parties to the award signed the award after it was delivered it may be that a suit could be filed to enforce the terms of the award on the ground that there was a definite contract by the parties by virtue of their signatures; but this was not the case for the plaintiff here and I am not prepared to hold that the mere signature by a party to an award necessarily in all cases estops him from afterwards disputing the correctness of the award. In all the circumstances of the case I am not satisfied that there is sufficient ground for interference. I therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Where a person is engaged as a teacher by the month and there is nothing in the agreement, providing for notice to leave on either side, the contract would be terminated by a reasonable notice and one month's notice is reasonable : Allen : In the matter of, (1910) *K. E. Maung—for Appellants.

Ba Thein—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent which arises under the following circumstances. The plaintiff who is a school master brought a suit against the members of the National School Committee of Einme, claiming damages for wrongful dismissal. The learned Sub-Divisional Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff had been engaged on a month to month contract and awarded him one month's salary by way of damages. The District Judge, however seems to have agreed that the plaintiff was engaged upon a monthly basis, but he was of opinion that six months' salary would be a reasonable compensation for his dismissal. Upon appeal to this Court, the learned Judge appears to have agreed with the finding of the two lower Courts as to the terms upon which the plaintiff was engaged but he said that he was not prepared to disagree with the "opinion of the lower appellate Court that six months' salary in lieu of notice is not excessive " He subsequently granted a certificate enabling an appeal to be made to a Bench of this Court. The respondent entered into the service of the appellants on or about 26th July 1926. On 15th October of that year, he received a letter terminating his employment, "within one month" from his date and offering to pay the sum of 225/- being as we understand it 150/- by way of salary for that month and the balance 75/- being in respect of fifteen days in October. The respondent refused to accept this offer and wrote on 22nd October claiming 3757/- and included in this sum was 3600/- as damages consequent upon his dismissal. The first question to be determined is · What was the agreement for the hiring of the respondent? We need say no more than that we agree that he was employed by the month at a salary of 150/- per month. It is clear that there was nothing in the agreement (which was a verbal one) provided for notice to leave on either side, nor was there any evidence at the trial of the existence of any custom in such a case As had been laid down, therefore, in a number of cases, the contract would be terminated by a reasonable notice Upon this point, we need only refer to the case of In the matter of the African Association, Ltd. and Allen (1) A David v. St Anthony's High School (2) a decision of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, apparently upon a somewhat similar facts In the latter case [following M. E. Moola v. K. C. Bose (3)] the learned Judge thought that thirty days wages was sufficient. In the present case, the respondent was engaged by the month, and in the absence of special agreement, it seems to us reasonable that he should be given one month's notice We observe he was not turned out forthwith. He had an opportunity while still keeping his appointment to look for other work We have no doubt that the committee have acted reasonably and the appeal is therefore allowed. As the appellants have been all along willing to pay 225/- mentioned in their notice respondent must pay the costs of the appellants in all Courts.

Judgment.—The present parties are creditors of one Kyin Sein, who was adjudicated insolvent on his own petition in Civil Misc. Case No. 99 of 1926 of the District Court of Tharrawaddy. The insolvent possessed only the following properties :

(1) A house at Tharrawaddy.

(2) Two holdings of paddy land said to be Nos. 33 and 35 of 1925-26 of Thanatpyit kwin, measuring together 37-67 acres

(3) Two holdings of paddy land said to be Nos. 33 and 35 of 1925-26 of Tawyagon kwin, measuring together 22 99 acres.

(4) Two holdings of paddy land said to be Nos. 52 and 53 of 1925-26 of Ashe kwin, measuring together 29'00 acres.

The M. T. T. K. M. M. S. M. A. R. Chettyar Firm proved in respect of a first mortgage over the house for Rs. 8,152-15. The K. P. S. P. P. L. Firm, who are the present appellants, proved in respect of a second mortgage on the house and the lands in Thanatpyit kwin for Rs. 7,917. The M. L. M. R. M. Firm proved in respect of a first mortgage on the lands in Thanatpyit kwin and a first mortgage on holding No. 52 in Ashe kwin for Rs. 7,307 4. The C. A. P. C. Firm, who are the present respondents, proved in respect of an only mortgage on the lands in Tawyagon kwin and on holding No. 52 in Ashe kwin, and a second mortgage on holding No. 52 in Ashe kwin for Rs. 6,557-8. There were other creditors whose debts were unsecured. By an oversight the C. A. P. C. Firm, that is the present respondents, were omitted from the schedule of creditors. The receiver sold all the properties free of mortgage, as shown below :

|---|---|
| (1) The house for ... | 8,635 0 0 |
| (2) ,, Thanatpyit paddy lands for | 10,000 0 0 |

| | 21,305 0 0 |

From this amount the receiver deducted Rs. 1,065-4 as his commission, leaving for distribution Rs. 20,239-12. That amount was divided among the creditors as follows :

| | Rs. a.p. |
|---|---|
| To the M.T.T.K M.M.S.M.A.R. Firm | 8,203 4 0 |
| ,, K.P.S P.P.L ,, | 4,439 4 0 |
| ,, M.L.M.R.M. ,, | 7,597 4 0 |
| | 20,239 12 0 |

The C. A. P. C. Firm, who received nothing, naturally complained and the Court said that because the lands which were mortgaged to them and were not mortgaged to any of the other creditors had been sold for Rs. 1,770, they were entitled to recover that amount from the K P. S. P. P. L Firm who had taken the money out of Court. The K. P. S P. P. L Firm appeals against that finding on grounds that the insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to decide in insolvency proceedings such a question as that arising between them and the C. A. P. C. Firm, that if it had such jurisdiction generally, it had no such jurisdiction at the time when the order was made because an order for the discharge of the insolvent had already been made, that the application of the C. A. P. C Firm was res judicata by reason of the rejection of similar applications made at earlier stages of the proceedings and that on the merits the C. A P C. Firm was not entitled to recover the sum of Rs.1770 from them.

There is clearly no force in the first of these grounds because the insolvency Court undoubtedly has power to give directions as to the distribution of the assets among the creditors who have proved in the insolvency. Similarly, there is no force in the ground that the discharge of the insolvent put an and to the Court's power to give such directions. It was said in the case of Rowe and Co. Ltd. v. Tan Thean Tark (1) that :

"One of the main objects of every adjudication of an insolvent is to make his estate divisible amongst the creditors and it must often occur that valuable assets are still in the hands of the Official Assignee and in process of realisation for that purpose at the date when the insolvent applies for his final discharge," and we agree with the conclusion of the learned Judge in that case that an order under S. 41 of the Act does not necessarily put an end to tee proceedings in the insolvency. We have no doubt that in this case the Court still had power to make the order against which appellants appeal. There is clearly no question of res judicata. It is true that respondents had made various prior applications for the proceeds of the sale of the properties mortgaged to him, but there was no final order adjudicating on their claim before the order which is under appeal. As for the merits, it is clear that appellants' case has no merits of any sort. The sum of Rs 1,770 mentioned in the lower Court's order represents the sale proceeds of the Tawyagon lands aud of both the holdings in Ashe kwin. The Tawyagon lands were mortgaged only to respondents and as the sale proceeds of those lands were insufficient to satisfy respondents' mortgage respondents were clearly entitled to the whole of those sale proceeds, none of the other creditors having any interest of any sort in them. The amount of those sale proceeds was Rs. 620. As for the Ashe kwin lands respondents held a first mortgage over holding No. 53 and a second mortgage over holding No. 52, the M. L. M. R. M. Firm having a prior mortgage over holding No. 52 The M. L. M. R. M. Firm's first mortgage over holding No. 52 was satisfied by the sale of the Thanatpyit lands, which were also included in their mortgage, without recourse to the sale proceeds of holding No. 52 and therefore the sale proceeds of holding No. 52 as well as those of holding No.53 were wholly available for satisfaction of respondents' mortgage debt. Appellants held no mortgage over any of the lands which were mortgaged to respondents and in respect of which respondents claim the sale proceeds, and since those sale proceeds were insufficient to satisfy respondents' mortgage debt, neither appellant nor any other creditor had any rights in respect of them.

The only matter in which the lower Court's order was mistaken is that it ordered appellants to pay the gross sale proceeds to respondents, disregarding the fact that the receiver had already taken his commission out of them. The order must therefore be varied by deducting from the sum of Rs. 1,770 the amount of the receiver's commission on the sale of these properties. That commission amounted to Rs. 88-8 and therefore the sum payable by appellants to respondents is Rs. 1,681-8.

The receiver had, however, no right to any commission : vide the ruling of this Court in the case of R M. M. Chettyar Firm v. U Hla Bu (2) and the rules contained in para. 307a (1) of the Burma Courts Manual, and therefore he must refund to respondents the sum of Rs 88-8 which he has wrongly taken. On application by any of the other creditors who are interested in the matter he should be made to refund the balance of his commission so far as such commission was not paid in respect of the surplus of sale proceeds over the mortgage debt due on the particular lands sold.

We note that the conduct of the insolvency proceedings in the lower Court reflects no credit on either the Court or the receiver. The Court clearly framed the schedule of creditors carelessly, since it omitted to notice that respondents had proved their mortgage debt and it failed to enter them in the schedule, and both the Court and the receiver seem to have been entirely ignorant of the provisions of S. 47, Insolvency Act, and of the fact that the receiver is not entitled to commission on the amount of the mortgaged money realized by the sale of the mortgaged property.

In the result the order of the lower Court is varied by the substitution of the amount Rs. 1,681-8 for Rs. 1,770 as payable by appellants to respondents and by the addition of an order for the payment of Rs. 88-8 by the receiver to respondents. In view of the fact that the grounds for the alteration of the order were not mentioned by appellants in the appeal, appellants will pay respondents' costs in this Court, advocate's fee to be five gold mohurs.

The respondents have filed a cross-objection claiming that the Court ought to have allowed them interest on the amount awarded. The learned Judge in the lower Court considered respondents' claim to interest and rejected it, and we are of opinion that in refusing interest he exercised a right discretion, because respondents were negligent in not seeing that they were brought on to the schedule of creditors. They were present at the sale and raised no objection to the sale of the properties, which were mortgaged to them, free of their mortgage. We therefore dismiss the cross-objection without orders for costs.

Where the rights of the vendors of the plaintiff had become extinguished by adverse possession of plot of land by defendant for more than 12 years, the defendant will not be estopped from pleading acquisition of title by adverse possession and denying plaintiff's title to plot even though the defendant, after purchase of the plot by the plaintiff had obtained his permission to occupy the plot. [P 172 C 1]

E. Villa—for Appellants.

S. Ganguli—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs in the original suit sued to eject the defendants from a small portion of land, measuring. '04 acre, forming part of a larger plot of land which they had purchased from Po Kyaw and Daw Hnit. The map shows that this portion of the land is abutting on the creek and is presumably used by the defendants as a dwelling site. The trial Judge gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in the suit, whose case was that after he had purchased the land, the defendants obtained their permission to occupy this land. The learned Township Judge believed the evidence on this point and though he was of opinion that the defendants had been living in the suit land for over 15 years, since it had been proved beyond all reasonable doubt that the defendants asked the plaintiff's permission, their subsequent possession would not be adverse to the plaintiffs, however long the defendants may be in possession He therefore held that the defendants could not claim adverse possession, even if they had been occupying the land for over 12 years. I am not sure what the learned Judge means exactly by these remarks, but in the result he gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs, as I have stated above. The matter was taken up in appeal to the District Judge, who held that the defendants had been in possession of the land for over 15 years and that they could claim to have been in adverse possession, and, therefore the plaintiff's suit must fail. He therefore allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiffs come up to this Court in second appeal. Their evidence is not of a very high quality that the defendants did ask for permission from the plaintiffs to occupy the land. What really happened possibly is that the plaintiffs having bought the land told the defendants that they had become the owners of the land and wanted to remove their house, and the defendants possibly had replied that they would do so next year or so. I have doubts whether anything more transpired, but assuming that the evidence on this point is as found by the Township Judge, the question still remains whether the possession of the defendants is on that account permissive and whether their seeking permission of the plaintiffs estops them in denying the plaintiff's title and asserting their own title to the land. There is ample evidence and I am on this point in agreement with the District Judge that the defendants had been in possession of the land for nearly 18 years. That is for nearly 15 years prior to the purchase of the land by the plaintiffs. It is not alleged that their possession originally started permissively. Though the presumption of law is that every possession starts legally, where a plaintiff wants to establish that the defendant's original possession was permissive it is for him to prove this allegation and if he fails to do so, it will be presumed that the possession was adverse : see Maung Gri v. U Shwe Gyo (1). It must be therefore assmumed in the absence of any evidence to the contrary that the possession of the defendants was adverse till the date of the conveyance in favour of the plaintiffs. Ma Hnit, one of the persons who conveyed the land, states that the defendants built the house because the land was their own. This is possibly an error because the land clearly forms part of the holding sold by her and her husband to the plaintiffs, but the defendants themselves state what is probably true that they never asked anybody's permission when they built the house on the land.

It is in accordance with probability because in places like the place in question where the land is very cheap, no one ever thinks of asking anybody's permission when he builds a house on a portion of the land. If an objecting landlord takes steps to eject him from the land, he would be thought to be very unneighbourly. If the defendants had been in possession of the land prior to the purchase of the land by the plaintiffs for over 12 years, then the rights of the vendors of the plaintiffs whatever they were had become extinguished by operation of S. 28, Limitation Act. The result would be that at the time of the date of the sale, the vendors of the plaintiffs had no right, title or interest in the land. Any statement by the defendants, therefore must have been made based upon a mistake and misconception of the legal rights of the plaintiffs, and such an admission could not operate as an estoppel, nor could the permission if any by the plaintiffs to the defendants estop them under S. 116, Evidence Act, from denying the plaintiff's title. They would undoubtedly be licensees but they sought the license under a mistake. Therefore even assuming that the plaintiff's evidence on this point is true, it is still open to the defendants to plead that they acquired title by adverse possession, and on the evidence it must be held as the District Judge held that they had so acquired title to the land. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

BROWN, J.

Ko Maung Nge—Appellant.

v.

Lalmaw—Respondent.

Special Second Appeal No. 585 of 1928, Decided on 8th May 1929.

Civil P. C., S. 11—Decree-holder applying for execution of preliminary mortgage-decree—Judgment-debtor not objecting to executability of decree and allowing it to be satisfied to certain extent—Judgment debtor cannot be said to admit that decree could be executed to any larger extent.

Although orders in execution proceedings operate as res judicata, nevertheless the fact that execution has been ordered as regards a certain sum does not operate as res judicata with regard to the amount due under the decree. [P 173 C 1]

Where a decree-holder applied for execution of a preliminary mortgage decree for a certain amount and the judgment-debtor did not raise objection that the decree was not executable at all and allowed it to be satisfied to a certain extent, it cannot be said that the judgment-debtor admitted that the decree could be executed to any larger amount so as to hold that the executability of the whole decree had been adjudicated upon. [P 173 C 1]

P. K. Basu—for Appellant.

S. Ganguli—for Respondent.

Judgment—In Suit No. 196 of 1925 of the Township Court of Toungoone U. Tha Maung sued for a decree for Rs. 572-8-0 with costs and interest against the respondent, Lalmaw. He set forth in his plaint that his debt was secured by a mortgage but that the mortgaged property had already been sold for default of payment of fishery revenue. He asked not for a mortgaged decree but for simple money decree. A written admission was filed on behalf of the defendant, and the Judge passed judgment to the effect that "There will be a preliminary mortgage decree for Rs. 572-8-0 with costs and interest at the stipulated rate from the date of the suit till the date of payment, payable within six months from this date against the defendants."

An ordinary preliminary mortgage decree was drawn up. The amount payable under that decree was shown to be Rs. 500 as principal, Rs. 162-8-0 as interest and Rs. 63 as costs, and the total was stated to be Rs. 825-8-0 The date of the decree was 17th June 1925 On 19th June 1925 U Tha Maung filed an application for execution. In his application he stated the amount of the decree was Rs. 572 8-0 and the costs were Rs. 56-4 0. As a result of his application he realized a sum of Rs. 450 on 30th July 1925. Nothing further seems to have happened for over two years until on 10th September 1927, the present appellant Maung Nge filed an application for execution as transferee of the decree from U Tha Maung. In his application, he showed the amount due under the decree to be the same as on the previous application of U Tha Maung. This application was ultimately infructuous owing to the failure of both sides to appear on a day on which the case was fixed for hearing. On 3rd November 1927, the transferee of U Tha Maung filed another application for execution and in that application he showed the amount due as Rs. 662-8-0 for principal and interest and Rs. 63 costs. The judgment-debtor contended that the decree had been satisfied in full. The trial Court at first held in favour of the transferee. The judgment-debtor appealed to the District Court and that Court ordered further enquiry to be held. The Court held further enquiry and again passed orders that the decree had not been fully satisfied and was executable The judgment-debtor appealed again to the District Court and the learned Judge of that Court then for the first time discovered that the actual decree was not one which could be executed at all. That he was correct in this view, there can be no doubt.

The decree is not a decree for the payment of money, but merely an ordinary preliminary mortgage decree. It is clear that it is incapable of execution. In view of this finding the District Court set aside the order of the trial Court directing execution against the judgment-debtor. Against this order the present appeal has been filed. It is not contended that the decree is in fact capable of execution but it is contended that in view of the previous proceedings and in accordance with the general principles of res judicata, the judgment-debtor cannot now raise this question. The provisions of S. 11, Civil P. C., do not specifically apply to execution proceedings, but it is settled law that the general principles of res judicata must be followed in dealing with such proceedings. The contention before me is that in the execution proceedings of 1925, the judgment-debtor might have opposed the execution on the ground that the decree was not executable at all, and that as he did not raise this contention and as the decree was actually executed it must be held that it had been finally decided by that Court that the decree was capable of execution. The difficulty in upholding this contention seems to me to lie in the interpretation of the effect of the previous order for execution In the 1925 proceedings the application shows that there was a money decree for Rs 634-4-0 But it is clear that the decree holder himself has not claimed that the Court decided that that was the amount to be executed. He himself now claims that the decree was for Rs. 725-8-0 and in the circumstances I do not see how it can be held that the effect of the previous decision was that the decree was executable for any specific amount. It was not in fact executable at all. The judgment-debtor by his action allowed it to be satisfied to the extent of Rs. 450 ; but it cannot be contended as a result of that that he admitted that it could be executed to any larger amount. If the principle of res judicata were applied at all, I think it is clear that the plaintiff would be limited to claiming Rs. 634-4-0 less the amount already executed.

There is authority for the view that although orders passed in execution operate as res judicata nevertheless the fact that execution has been ordered as regards a certain sum does not operate as res judicata with regard to the amount due under the decree, and the amount actually due under the decree in the present case is precisely nil. It does not seem to me that the previous proceedings really decided as between the parties anything more than that the sum of Rs. 450 could be realized under that decree. That being so, the question as to whether the decree is further executable has not been adjudicated either directly or impliedly, and I do not think that the principle of res judicata can be applied in this case. The appellant's remedy, if any, would appear to be to take steps to have a proper decree drawn up. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

First Appeals Nos. 160 and 162 of 1928, Decided on 22nd May 1929.

(a) Buddhist Law (Burmese) — Adoption—Monk.

A Burmese Buddhist monk cannot adopt. [P 174 C 1]

(b) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Adoption.

A mutual adoption by persons who have no bond either by relationship or in any other way is impossible [P 174 C 1]

Zeya—for Appellants.

Ba Maw—for Respondent.

Judgment—These are two appeals from a judgment of the Additional District Judge at Pyapon dismissing the plaintiff-appellants' suits. The plaintiffs minors claim certain property as theirs by reason of the fact that they were adopted with the right to inherit by one U Zawtipala, a rahan and Ma Thaik, deceased, by adoption deed. Appellants' advocate admits that the adoption of young children by a Burmese Buddhist monk is invalid but contends that the joint adoption by Ma Thaik is quite legal. The adoption deed (Ex. A) in the case of Ma On Kyi runs as follows :

" When monk U Wizaya of Rangoon said to monk U Zawtipala, resident of Bhamo Ywa Kyaung: It is very difficult for me alone to bring up the girl Ma On Kyi, whom I have in turn obtained outright and brought up I wish you to bring her up, jointly with Dayakamagyi Ma Thike, resident of Bhamo village, mutually adopt Ma On Kyi to inherit both good and bad inheritance and execute the deed in the house of Ma Thike at Bhamo village."

(Sd.) U. Wizaya.

The other deed (Ex. B) runs as follows.

"This deed is executed on a Zayat in the compound of Obo Kyaung Thayettaw Taik, Rangoon in respect of a girl on the 8th Waning, Pyathe 1284, as follows: The surviving mother Ma Mai Mya after the death of her husband Maung Hmyin, says to Ko Po Kyin, the husband and Ma Hmen, the wife, residents of No. 57, 11th Street, Rangoon. "As it is too burdensome for me, who am a woman to bring up my natural daughter, please bring up the said child for good as your daughter. Having undertaken that hereafter there shall be nobody who will claim to take back the child. the child was delivered in the presence of local elder, Saya Ba and witnesses Ma Kwe Ma, Daw Ii, Ko Ba Thaw, Ko Po Myin, and Ma Hmon, those who had asked for the child for good, delivered the child to U Zawtipala, resident of Bhamo Ywa Kyaung, Moulmeingyun Town, Myaungmya District and Ma Thike resident of the same village, with consent for adoption with the right of inheriting. writer U Zawtipala.

The monk U. Zawtipala gave evidence at the trial. It appears that he had adopted a number of children, mostly females but they had died before reaching maturity. Ma Thaik was no relation of his but was a supporter and is referred to as a "Soon-ama." According to the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff U Zawtipala, though a Phongyi had inherited his share of family property, which was undivided and he was paid by other members of the family his share of the income of the property and at any rate in the latter years either brought paddy land in Ma Thaik's name on behalf of the minors or gave money to Ma Thaik with which to purchase land for the minors. We have already mentioned that Mr. Zeya admitted that it is impossible for a Burmese monk to adopt children. We agree that, bound as a monk is by the Vinaya, such a proceeding is quite impossible It is admitted that the two minor children were entrusted to Ma Thaik's care and lived with her. The adoption deeds have never been signed by Ma Thaik and the plaintiff's evidence represented her as having no property of her own and being maintained by U Zawptipala. The adoption from the deeds on the face of it looks as if it were a mutual adoption, but such a one would be impossible since there seems to have been no bond either by relationship or any other way between U Zawtipala and Ma Thaik. In fact, Ma Thaik seems to have been used by the Phongyi as an agent or servant. He could not keep the female children in his kyaung, or kyangdaik and according to his own statement he employed Ma Thaik and supported her as his agent or employee in looking after the two little girls. There is no evidence before us that Ma Thaik of her own volition ever wished to adopt the two girls as her daughters with a view to inherit In fact we have never come across a case, where two persons unconnected with each other either by relationship or marriage purported to adopt and became the parents of minor children. The only question argued before us was that of the adoption of the two minor appellants by the late Ma Thaik. An issue was framed namely: "was Ma Thaik a trustee or benamidar of the plaintiff?" This was not argued probably for the reasons given on p. 3 of the judgment appealed from, which shows that the appellants' advocate in the trial Court abandoned the plea that the properties in dispute belong to the minor appellants absolutely in their own right and that Ma Thaik was only their trustee or benamidar. The learned Judge goes on to say:

"He prays only for a declaration that the properties belong to the plaintiffs as the sole heirs of the deceased Ma Thaik, being her adoptive, daughters. There is therefore no necessity for us now to give a decision on the fourth issue."

The position then is that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that they were adopted with a right to inherit by Ma Thaik. It is also clear that while U Zawtipala purported to adopt them, in fact he could do nothing of the kind. That being the case, their suit was rightly dismissed by the trial Court. These appeals are dismissed with costs.

Abdur Rauf Chowdry—Appellant.

N. P. L. S. P. Chettyar Firm—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 236 of 1928, Decided on 30th January 1929, against the judgment of original side in Civil Regular No. 364 of 1926.

Rangoon Municipal Act (6 of 1922), S. 192—Mortgage not notified to corporation—Property sold for default in payment of property tax—Purchaser even after institution of suit on mortgage gets it free from mortgage—Lis pendens does not apply—Burma Land and Revenue Act (2 of 1876), S. 47—Transfer of Property Act, S. 52.

A mortgagee who had given no notice of his mortgage to the municipal corporation filed a suit on his mortgage. In the meanwhile the property was sold under Burma Land and Revenue Act, S. 47 by the corporation after due notice to the mortgagor, for non-payment of property taxes. Mortgagee joined the auction purchaser as defendant.

Held: that the property was sold free from the mortgage because the tax in respect of which the default was made was a property tax and the corporation were entitled to put into force the summary method given in the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act against the immovable property itself, which was quite independent of any remedy against the defaulter personally: A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 289, Appr. [P 176 C 1]

Held further: that the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to this case at all, as it would indeed be a dangerous extension of the doctrine to hold that neither Government nor a local body could recover its taxes or rates from a defaulter so long as a law suit was pending between the defaulter and some of his other creditors. [P 176 C 1]

K. C. Bose—for Appellant.

S. C. Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the original side of this Court. The facts are as follows:

By a registered deed (Ex. B), dated 7th December 1922, one Ma Aye Nu alias Fatima Bi Bi mortgaged to the respondent firm for Rs. 3,000, premises known as No. 190, F Street, Tatmye Quarter, Rangoon. The mortgagee did not give any notice of his mortgage to the Rangoon Corporation. The mortgagor made default in paying the property-taxes from the second quarter of 1925 to the fourth quarter of 1926. After due notice to the mortgagor, the premises were proclaimed for sale by Ex. 2, dated 9th April 1927, which stated that the sale would take place on the spot on the morning of 26th April 1927. The proclamation is stated to be under S. 47, R. 95, Direction 175 of the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act, 1876. The proclamation further stated that "the right offered for sale will be free from all encumbrances created over it, and from all subordinate interests derived from it, except such as may be expressly reserved by me at the time of sale."

The bailiff of the corporation conducted the sale, which was knocked down to the appellant for Rs. 700 on 26th April.

We may here note that the respondent filed his mortgage suit against the mortgagor and her husband on 22nd July 1926. If he had made any enquiry he would have found that the taxes had not been paid on the mortgaged premises for over a year, and, by not having given notice of his mortgage to the corporation, the latter had no means of giving him notice of the mortgagor's default. After the sale the respondent amended his plaint, joined the auction-purchaser and pleaded fraud and collusion, while the auction-purchaser became the benamidar of the mortgagor.

The learned trial Judge makes an initial mistake in the beginning of his judgment by saying that the appellant "was the purchaser of the property at a Court auction sale." If this had been an ordinary Court auction sale, all that could be sold in execution was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor. On the face of the record, this was not a Court auction sale at all, but a sale under S. 47, Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act, which provides a summary method of proceeding against the land itself where the revenue officer finds that there exists any permanent, heritable, and transferable right of use and occupancy by selling it at a public auction. By S. 194 (1), Rangoon Municipal Act, 1922

"any arrears of tax or any fee or other money claimable by the corporation under this Act may be recovered as if they were arrears of land revenue."

Cases have arisen in which the Courts have refused to construe similar words as giving a local body or the income-tax authorities the right to resort to the summary method by the sale of immovable property for the recovery of dues of a personal nature.

On this question we have been referred to a lucid judgment of Chari, J., in the case of R. M. V. V. M. Chettyar Firm v. M. Subramaniam (1). On p. 466 (of 5 Rang) the learned Judge after reviewing a number of cases, observes:

"I am, therefore, of opinion that, so far as "property-taxes," as defined in S. 80, City of Rangoon Municipal Act, are concerned, it is open to the properly authorized officer of the municipality to direct the recovery of arrears in the manner prescribed by Ss. 46 and 47, Burma Land and Revenue Act, and that, to a sale held under these sections the provisions of S. 48 of the Act will apply. I am strengthened in the conclusion I have arrived at by the fact, to which my attention has been drawn by the learned advocate for defendant 2, that the provisions of the Burma Municipal Act and the Burma Town and Village Lands Act whereby lands paying municipal taxes are exempted from land tax, in lieu of the capitation tax, show that the municipal "property-taxes" were meant as a kind of substitute for land tax, and that the legislature intended to put the municipal "property-taxes" in the same position as land taxes."

We are of opinion that the view is correct. The learned trial Judge bases his judgment in the main on the doctrine of lis pendens. We do not consider that the doctrine applies to this case at all. It would, indeed, be a dangerous extension of the doctrine to hold that neither Government nor a Local body could recover its taxes or rates from a defaulter so long as a law suit was pending between the defaulter and some of his other creditors. For the reasons already given we are of opinion that when as in this case the tax in respect of which the default is made is a property tax the corporation are entitled to put into force the summary method given in the Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act against the immovable property itself, which is quite independent of any remedy against the defaulter personally.

The only question remaining is: Has the respondent established fraud and collusion on the part of the auction-purchaser and the mortgagor? In our opinion he has completely failed. The only witness called on his behalf is his clerk, Shanmugam. In examination-in-chief he says:

"I think she, (the mortgagor), had purchased it in the name of defendant 4. I say this because defendant 4 is related to defendant 1."

In cross-examination he admits that he does not know personally how defendants 1 and 4 are related; that he has no personal knowledge about the sale of the house by the corporation; and that he has no witnesses to show that the house was purchased by defendant 1 in the name of defendant 4. The appellant denies that he is in any way related to the mortgagor or her husband. He admits that she occupies one of the rooms of the building and pays him Rs. 15 a month as tenant. The corporation bailiff, Maung Aung Hla, who held the auction sale, states that the house was an old house. worth about Rs. 1,000. Accepting this as the value of the house, Rs. 700, at an auction sale for non-payment of rates, seems to be a very fair price.

The appellant states that he went to Pazundaung on the morning of the auction casually and there saw a man beating a gaung. This is not very likely; and, if the respondent had had any evidence connecting the appellant with the mortgagor, this would be of some weight. But in the absence of any such evidence, and in view of a reasonable price having been paid, this admission is quite inadequate to base a finding of fraud and collusion There is no reason whatever for thinking that there had been collusion on the part of the officers of the corporation. They had been more than usually forbearing in respect of their unpaid taxes. The respondent's clerk admits that in other cases his firm had given the corporation notice of their mortgages, and, in our opinion, they have only themselves to blame for not doing so in this case and for not making any enquiry as to whether the rates were being paid. We accordingly allow the appeal and dismiss the suit, so far as the appellant is concerned, with costs in both Courts.

Criminal Revns. Nos. 334-A and 335-A of 1929, and Criminal Ref. No. 38 of 1929, Decided on 12th June 1929, against order of Sub-Divisional Mag. Taik Kyi, D/- 13th December 1928.

* Criminal P. C., S. 423 (1) (b)—Substitution of 30 stripes for 3 months' rigorous imprisonment is enhancement—Burma Act 8 of 1927.

Substitution of a sentence of 30 stripes for a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment or more or a substitution of a sentence of 25 stripes for a sentence of nine months' rigorous imprisonment or more or a substitution of a sentence of 20 stripes for a sentence of six months' imprisonment or more is not ordinarily an enhancement of sentence within the meaning of S. 423 (1) (b) and in the case of a person under 16 years of age the substitution of a sentence of 15 stripes for a sentence of imprisonment for six months or more or a substitution of a sentence of 10 stripes for a sentence of imprisonment for three months or more is not ordinarily an enhancement of sentence.

But the substitution of a sentence of 30 stripes for a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment is an enhancement and therefore an illegal sentence under S. 423 (1) (b), 2 Weir 487; 6 *B. L. Opinion.—In Cr Trial No 155 of 1928 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Taik Kyi sentenced an offender to one year's rigorous imprisonment under S. 326, I. P. C., and on appeal the Sessions Judge altered the sentence to one of nine months' rigorous imprisonment and 30 stripes under the Whipping (Burma Amendment) Act of 1927. In Criminal Trial No. 179 of 1928 the same Magistrate sentenced an offender to one year's rigorous imprisonment under S 324, I. P. C. and on appeal the Sessions Judge altered the sentence to one of nine months' rigorous imprisonment and 30 stripes under the said Act Both the cases came before this Court in revision, and the learned Judge before whom they came raised the question whether the alteration of the sentences by the Sessions Judge amounted to an enhancement of the sentences within the meaning of S. 423 (1) (b) of the Code. That section empowers an appellate Court in an appeal from a conviction to alter the nature of the sentence "but . . . . . not so as to enhance the same."

The learned Judge referred the following questions:

(1) When an offence is punishable by whipping in addition to imprisonment can an appellate Court in face of the provisions of S. 423, Criminal P C, that a sentence, if altered must not be enhanced, commute the whole or any portion of a sentence of imprisonment into whipping?

(2) If it does so commute a portion of the imprisonment how many months' rigorous imprisonment shall be regarded as equivalent to 30 lashes?

The actual question which arises on the two cases is not quite so general as the questions referred, since it is only whether or not, a substitution of 30 stripes for three months' rigorous imprisonment amounts to an enhancement of the sentence. There is nothing in the Code of the Criminal Procedure or in the Whipping Act to show how many stripes are to be regarded as equivalent to a particular period of imprisonment, but S. 395 of the Code says that if a sentence of Whipping is wholly or partially prevented from being carried out, because the accused person is medically certified to be unfit to undergo the sentence or the remainder of the sentence of Whipping, the Court which passed the sentence may sentence the offender in lieu of whipping or in lieu of so much of the sentence of whipping as was not executed, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding 12 months in addition to any other punishment to which he may have been sentenced for the same offence. This provision of law suggests that the legislature regarded a sentence of 12 months' imprisonment as the maximum sentence of imprisonment which could be substituted for whipping.

In 1871 in the case of Queen v. Banda Ali (1) where an offender had been sentenced by a Magistrate to 6 months' rigorous imprisonment and to 20 stripes and the appellate Court finding that the sentence of whipping was illegal, substituted for it a sentence of 3 months' rigorous imprisonment in addition to the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment, a Bench of the High Court of Calcutta held that the alteration of the sentence of Whipping to a sentence of three months R. I. was illegal. A perusal of the Judgment shows that so far as the learned Judge who gave the reasons for the decision was concerned the ratio decidendi was not merely that the substitution of any sentence of imprisonment for a sentence of Whipping amounts to an enhancement of the sentence, but also that because the sentence of whipping passed in that particular case was illegal and was therefore in the opinion of the learned Judge "an absolute nullity," no sentence of any kind could be substituted for it without enhancing the original sentence On the question whether the substitution of imprisonment for a legal sentence of whipping amounted to an enhancement of sentence the learned Judge said that whipping and imprisonment are things dissimilar in nature and that things dissimilar in nature do not admit of any direct comparison with one another, and that if there is no fixed scale or standard by which the comparison can be made, the task must be given up as hopeless, and that because the legislature has not supplied us with any data from which the comparative severity of the two sentences can be determined it is impossible to say how many strokes of the cat-o'-nine tails would be equivalent to a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for a given period of time, so that it is impossible to say that the substitution of imprisonment for whipping is not an enhancement of sentence.

The next case cited Queen Empress v. Tharekhan (2) was decided in 1897. In that case the offender was sentenced to a fine of Rs 50 with 45 days' R. I in default. He appealed and the appellate Court sentenced him to 50 lashes in lieu of the remainder of the term of imprisonment which he was undergoing for default in payment of the fine. S 280 of the Act 10 of 1872, which was the Criminal Procedure Code, then in force allowed the appellate Court to enhance the sentence in an appeal from a conviction, and therefore the question whether the substitution of whipping for imprisonment involved an enhancement of the sentence does not arise. The Bench of the High Court of Bombay which dealt with the case said

> "The prisoner by appealing subjected himself to the risk . . . . to an alteration of the sentence under S. 279, even though that alteration should involve an enhanced punishment. . . . But in altering the sentence the District Magistrate was bound to substitute the whipping for the fine . . . . He could not legally award whipping in lieu of the remaining term of imprisonment, which itself was to be suffered only in default of payment of fine, thus becoming the liability of the punishment to a levy of the fine, which would constitute a double punishment."

That decision is of no help in deciding the present reference.

The only other case cited in the text books or before us is the case of Appu (3), which was before the High Court of Madras in 1897. In that case the appellate Court had set aside part of the sentence of imprisonment passed by the Magistrate, had then substituted a sentence of whipping for the part of the sentence of imprisonment which it set aside, and had subsequently passed a sentence of one week's imprisonment in lieu of whipping presumably because the offender was medically certified to be unfit to be whipped. The bench which dealt with the case said

> "The sentence of whipping is clearly illegal as it amounts to an enhancement of sentence. It follows that the imprisonment for a week in lieu of the whipping is also illegal. The sentences are accordingly set aside."

That was the whole of the Judgment and it suggests that a sentence of whipping passed by an appellate Court as such in substitution for a sentence of imprisonment always involves enhancement of the sentence. If that case and Banda Ali's case (1) were both rightly decided it would seem to follow that both the substitutions of whipping for imprisonment involve an enhancement of sentence. It would follow also that the power to alter the nature of the sentence, expressly given in general terms by S. 423 of the Code is so restricted that it cannot in any case be ever so as to alter a sentence of whipping to one of imprisonment or a sentence of imprisonment to one of whipping.

There is a large number of decisions whether the substitution of a sentence of fine for part of a sentence of imprisonment amounts to an enhancement of the original sentence but an examination of those cases e. g. Queen Empress v. Ishri (4), Queen Empress v Chagan Jagannath (5), Rakhal Raja v. Khirode Prosad Dutt (6), Bhakthavatsalu Naidu v. Emperor (7), Emperor v. Mehar Chand (8) seems to throw little light on the subject of the present reference. The learned Judges who decided Appu's case gave no reasons for their decision, and the only reasons given in Banda Ali's case (1) were that it is impossible to compare the severity of sentences of whipping and imprisonment and that because the legislature has not supplied any data for such comparison, the substitution of any sentence of imprisonment for any sentence of whipping must be regarded as an enhancement of the original sentence.

There is no express provision of law which prohibits an appellate Court from passing a sentence of whipping in appeal. There is nothing in the Whipping Act or in the Code apart from the provision against enhancement of sentence, which forbids it. It was said in Chagan Jagannath's case (5) that a sentence of fine is always considered lighter than a sentence of imprisonment and if it is possible to compare the severity of fine as a punishment with imprisonment as a punishment, and it may be noted most Magistrates make that comparison almost daily, there seems to be no reason why it should not be possible to compare the severity of whipping with that of imprisonment. The foundations of the reasonings in Banda Ali's case (1) would disappear if there were some scale or standard by which the comparison could be made. The only standard which the Legislature has provided is that given in S 395 of the Code, which says that a sentence of more than one year's imprisonment must not be substituted for a sentence of 30 stripes. But there is no reason, why we, as a Full Bench of the High Court, should not follow the analogy of that standard, and say for the information of the Judges of this Court and of the lower appellate Courts that in the case of adults we do not regard the substitution of a sentence of 30 stripes for a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment or more, or a substitution of a sentence of 25 stripes for a sentence of nine months' rigorous imprisonment, or more, or a substitution of a sentence of 20 stripes for a sentence of six months' imprisonment or more, as being ordinarily an enhancement of sentence, within the meaning of S. 423 (1) (b), Criminal P. C, and that in the case of a person under 16 years of age we do not regard the substitution of a sentence of 15 stripes for a sentence of imprisonment for six months or more, or the substitution of a sentence of 10 stripes for a sentence of imprisonment for three months or more, as being ordinarily an enhancement of the sentence. We do not consider it necessary to deal with sentences of less than 20 stripes in the case of adults, because the Court has already said that experience has shown that in this province the minimum sentence which is likely to be effective in the case of an adult is 20 stripes. We accordingly answer the question which arises on the reference by saying that we regard the substitution of a sentence of 30 stripes for a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment as an enhancement and therefore as an illegal sentence under S. 423 (1) (b) of the Code.

(a) Transfer of Property Act, Ss 59 and 60 —Suit for redemption must fail if mortgage cannot be proved being unregistered— Registration Act S. 49.

The basis of suit for redemption of a mortgage is the mortgage alleged and if by reason of some provision of law the mortgage cannot be proved the suit must fail.

Where it was clear that the mortgage which was alleged to be possessory could not be proved because there was no registered instrument, but the mortgagee who never obtained possession and had no interest in the property admitted it.

sion of the mortgaged property on the footing of redemption of that mortgage was bound to fail because they could not prove the mortgage. Kyaw Din—for Appellants.

Judgment — Appellants, as mortgagors of a piece of land, sued to redeem that land on an allegation that they had mortgaged it to respondent 1 for Rs. 143 on 28th May 1923. They said that the mortgage was possessory and that they put respondent 1 into possession of the land under the mortgage. They joined respondents 2 and 3 who seem to be husband and wife, as being persons to whom respondent 1 had sub-mortgaged the land by possessory mortgage, and they also joined respondent 4 as being a person to whom respondents 2 and 3 had similarly sub-mortgaged the land. They claimed to be entitled to redeem the land from the respondents for Rs. 143.

Respondent 1 admitted that appellants had mortgaged the land to him for Rupees 143 but said that he had never been put into possession of the land, and that at the time of the mortgage it was in the possession of respondent 2. Respondent 2 said that the land did not belong to appellants at all but belonged to one Ma Ngwe and her daughter Ma Sein who mortgaged to his parents for Rs. 143-8-0 on 12th February 1880 by a registered deed which he produced. He said further that he and his mother Ma Min Thon mortgaged the land to respondent 4 for Rs. 200 about 1921. Respondent 4 said that he received the land on mortgage with possession for Rs. 200 from respondents 2 and 3 and Ma Min Thon on 15th June 1921, but he does not seem to have produced any mortgage deed or documentary evidence of the mortgage or to have taken any further part in the litigation.

The trial Court said that because respondent 1 admitted appellant's mortgage it was unnecessary for appellant's to prove the mortgage and that it could be recognized by the Court in spite of the fact that the deed by which it was supposed to be effected was unregistered. The learned Judge found that the land in suit belonged to persons whom the appellants represented, that it was mortgaged by them to respondent 2 and his mother Ma Min Thon, that that mortgage was redeemed and on redemption, by reason of a partition of the estate to which it belonged, the land passed to the appellant Ma Le as owner, that Ma Le then remortgaged it to respondent 2 for Rs. 243 that two years later Ma Le redeemed it from respondent 2 and mortgaged it to the respondent 1 for Rs. 143 and that appellants were entitled to redeem it from the respondents and to recover possession of it from them for Rs. 143.

Respondents 2 and 3 appealed against that decision on the grounds that the lower Court ought not to have recognized appellant's mortgage which was admittedly not effected by registered deed, that the admission of the mortgage by respondent 1, who had admittedly never been in possession of the property, could not bind them or prejudice their rights, that there was no issue and no evidence that the land came to their possession from respondent 1 and that the evidence did not account for their having remained continuously in possession of the land for about 50 years The lower appellate Court said that in view of the fact that respondent 1 had never been in possession of the land although the mortgage to him was alleged to be possessory, his admission of the mortgage could not bind the other respondents, and that as against those other respondents-appellants could not be allowed to prove their mortgage because it was not registered, and accordingly dismissed appellant's suit.

Appellants appeal on grounds that the lower appellate Court was wrong in holding that they could not sue to redeem an unregistered mortgage and ought to have held that in equity they were entitled to redeem. The case is similar to the Full Bench case of Ma Twe v. Maung Lun (1) where the learned Chief Judge said:

"The basis of suit for redemption of a mortgage is the mortgage alleged and if by reason of some provision of law the mortgage cannot be proved it appears to me that the suit must fail."

In this case it is clear that the mortgage cannot be proved because there was no registered instrument. The admission of respondent 1, who has now no interest in the property, cannot bind the other respondents, and in any case it was not an admission of the mortgage on which appellants sued since it is not an admission of a possessory mortgage The appellant's suit for redemption of a possessory mortgage and for possession of the mortgaged property on the footing of redemption of that mortgage was bound to fail because they could not prove the mortgage, and was rightly dismissed.

When the ruling mentioned above was brought to the notice of appellant's learned advocate, he claimed that he still ought even on second appeal, to be allowed to amend his plaint so as to convert his suit into a suit for possession on the strength of his legal title. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ma Shewe Mya v. Mo Hnaung (2) that is sufficient answer to this claim. The appeal is dismissed.

"no power has yet been given to enable one distinct cause of action to be substituted for another"

Where the transaction is in the nature of a relinquishment and where it may be regarded as an agreement to relinquish on certain conditions by application of principles of part performance the document containing the transaction although unregistered is admissible in evidence to prove the agreement and the possession given under it and so when it is lost secondary evidence of its contents may be proved for the purpose : *A. Judgment—There is one point on which I do not agree with the learned District Judge and that is where he observed that the document, the terms of which defendants sought to prove and which was said to have been lost or destroyed by white ants being unregistered, its terms could not be proved by oral evidence The transaction alleged is in the nature of a relinquishment and it was compulsorily registrable. But the principles of part performance propounded in Myat Tha Zan v. Ma Dun (1) are applicable, and the transaction may be regarded as an agreement to relinquish on certain conditions. The document would be admissible to prove the agreement and the nature of the defendant's possession, and where the document is proved to have been lost or it cannot be found, secondary evidence of its contents may be proved for the purpose. Save and except this, I think the decision of the learned District Judge appears to be correct According to Ma Ngwe Hmon those who relinquished were San Yauk, Po Ma, Po Byu, Hla Ma and Po Kyu. San Yauk and Po Ma are two of the plaintiffs. Hla Ma is the mother of the first three plaintiffs, while Po Byu and Po Kyu and the defendants. The agreement was of the most perfunctory nature Hla Ma was not an heir herself, and the learned advocate for the appellants admitted that the alleged transaction could not be binding on the first three plaintiffs, who are said to be minors at the time. There is no reason why Po U should have been left out of consideration except that he happened to be Po Kyu's elder brother There was no consideration for the benefits received by the defendants Po Ku and Po Byu, so in this case the principle of part performance could be of no avail. Further I agree with the learned District Judge that San Yauk and Po Ma were not consenting parties. In all the circumstances of the case, it is impossible to believe that there was a valid and binding agreement on the plaintiff's part.

What the defendants could in law rely on was an agreement to relinquish. None of the plaintiffs ever admitted that there was a relinquishment or agreement to relinquish The fact that they sued shows that the plaintiffs would not acknowledge the existence of any agreement to relinquish or any relinquishment. There is nothing from which any admission on the part of any of the plaintiffs may be inferred either before or after the framing of issue. The trial Court was wrong in applying the provisions of S. 58, Evidence Act. There was nothing to relieve the defendants from the burden of proving the relinquishment or agreement to relinquish, till they called San Yauk and Po Ma as their witnesses, and even then San Yauk and Po Ma did not say that there was a valid agreement or relinquishment. The mere admission of their having signed the document is not an admission that there was in fact a relinquishment or agreement to relinquish I see no sufficient reason to interfere with the order under appeal. I therefore dismiss the appeal with costs Advocate's fee 3 Gold Mohurs

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 214=2 Rang. 285.

A. R. S. Subramanin Chettyar—Appellant.

K. Moses—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 66 of 1929, Decided on 6th May 1929, against judgment of of Sm C. C. Judge, Rangoon, in Civil Suit No 4144 of 1927.

(a) Civil P. C , S. 11—Decree-holder making application for execution of decree for certain sum—That sum paid up—It is inequitable to allow him to make another application asking for further sum—In application made for execution of decree, interest inserted and scored out and deletion accepted by decree-holder—He is not entitled to make another application to execute decree for interest—Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 11 (2).

It is inequitable that a decree-holder should be able to put in an application stating that a certain sum was due under a decree and asking for the arrest of a judgment-debtor under that application and when that amount is paid up to put in another application for a further sum.

Where in an application made for the execution of a decree, interest was inserted and then scored out and the deletion was accepted by the decree-holder, that amounts to waiver of the claim to interest and the decree-holder is not entitled to make another application to execute decree for interest. [P 183 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., S. 11—Res judicata.

General Principle of res judicata applies to execution proceedings, apart from the provisions of S. 11. [P 183 C 1]

C. K. Tambe—for Appellant.

P. B. Sen—for Respondent.

Judgment.—On 2nd September 1927, the appellant Chettyar obtained a decree against the respondent for the sum of Rs 1,704-8-0 with costs. He received towards satisfaction of this decree a sum of 1800 by instalments paid out of Court. On 13th December 1928, he filed an application in execution for the arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor. According to the statement of claim in that application filed by him, the amount still due under the decree was Rs. 165 8-0. This sum was paid into Court by the judgment-debtor, and the case was closed on 8th January. On 17th January, the appellant filed a further application again asking for the arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor. In this application he claimed that a sum of Rs. 101-6-3 was due under the decree as interest accrued since the date of the decree. The trial Judge noted on this application :

"In former application, interest inserted and then scored out. That amounted to waiver. Judgment-debtor satisfied the full claim in that application. This application is dismissed. Let full satisfaction be entered up."

The appellant then filed a review application in the Small Cause Court, in which he stated that the scoring out of the interest was done by a clerk of the Court This application was rejected and he then came to this Court on appeal. He has filed an affidavit to the effect that when he filed the first application in execution he did ask the advocate's clerk to enter interest in the application. The clerk of the Small Cause Court, however, suggested that interest would not be allowed without a detailed statement and scored out the figures Rs. 101-6-3 put against interest. There was originally an entry of this interest on first application, but that was scored out and as finally presented the application showed the amounts decreed and costs. The whole of this was entered as Rs. 1,965-8-0. The decree was shown to have been satisfied in part to the extent of Rs. 1,800 and 165 8-0 was shown as the balance. It is admitted before me that when the application was filed, the figures for the total were entered. That being so it is quite clear that the person, who drew up the statement finally, did not intend that interest should be entered therein, as the corrected figures do not allow anything for interest. It may or may not be the case that the claim for intetest was deleted at the suggestion of the Court clerk, but deleted it was, and the deletion was accepted by the petitioner. In accordance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 11, Cl. (2), Civil P.C. an application for the execution of a decree must show amongst other things the interest due under the decree The application is supposed to be a complete application It would quite clearly be very inequitable that a decree-holder should be able to put in an application stating that a certain sum was due under a decree and asking for the arrest of the judgment-debtor, under that application and when that amount is paid up, put in another application asking for a further sum. The general principle of res judicata applies to execution proceedings, apart from the provisions of S. 11, Civil P. C. If the decrre-holder wished to claim interest he clearly could have done so, in his first application. By failing to do so, he must be deemed to have waived his claim to interest. It is not his claim now that he did not know interest was due at the time. What he says now merely amounts to this :

"I did know the interest was due, but I had not immediately before me material for calculating it and I therefore preferred to file an application with the interest omitted."

This is an entirely unsatisfactory explanation The calculation of interest was a simple matter, which could be done very quickly, and certainly need not have taken the month which elapsed between the filing of the first application and the second application. I am of opinion that the application to execute the decree for interest has been rightly refused. I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 538 of 1928, Decided on 1st May 1929.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 11 — Findings on mortgage suit may be said to be binding on auction-purchaser though he is not party to mortgage suit—(Obiter).

Findings in a mortgage suit may be said to be binding on the auction purchaser purchasing property in execution of the mortgage decree though he is not a party to the mortgage suit as he in a sense represents the mortgagor and the mortgagee and so claims under the judgment-debtor : A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 63, Rel. on. [P 183 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 101 — Onus immaterial.

After all the evidence has been taken, no question of burden of proof remains.[P 184 C 1]

J. N. Surety—for Appellants.

S. Ganguli—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal from a suit in which appellants sought declaration that their house was not the house in respect of which there was a mortgage executed by one Abdul Bari in favour of Nilambar. The appellants were the purchasers of a house from Abdul Bari. The mortgagee Nilambar filed a suit on his mortgage and in that suit he made the purchasers defendants. In the written statement not a word was said about the property being different and the suit was defended on the assumption that the house purchased by the defendants was the house mortgaged to Nilambar. The first question which the learned Judge of the trial Court and the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court had to consider was whether the findings in the mortgage suit were res judicata in the present suit. The trial Judge held that there was no question of res judicata. The auction purchaser was not a party to the mortgage suit. The soundness of this finding was accepted by the learned Judge of the lower appellate Court. The decision is open to doubt, because the auction purchaser in a sense represents the mortgagee and the mortgagor. It may, therefore, be argued that he is claiming under the judgment-debtor, and that the decision in the previous case bound him in that capacity just as it binds the others who were personally parties to the suit The question did arise between an auction-purchaser in execution of a money decree and the landlord of a holding, and it has been held that such an auction-purchaser claimed under the judgment-debtor for the purpose of S. 11, Civil P. C., and that a finding between the judgment-debtor and another person as to the area of the land is binding on the auction purchaser, see : Kali Dayal v. Umesh Pershad (1). Whether the finding of the lower Courts on the question of res judicata is right or wrong there can be no doubt that this appeal does not lie. There are concurrent findings of fact and the only point of law urged by the learned advocate for the appellants is that the burden of proof was wrongly placed. This ground was also urged before the lower appellate Court and the learned Judge of that Court rightly pointed out, that after all the evidence had been taken no question of burden remained. The other point urged is that the difference between the two houses is obvious on the face of the document. It may or may not be so, but the difference may be explainable by the fact that the persons whose names were given as the owners of the adjacent properties may be successors in title to the persons whose names are given in the other document and that the road on the Eastern side might have been made after the description was given. It is, however, unnecessary to consider all these points, because I have no doubt that on the materials before them both the lower Courts have come to the correct decision and as the decision is not contrary to law or any usage having the force of law the appeal is bound to fail. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs in favour of respondents 2 and 3 The advocate for respondent 1 has withdrawn and even if he had not done so, respondent 1 would not be entitled to any costs.

Judgment —This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of this Court on the original side dismissing the plaintiff-appellant company's suit

As the facts of the case are somewhat complicated, it seems desirable to set out in some detail the circumstances leading up to the present suit as we do not find ourselves in agreement with the learned trial Judge in the legal inferences which he draws from those facts.

Dodge and Seymour (India), Limited, of which Mr. J. L. Chidsey was the Managing Director, were the distributing agents of Ford Motors (Canada) Limited, for India, Burma and Ceylon.

In May 1920, a Calcutta firm named Kilburn and Company (the Managing Agents of the plaintiff-appellant company) entered into an agreement with Mr. Chidsey, whereby the selling agency for Burma was secured, and in pursuance of this agreement Kilburn and company caused a new private company called Ford Motors (Burma) Limited, to be incorporated of which Kilburn and company were the Managing Agents and held one share, all the other shares being held by the plaintiff-appellant company. Ford Motors (Burma) Limited were registered at Rangoon on 10th July 1920. As we have seen, it was the property of, and completely controlled by, the plaintiff-appellant company through their Managing Agents Kilburn and Company. Prior to this, on 20th April 1920, the plaintiff-appellant company obtained an agreement for a lease for 20 years from Mr. N. M. Cowasjee of Rangoon of certain premises in Judah Ezekiel Street, Rangoon, and in consideration of an agreed rent, Mr. Cowasjee agreed to erect a building suitable for the motor business upon the premises.

Mr. Whitby of Kilburn and Company and Mr. Chidsey depose that it was a term of the agreement whereby the Burma Agency for the sale of Ford Motors was secured, that the Judah Ezekiel Street premises should be handed over to the new company, Ford Motors (Burma) Limited, for the purpose of their business, that the building when completed was handed over to the Ford Motors (Burma) Limited, who entered into possession in September 1920, paid the rent direct to Mr. Cowasjee, made extensive alterations in the building and remained in occupation of the premises till November 1923 ; and that by an oversight no assignment of the agreement for lease was ever made by the plaintiff-appellant company to the second respondents, Ford Motors (Burma) Limited. But the plaintiff-appellant company contend that they held the agreement as trustees for the second respondents. The oversight is easily understood as at this time the interests of the plaintiff-appellant company and second respondents were identical, both being artificial persons controlled by the same hand, namely, Kilburn and Company.

The learned trial Judge has, we consider, rightly held that as the company were not in existence in May 1920 when an agreement was entered into between the plaintiff-appellant company and Mr. Chidsey, they could not be bound by it, and that he could not presume subsequent ratification of the contract by the second respondents from their conduct. The learned trial Judge infers from the above facts that the plaintiff-appellant company could not in law be trustees for the second respondents and that the second respondents must be held to be monthly tenants of the plaintiff-appellant company by reason of S. 106, T. P. Act.

We can find nothing in the circumstances already set out to justify us in presuming that the relation of landlord and tenant was ever established between the plaintiff-appellant company and the second respondents and without such relationship the Court cannot presume that the second respondents are monthly tenants.

According to the evidence the plaintiff-appellant company never paid rent for the premises and never entered into possession of them. The second respondents never attorned tenants to the plaintiff-appellant company and never paid them rent. They entered into possession of the premises as soon as they were completed. They had them altered to their satisfaction and they paid the rent to the owner, Mr. Cowasjee, direct. It seems clear that the relation of landlord and tenant never subsisted between the plaintiff-appellant company and the second respondents.

With regard to the question whether the plaintiff-appellant company in law could be regarded as bare trustees on behalf of the second respondents, it cannot be suggested that the subject of the alleged trust was the Judah Ezekiel Street premises as the plaintiff-appellant company had no legal interest in these premises as they had no lease. All that they had got under their agreement was the right to call upon the owner to execute a lease and on his failure to do so the right to sue him for specific performance. This right was a chose in action and as such moveable property. This moveable property became vested in the plaintiff-appellant company as soon as the agreement with Mr. Cowasjee was signed on 20th April 1920 and was so vested when it became the self-constituted trustee. We are therefore of opinion that there is nothing in S. 5, Trusts Act, which would prevent the plaintiff-appellant company from holding the benefits of the agreement of 20th April 1920, in trust for the second respondents, and with respect to the agreement whereby the Ford Motors Agency for Burma was obtained in May 1920, we consider ourselves justified in holding that a trust was created within the meaning of S. 6, Trust Act.

We shall now consider the first respondents' position in the matter. They are a company incorporated and carrying on business at Sengapore. For the reasons set out in Mr. Chidsey's letter of 27th July 1921 the first respondents entered into negotiations with Kilburn and Company to take over the Burma Agency of Ford Motors from the plaintiff-appellant company. And Mr. T. J. B. Wearne, Managing Director of the first respondent company, after visiting Rangoon went to Calcutta to negotiate the transfer. On 27th August 1921, it appears from Ex. K that Mr. Smith, plaintiff-appellant company's manager, sent along with that letter certain enclosures amongst others "copies of two leases," and from Mr. Wearne's letter (Ex B) of the same date it would seem that these copies, wrongly termed leases, must have been the agreement for a lease of the Merchant Street properties which appears last in the file of the plaintiff-appellant company's exhibits, and Ex. J, the agreement with Mr. Cowasjee dated 20th April 1920. In Ex. B, Mr. Wearne states that :

"We are prepared to take over Ford Motors (Burma) Limited, Rangoon, as a going concern on the following terms," and he sets out 15 heads The seventh head is Merchant Street property and the eighth head is Judah Ezekiel Street property. From the copy supplied Mr. Wearne must be taken to have known at the time when he wrote this letter or shortly after that the agreement for leaae of the Judah Ezekiel Street propety was in the name of the plaintiff-appellant company and not in the name of the second respondents. Mr Wearne left Calcutta shortly after this and appointed Mr. Chidsey by a power of attorney to act for him. The plaintiff-appellant company's answer to Ex B is dated 2nd September 1921 (Ex. C). In it the plaintiff-appellant company states :

"It is necessary in the first place to record that the proposal is one to take over from the Russa Engineering Works, Limited, and from our firm the whole of the shares of the Private limited company Ford Motors (Burma) Limited, of which, in the event of the proposal being accepted, Messrs. Wearne Brothers, Limited, would then be the sole proprietors. The various terms enumerated constitute the method by which the value of such shares is to be ascertained,

"Messrs. Kilburn and Co. in the event of the deal going through, resign the Managing Agency of Ford Motors (Burma) Limited."

"It is undsrstood that the entity of Ford Motors (Burma) Limited, as a company will not be affected."

Of the various 15 heads set out in Mr. Wearne's letter (Ex. B), a large number including No. 8 the head referring to the Judah Ezekiel Street premises, has been confirmed, that is to say, in respect of these heads the parties had come to a definite agreement. With regard to other heads, negotiations went on for a considerable time ; but none of the subsequent correspondence indicates any attempt on the part of either party to resile from the position that the Merchant Street property and the Judah Ezekiel Street property were both to be items which were to pass from the management and control of the plaintiff-appellant company to the management and control of the first respondent company. (See the first respondent company's letter dated 17th September 1921, Ex. R). On considering the position of both parties at the end of August 1921, no other course was possible. The plaintiff-appellant company were anxious to sell their Burma Agency carried on through the second respondents ; and it would be in the last degree unlikely that while parting with the agency they would still retain their liability in respect of premises not occupied by themselves or of any use to them in their business , and it is also in the last degree unlikely that the first respondent company would take over the Burma Agency while the Merchant Street premises were still unbuilt, leaving it possible for the plaintiff-appellant company to turn them out at a short notice and so bring their business operations to a standstill.

A point of some importance is that Ex J. the agreement for lease of the premises in question, was in the first respondent's hands at the time when the dispute arose between the parties in 1923 and must have been handed over to them when Kilburn and Company relinquished the Managing Agency of the second respondents.

In these circumstances we cannot accept the evidence on the first respondents' behalf alleging that they thought that Ex. J. was in the second respondents' name. From the copy of the agreement sent to Mr. Wearne on 27th August 1921, the first respondents must have known that the agreement was in the plaintiff-appellant company's name, but they must have satisfied themselves that the plaintiff-appellant company held the benefits of that agreement in trust for the second respondents.

A further point to be considered is whether S. 130, T. P. Act, renders this transfer of the rights and liabilities under Ex. J. invalid. In our opinion there has been a valid assignment within the meaning of this section by Ex C read with Ex. B and by the delivery of Ex. J to the transferee, which is a clear indication that a transfer was intended.

For the purpose of our present decision we need only deal with 4th and 5th issues fixed by the learned trial Judge. We would answer the 4th issue in the affirmative.

In answer to the 5th issue we consider that Exs. B and C constitute an agreement whereby the first respondents agree with the plaintiff appellant company to take over the burden and benefit of the agreement for lease, Ex. J, and that in doing so they were not acting in the belief or on the representation of the plaintiff-appellant company that the second respondents were lessees of the premises in suit. We consider that the first respondents are bound by that agreement.

In these circumstances we allow the appeal and set aside the judgment and decree appealed from There will accordingly be a declaration that the first respondent-company should cause the plaintiff-appellant company to be indemnified against all liabilities under the agreement for lease. There will be a decree for the payment by the first respondents to the plaintiff-appellant company of Rs. 3,000 being rent paid for April, May and June 1923, and a declaration that the first respondents are liable to reimburse the plaintiff-appellant company all sums which the plaintiff-appellant company may thereafter have paid, or shall pay to the landlord Mr. N. M. Cowasjee under the agreement for lease or any lease entered into pursuant to the terms thereof. The plaintiff-appellant company are entitled to costs, both in this Court and in the trial Court against first respondent-company only. We allow 20 gold mohurs additional costs. Failing agreement appellants' costs of the Calcutta commission to be taxed.

Maung Myint—for Applicant.

Wellington—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Applicant sued respondents to recover the price of goods sold and delivered. Her case was that respondents, who are husband and wife and were working a rice mill at Hlaingbwe asked applicant who was a shop keeper at Hlaingbwe to supply food stuffs to them, and to the employees at their mill and promised to pay for goods so supplied, and that she supplied certain goods accordingly, that accounts of the goods supplied were settled between her and the respondents in the presence of the employees and that at the settlement respondents agreed to pay the amount then found due. Respondents' defence was that they never authorized applicant to supply goods to their employees or promised to pay for goods so supplied, that they never bought any goods from applicant themselves, that there was no settlement of accounts, that applicant ought to sue the persons who took the goods and that the claim as against them was false.

The trial Court found on the evidence that respondents did direct applicant to supply goods on credit to their employees and undertook to pay any debt "due to them" (sic) and holding that applicant's claim was proved gave her a decree against them for the full amount claimed. Respondents appealed on the ground that they were merely sureties for payments of the amounts due by their employees and that because applicant had waived her claim against the employees, they were discharged from liability. The point was not raised in the pleadings in the trial Court, but it was considered by the trial Judge who referred to the provisions of S. 137, Contract Act, which says that:

"mere forbearance on the part of the creditor to sue the principal debtor or to enforce any remedy against him does not in the absence of any provision in the guarantee to the contrary, discharge the surety."

The lower appellate Court said that because applicant had not only forborne from suing the principal debtor but had actually waived her claim against them, respondents as sureties were discharged from liability. In support of this decision the learned Judge cited the case of Ah Pwin v. See Shong Foo (1) and Williams v. King (2), and on the strength of these rulings dismissed applicant's suit No second appeal lies because the suit is of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, and the amount or value of the subject-matter does not exceed Rs 500, but applicant asks this Court to interfere in revision on the ground that the appellate Court made out for respondents a case which they had not pleaded or put in issue and that the matter was not one of suretyship at all At the hearing in this Court applicant's learned advocate says that even on the view taken by the appellate Court the contract would be one of indemnity rather than guarantee, meaning presumably that there was no promise to pay and no liability on the part of the respondent's employees who took the goods. I have read the record and heard the learned advocates on both sides and I have no doubt that the decision of the appellate Court was mistaken.

The case of Ah Pwin v. See Shong Foo (1) was a suit on documents, which the Court hold to be promissory notes, and the learned Judicial Commissioner dismissed the suit on the ground that the claim on the notes was timebarred. There was no application of the provisions of S. 137, Contract Act, but it was said that failure to sue the principal debtor within the period of limitation would ordinarily discharge the surety under S. 134 of the Act. That case was therefore no authority for the appellate Court's decision. The case of William v. King (2) was not officially reported and the report of it to which the Judge in the appellate Court referred was incorrect. It was Civil 1 Appeal No. 3 of 1911 of the Chief Court of Lower Burma. In that case suit was actually instituted against the principal and his sureties and the plaintiff's advocate in the course of the proceedings said that he would waive the claim against the principal debtor because he could not be found. It was contended that that waiver operated to discharge the sureties under S. 134, Contract Act. The learned Judge who wrote the judgment in that cases said

"The real point to be considered is whether the case should be deemed to come under the provisions of 137, Contract Act, and I am in accord with the decision given in the case of Ranjit Singh v. Nanbat (3). I do not think that the mere forbearance contemplated in S. 137 extends to actual waiver. It must mean something short of that, as actual waiver has the effect, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor, where as in this case, the claim was waived against him."

The learned Judge accordingly held that the case fell within the purview of S. 134, so that the sureties were discharged Neither of the cases to which the appellate Court referred is at all like the present case, but the fact that the Judge made a mistake in law would not be sufficient to warrant interference in revision. I think however in the present case the Judge was not only wrong on the facts and the law, but was also wrong in overlooking the fact that certain of the goods were alleged to be supplied to respondents themselves, so that so far as these goods were concerned there was no question of suretyship. On the evidence I have no doubt that respondent 1 did authorize applicant to supply goods to the employees at respondents' mill and that respondents also took goods from applicant themselves I think it probable that respondent 1 agreed to pay for goods so supplied to mill employees but even if respondents were in fact only sureties for these employees, I do not think that ap-

M. A. Rauf—for Appellant.

S. J Ali—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court reversing the judgment and decree of the Court of the first instance, which dismissed the respondent's suit for restitution of conjugal rights against the appellant The parties who are Mahomedans became man and wife according to Mahomedan rights about seven years before the suit. At the marriage a marriage agreement was drawn up setting out certain mutual obligations. One of the terms of the agreement was for payment by the husband to the wife of prompt dowry to the value of Rs. 1,100 of which jewellery worth Rs. 600 was paid then and there and another was that if the wife's jewellery was broken or lost, the husband was to make good the damages or loss. The wife filed a suit for divorce, and resisted the husband's suit on various grounds. The pleadings gave rise to seven issues in all, of which one and two were mentioned for the purpose of this case, for except as to the question of law relating to relief the two Courts below arrived at concurrent findings of fact which are not challenged in this appeal. The fourth ground mentioned in the memorandum of appeal not being pressed, the two issues I refer to are the issue 2 and issue 6 in the list of issues, namely, whether the plaintiff failed to give the defendant her lost jewelleries and whether the defendant was entitled to refuse conjugal rights to the plaintiff until she was paid Rs. 500 The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that he was not entitled to restitution of conjugal rights as he had not paid the balance Rs. 500 of the prompt dower mentioned in the marriage agreement. The trial Court found other issues of fact in the plaintiff's favour. On the issue as to whether the plaintiff failed to give the defendant her lost jewelleries the trial Court found in the plaintiff's favour because the defendant admitted having received the sum of Rs. 400 This sum of Rs. 400 according to the plaintiff was one of the two payments towards the balance of prompt dower, the other payment being of a sum of Rs. 100.

As pointed out by the learned Additional District Judge there is not a tittle of evidence to prove that the jewelleries mentioned in the marriage agreement were lost. From this it necessarily follows that the payment of Rs. 400 could not have been for lost jewelleries, but must have been for the balance of prompt dower as alleged by the plaintiff. The learned counsel for the appellant contended that issue 6, implied an admission, on the part of the plaintiff that he had not paid the balance of dower. It is true that the wording of the issue is unsatisfactory, but I can find nothing on the record by which the plaintiff could be said to have admitted the alleged default. Because of the unsatisfactory nature of the issue, the learned counsel urged that the suit be remanded for trial on the issue as to whether the balance had been paid or not. He contends that the authorities relied on by the lower appellate Court to the effect that under the Mahomedan law the suit for restitution of conjugal rights brought by the husband cannot be dismissed on the mere plea of non-payment of prompt dowry are not sound. They are the cases of

Abdul Kadir v. Salima (1), Hamidunnessa Bibi v. Zehiruddin Sheik (2), Kunhi v. Moidin (3), Bai Hansa v Abdulla Mustafa (4). Abdul Kadir's case was a decision by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court and the other later cases followed it. The authority of Abdul Kadir's case is challenged on various grounds, one of them being the reference by Mahmood, J to Abu Hanifa and his two disciples as the three masters, and his statement that in the case of difference of opinion among the three, majority should prevail. Abu Hanifa's two disciples were Mahomed and Abu Usuf. In my opinion after consulting the various works of the learned commentators on the subject the general principle appears to be that if Abdul Hanifa did not agree with Mahomed, the opinion supported by Abu Usuf should prevail. Therefore it seems to me no substantial difference between the general statement made by Mahmood, J and the real basis upon which difference of opinion between two of the three should be settled. If the rulings in the cases relied on by the learned Additional District Judge be correct, there could be no doubt that the defendant had no defence, and I see no sufficient ground for not adopting the rulings quoted above In my opinion the appeal fails, and it is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. No. 157 of 1928, Decided on 6th May 1929, against decree of Second Judge of Small Causes, Rangoon.

(a) Rangoon Small Cause Courts Act (1920), S. 35—Applicability.

Section 35 does not apply where the charge levelled against the bailiff is that he caused loss by neglecting to satisfy himself regarding the sufficiency of the security offered. [P 191 C 1]

(b) Rangoon Small Cause Courts Act, S. 14 (c)—So long as act done by bailiff is done under or by virtue of order of Court it is done in pursuance thereof though it is not in strict conformity of such order.

Where the Court intending to take a bond for restoration of certain amount sought to be withdrawn by one person ordered the bailiff to report as to the sufficiency of the security offered and where the bailiff took a wrong bond for appearance of the person, a suit brought against the bailiff and the Secretary of State for loss caused owing to neglect of bailiff to satisfy himself as to the sufficiency of the security falls under S. 14 (c) for though the act of the bailiff is not in strict compliance with the order of the Court, it is not an independent act of the bailiff but done in his capacity as bailiff and under or by virtue of the order of the Court. [P 191 C 2]

S. M. Bose—for Applicants

Gaunt—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an application to revise the decree of the Second Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Rangoon, dismissing applicant's suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council and the bailiff of that Court. Applicants sued one Gouri Sanker Tewari on a promissory note in the Small Cause Court and attached before judgment a sum of 464/4/- which was lying in deposit to Tewari's credit in Civil Regular Suit No. 8775 of 1924. Tewari then applied to the Court to allow him to withdraw the amount on furnishing security. He offered one Misser as security. On that application the Court wrote this order. "Bailiff for report as to the sufficiency of security" The bailiff then wrote his report on the same application. The report reads "Security furnished. Bond accepted. Paper with bond are herewith returned" The Court then passed this order "Granted". The bond was taken for appearance and not for satisfaction of the decree, nor for restitution of the amount withdrawn. About four months later applicants obtained a decree, but both Tewari and his security absconded Several attempts were made to recover the decretal amount by execution but without success. Consequently applicants sued the Secretary of State and the bailiff for 456-6-3 alleging "that the bailiff knowing that the defendant and his surety had no property in Rangoon, accepted their security and allowed the amount to be withdrawn."

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was of opinion that S. 35 of the Rangoon Small Cause Court, 1920 provides a special remedy and bars such suit. That view is incorrect. That Section reads :

"If any bailiff, clerk or other inferior ministerial officer of the Court who is employed as such in the execution of any order or warrant loses, by neglect, connivance or omission, an opportunity of executing such order or warrant, he shall be liable, by order of the Chief Judge to pay to the person injured by such neglect, connivance or omission, such sum not exceeding in any case the sum for which the said order or warrant was issued, as, in the opinion of the Chief Judge, appears reasonable."

That section would apply only where the bailiff or other inferior ministerial officer of the Court, who is employed as such in the execution of any order or warrant loses, by neglect, connivance, or omission an opportunity of executing an order or warrant. Here the charge levelled against the bailiff was that he had caused loss by neglecting to satisfy himself regarding the sufficiency of the security offered The learned Judge has failed to notice that the suit is one excepted from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court under Cl. (c), S 14, Rangoon Small Cause Courts Act. That clause relates to

"Suits concerning any act ordered or done by any Judge or Judicial Officer in the execution of his office or by any person in pursuance of any judgment or order of any Court or any such Judge or Judicial Officer."

The appellants' advocate contends that the Court intended to take a bond for restoration of the amount which Tewari wanted to withdraw but that the bailiff took a wrong bond for appearance of Tewari and that consequently the act of the bailiff in paying out the amount to Tewari on a wrong bond could not be treated as an act done in pursuance of the order of the Court In his opinion unless an act is done in strict compliance with an order the act cannot be considered to be one done in pursuance thereof. We are unable to accept this argument. So long as the act is done "under or by virtue of" the order it is done in pursuance thereof. These words "under or by virtue of" are used ejusdem generis with the words "in pursuance of" in Stroud's Judicial Dictionary as well as in Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes In the New Oxford Dictionary the chief current sense of "pursuance" is given as "prosecution, following out, carrying out." The act complained of in the present case was not an independent act of the Bailiff. It was done in his capacity as Bailiff, and under or by virtue of the order of the Court. The legislature does not intend Small Cause Courts, where procedure is summary, to try suits involving complicated questions of law, and so it has excluded many suits involving such questions from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts The present question involves complicated questions of law e. g., (1) Whether the bailiff could claim protection under the Indian Officers Protection Act (18 of 1850) and (2) Whether the Secretary of State can be held liable for the neglect of the bailiff We have no doubt that the present suit falls under Cl. (c), S. 14, Rangoon Small Cause Courts Act and that it has been decided without jurisdiction We confirm the dismissal of the suit but on different grounds and dismiss the present application for revision, with costs.

Judgment.—The respondents obtained a decree against the petitioner and applied for execution of that decree. The petitioner applied to the trial Court for an order directing that the decree should be payable by instalments, under the provisions of O. 20, R. 11 (2) The trial Judge passed order directing that the decretal amount should be paid by instalment of Rs. 60 a month. The respondents appealed to the District Court, and that Court set aside the trial Court's order. The petitioner has now come to this Court on the ground that the District Court had no power to pass the order it did, as no appeal lay from the orders of the trial Court. It is pointed out that an order under R 11 is not appealable either under S. 104, Civil P. C. or under the provisions of

O. 43 of the Code. That is no doubt the case, but the question remains whether the order comes under the provisions of S. 47 of the Code, and is therefore appealable, as a decree. It was decided definitely in the case of Saya Hattie v. Ma Hwa Sa (1) that such an order was appealable, and I see no reason for doubting the correctness of that decision. That being so, the appeal to the District Court lay, and this application must fail. I dismiss the application with costs.

In the absence of rules made under S. 50 (2) (s), orders of a Liquidator under S. 49 are final and no appeal lies to the District Judge. [P 192 C 2]

Where a certain Co-operative Society had been ordered to be wound up and a Liquidator appointed, purporting to act under S. 47, issued orders to pay certain sums, and it was alleged in some cases that the debts were time barred and in one that much less sum was due, civil Court has no jurisdiction, orders of the Liquidator being within the powers conferred upon him by the Act: 44 Bom. 582, 40 All. 89, Rel. on. [P 192 C 2]

Thein Maung—for Appellants.

Judgment.—All three appeals arise out of suits for a declaration that the orders of Liquidator appointed under the Burma Co-operative Societies Act are ultra vires Even at the outset it may be stated that no appeal lay either to the District Court nor a second appeal to this Court. Sub-S. 4 of S. 47 of the Act 6 of 1927, lays down that where an appeal from any of the orders made by a Liquidator under this section is provided by the rules, it shall lie to the Court of District Judge. S 50 (2) (s) empowers the Local Government to make rules prescribing the cases in which an appeal shall lie from the orders of the Liquidator. Such rules have not been framed yet, and the absence of such rules means that no appeal lay, and under S. 49 orders of a Liquidator are final and no civil Court has jurisdiction so long as the orders arise out of matters connected with the dissolution or winding up of a Co-operative Society.

The facts are that the Paungde Co-operative Society has been ordered to be wound up. The Liquidator appointed, purporting to act under S. 47, issued orders to appellants to pay up certain amounts. In three cases it was alleged that the debts had become time barred, and in the fourth case it was alleged that much less sum was due Mr. Thein Maung for the appellants has urged that in the first place those appeals depend upon a correct interpretation of S. 49. It reads:

"Save in so far as is here-in-before expressly provided no civil Court shall have any jurisdiction in respect of any matter connected with the dissolution or winding up of a co-operative society under this Act."

In my humble opinion there is no difficulty in interpreting this section The legislature could hardly have expressed themselves with greater clearness It is only necessary to see whether the orders in question were outside the powers conferred by the Act upon the Liquidator. If they were within such powers, the civil Court would have no jurisdiction. In this view I have the support of the Bench of the Bombay High Court in Ganpat Ramrao v Krishnadas Padmanabh (1) and that of the Allahabad High Court in Mathura Persad v. Shiobalak Ram (2) The orders in question were made by the Liquidator within the powers conferred upon him by the Act. It follows that the civil Courts have no jurisdiction As the law now stands there appears to be no remedy and that the liquidator is a law to himself until such time as the Local Government may make rules under S. 50 (2) (s) This being my view of the law, it is needless to consider the grounds of appeal in detail. The appeals fail and are accordingly dismissed with costs.

Commissioner of Income-tax—Applicant.

Burma Corporation Ltd. — Respondent.

Civil Ref. No. 5 of 1929, Decided on 13th June 1929.

 Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2) (ix)—Provident Fund started by company—Part contributed by deductions of employee's salary—Part contributed by company—Provident Fund subsequently transferred to trustees—There was no obligation on the company to make periodical payments to the trustees—Deductions from salaries or contributions by company not actually paid to trustees — Trustees having power to call on the company to make up shortage of its liabilities—Company held not entitled to deduct from their income sums merely carried forward as a book liability in favour of employees or trustees—Cash payments however could be deducted—Actual payment to employee was not necessary—Actual payment to trustees so as to lose proprietary right of control was sufficient.

A company started a Provident Fund for their employees. According to the rules of the Fund certain percentage from the monthly salaries was to be deducted and credited to the account of the Fund. The corporation also agreed to contribute a bonus equal to the amount deducted from the salary and sums were credited to a separate account. The company subsequently started in respect of the provident Fund. Three persons were made trustees and Government Securities equal to the amounts payable to the members were made over to them. There was no obligation on the company to make periodical payment of any sum whatever to the trustees. The deductions out of the salaries were not paid to them nor were the contributions of the company. The trustees however had power to call on the company whenever any security in the hands of the trustees was short of the liability of the company to supply that deficiency either by cash payment or by furnishing further security. It was contended on behalf of the company that the contributions of the company to the Provident Fund for a particular year were not assessable to Income-tax.

Held . that the object of the trust was not to create a fund in cash vested in trustees, over which the company had lost all control and proprietary rights but to create a body which would be able to secure for the members, satisfaction of the liability of the company.

Held further . that the company was entitled to deduct from the amount assessable to income-tax the actual cash payments made to the trustees. The company was not however entitled to any deductions in respect of the sums merely carried forward in the account as the mere creation of a book liability whether in favour of employees or trustees. It was not necessary that the amount payable to the employees had been paid to them. The company was entitled to deduct, if it had actually paid the amount or its yearly contributions to the trustees in such a way as to lose the proprietary right in and control over them.

Government Advocate—for Applicant.

Clifton—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax under S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act. The circumstances under which the reference is made are that the Burma Corporation Ltd., had started a Provident Fund for their employees. By the term of the rules of the Provident Fund which is controlled by the Directors of the Corporation it is provided that, in respect of the employees, who are divided into two classes, an amount equal to eight one-third per cent of the salary in the case of Class 1, and five per cent in the case of Class 2 should be debited monthly from the salary of the employees This amount was credited to an account which is called the "A" account, and the Corporation agreed to pay interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on the amouut so credited, which was added to the principal once every six months. The Corporation contributed a bonus equal to the amount deducted from his salary and this amount is credited in a separate account, called the "B" account, and interest was added to this sum in the same manner as in respect of the sums under the "A" account. There was also a "C" account which was another bonus credited to the employee proportioned on the dividend paid by the Corporation, and the amount of the salary of the employee.

It will thus be seen that while the money in "A" account was the employee's own money, the moneys in "B" and "C" accounts were the contributions made by the Corporation. Rule 13, Provident Fund Rules, provided that if any member was dismissed, he was entitled only to the amount standing to his credit in "A" account, and the interest which had accrued thereon, and that all the money credited to his "B" and "C" accounts should remain the property of the Corporation and R. 14 specifically provided that no member acquired any right in or to the money standing to his credit in "B" and "C" accounts.

In November 1925 the Corporation started a trust in respect of the Provident Fund to the terms of which we shall refer more in detail later. On 31st December 1925 the liability of the Corporation in respect of the Provident Fund amounts to accounts payable to the members amounted to Rs. 12,58,782-4-11 By the Trust deed three persons mentioned therein were made Trustees and Government Securities of the nominal value of Rs. 14,25,000 and the actual value at market rate of Rs. 12,61,125 were made over to them. It will be seen that no money was entrusted to the trustees, but the transfer of the Securities to the trustees may be considered as a payment of the equivalent of the money to them in cash, and taken back by the Corporation as a loan on the Security of the Government Promissory notes.

The point for consideration on this reference is whether the contributions of the Burma Corporation to the Provident Fund for the year ending with June 1927 are assessable to income-tax and super-tax. The learned Commissioner in his reference, makes a statement with which we are in entire agreement that it is not clear whether the contributions for the year in question were actually paid to the trustees, but in order not to complicate matters, he is willing to assume that the sum representing the contribution of the Corporation was actually paid over to the Trustees. In making this concession, the Commissioner practically concedes the whole case, because in our opinion, the non-liability of the Corporation to assessment or otherwise depends entirely on whether the Corporation has or has not parted with the money. Fortunately the form of the question enables us to answer it, in such a way as to enable the Commissioner to make enquiries on this point, and adopt the course consonent with the result of his enquiries.

The contention of the Corporation seems to be that when the amounts are credited to the Trustees it is entitled to a deduction of this amount from the amount for which it is assessable to income-tax and super-tax. The Commissioner admits that the contributions to the Provident Fund under an irrevocable trust are not allowable except under S. 10 (2) (ix), Income-tax Act, and he contends that this section would apply only when there is an irrevocable trust and when the employer has finally parted with his contributions. He is of opinion on a construction of the trust deed that there is no question of any irrevocable trust, since there are many contingencies dependent on the will of the Corporation on the happening of any of which the Corporation can reduce their liability and recover their contribution. The Corporation, on the other hand, contends that the trust is none-the-less an irrevocable trust, simply because in certain contingencies the Corporation will be able to get back its contributions. In this contention, the learned advocate for the Corporation is in the right. Even without any express provision in the trust deed where the purposes, for which the trust is created have been fulfilled or failed there will be a resulting trust in favour of the author of the trust of any undisposed amount in the hands of the trustees. This does not however dispose of the matter, because the real point is a different one.

We shall now refer to a case which has been cited before us. In the British Insulated and Helsby Cables Ltd v. Atherton (1), the facts were somewhat similar to the facts of the present case. There a pension fund was created and was constituted by a trust deed. The company contributed a sum of £ 31,784 to form the nucleus of the fund and to provide for payment in respect of the past years of service of the employees. It was practically admitted in that case that this money must be deemed to have been wholly and exclusively laid out for the purpose of the trade and therefore deductible under the provisions of the English Income-tax Act, corresponding to those in our own Act, but it was contended that it was in the nature of a capital expenditure, and therefore the Company was not entitled to any deduction. The point actually decided was only in respect of the sum of £ 31,784, it being conceded that yearly payments by the Company equivalent to the deductions out of the salary of the members would be entitled to be deducted from the current year's income. It is not, for the purposes of the case before us, necessary to refer to more in this judgment than a significant passage in the judgment of Lord Atkinson.

At p 219 of the report he gives a summary of the terms of the trust deed created by the British Insulated and Helsby Cables. After setting out the important provisions of the deed he concludes as follows :

" The trust deed contains many other provisions supporting the conclusion that the company have once and for all parted with all proprietary rights in and all powers over this donation of £ 31,784. "

This ruling was relied upon by the learned advocate for the Corporation, as an authority which shows that payment to the Trustees of a Fund would enable a Company to claim deduction of the amount so paid in the same way as a payment to the employee direct but the concluding passage cited above clearly shows that the real test is whether the Corporation actually pays the money to the trustees and loses all its proprietary right in and all powers over the sum so paid. The mere fact that in some cases it may be entitled to get back a portion of the amount paid out makes no difference in the legal position.

Turning now to the trust deed before us, the powers of the trustees are contained in Cl. 2 of the Trust deed They are six in number.

Clause (a) makes it obligatory on the trustees to realise any portion of the Provident Fund represented by any security if the Corporation desire it to be so realised.

Clause (b) makes it obligatory on the trustees to re-invest the amount so realised in such other securities as the Corporation may direct

Clause (c) provides that whatever sum there may be in the hands of the trustees in excess of the liability of the corporation shall be held by them in trust for the Corporation, who may from time to time, recover such excess.

Clause (d) which is the most important clause, provides that the trustess shall stand possessed of the corpus and income of the Provident Fund on trust for the members for the time being of the Provident Fund and upon a winding up of Provident Fund or of the undertaking of the Corporation, upon trust to apply all monies in their hands in satisfaction of the claim arising under the rules and secondly in payment of the entire balance to the Corporation.

Clause (e) provides that the income of the Provident Fund if any, is subject to the trusts declared by sub-para. (8) payable to the Corporation.

Clause (f) provides that if the trustees shall at any time be unable lawfully to apply the Provident Trust Fund and the income thereof or any part of such Fund, then the trusts hereby created shall determine and the Provident Fund and the income thereof shall forthwith be made over to the Corporation.

Paragraph 3 provides that whenever on any of the accounting days it shall be ascertained that owing to market depreciation of the securities the corpus of the Provident Fund is less than the amount of the liability of the Corporation then the Corporation will pay to the Trustees a further such sum as will be necessary to make good the difference in cash or some security or securities, authorised by the law of British India for the investment of the trust funds or partly by one or partly by the other.

The noticeable feature of this trust deed is that there is no obligation on the Corporation to make periodical payments of any sum whatever to the trustees. The deductions out of the salary carried in "A" account is not paid to them, nor are the contributions of the Corporation carried on the "B" and "C" accounts.

It is true that the trustees have the power whenever any security they may have in their hands is short of the liability of the Corporation to call on the Corporation to supply that deficiency either by cash payment or by furnishing further security, but till the trustees think fit to act on this clause there is no obligation on the Corporation to make any payment The credit in the accounts in favour of the employees or the trustees makes no difference. The object of the trust, as far as one can see, is not to create a fund in cash vested in the trustees, over which the corporation have lost all control and proprietary rights, but to create a body which would be able to secure for the members satisfaction of the liability of the Corporation. As is seen from the remarks in Lord Atkinson's judgment, the real ground on which the Corporation can claim exemption from payment of the Income-tax is that they have actually parted with the money.

The transfer of a book debt, even assuming that as from the date of the trust deed, the trustees are the persons credited in the "A," "B," and "C" accounts on behalf of the members does not mean that the Corporation have either parted with the money or lost control over it.

In our opinion, therefore, the Corporation will be entitled to deduct from the amount assessable to income-tax the actual cash payments made to the trustees, either for the purpose of meeting liabilities of the retiring or deceased members as they arise or for the purpose of supplying any deficiency as contemplated by para. 3 of the trust deed. They are not entitled to any deduction in respect of the sums merely carried forward in the account as the mere creation of a book liability whether in favour of the employees or trustees as it is not equivalent to a payment.

The difference between the Corporation and the Commissioner was merely as to the point of time when the Corporation becomes entitled to a deduction for these amounts. The Commissioner in view of the provisions of the trust deed was of opinion that the Corporation is entitled to a deduction only when the amount payable to the employee has been paid to him. In this, he is wrong, because the Corporation notwithstanding the provisions of the deed, would be entitled to deducation if it has actually paid the amount of its yearly contributions to the trustees in such a way as to have lost the proprietary right in and control over them. The trustees will hold the money primarily as trustees for the employees though in certain cases, a portion of the money may become repayable to the Corporation. When the moneys are so repaid they will be an additional income of that year and as such assessable. The contention of the Corporation is not quite clear. If the position of the learned advocate of the Corporation is that by a mere credit in favour of the trustees, instead of the employees and a creation of a liability to the trustees for the payment of these contributions, the Corporation can deduct the amounts so credited from the assessable sum, notwithstanding they have full control over and unlimited use of the money represented by the credit, we cannot accept his contention.

Our answer to the reference therefore is that the contributions of the Burma Corporation Ltd. to its staff Provident Fund are not assessable to income-tax, if the money had actually been paid to the trustees and the Corporation has lost the control over and the use of the money.

In the circumstances we make no order as to costs

Special Second Appeal No. 402 of 1923 Decided on 3rd January 1929, against the Judgment of Dist. Court, Tharrawaddy, in Civil Appeal No. 51 of 1928.

Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Divorce—Marriage subsists unless dissolved by Court or by mutual consent in presence of elders or by desertion for certain period—Dismissal of wife for adultery cannot constitute divorce—Partition following upon divorce by mutual consent cannot be objected to on ground of misconduct.

Adultery on the part of the wife ipso facto does not put an end to the marriage. The Courts recognise the validity of a divorce by mutual consent effected in the presence of elders, and desertion for a certain period ipso facto puts an end to a marriage but the husband's more dismissal of the wife for adultery cannot constitute a valid divorce. The marriage subsists until it is dissolved by the Court, except in the above mentioned two cases and if a divorce by mutual consent is established it is not open to either party to object to the partition, which such a divorce involves on the ground of misconduct of the other party. [P 197 C 1]

So Nyun—for Appellant.

S. C. Das—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Appellant sued respondent for partition of property on the footing of a divorce by mutual consent already effected between them in the presence of elders. Respondent denied the alleged divorce by mutual consent and said that he had divorced appellant and was entitled to retain all the property by reason of her adultery with a servant of theirs. He also disputed the correctness of the lists of property in respect of which appellant claimed partition. The trial Court found that a divorce by mutual consent was proved and that the misconduct which respondent alleged was not proved, and accordingly gave appellant a decree for partition.

Respondent appealed on the grounds that the divorce by mutual consent was not proved, that on a divorce for misconduct there is no right to partition, and that the decision of the trial Court as to the value of the properties to be divided was mistaken. The lower appellate Court found that adultery on appellant's part was proved, that there was a divorce for misconduct from the moment when respondent discarded appellant for that misconduct, and that appellant was not entitled to partition of the property. Appellant comes to this Court in second appeal on the ground that adultery was not proved.

I may say at once that I know of no authority for the lower appellate Court's view that adultery on the part of the wife ipso facto puts an end to the marriage. The Courts recognize the validity of a divorce by mutual consent effected in the presence of elders, and this Court has recently said that desertion for a certain period ipso facto puts an end to a marriage, but so far as I know it has not yet been held that the husband's mere dismissal of the wife for adultery constitutes a valid divorce. Adultery on the part of the wife is of course a ground for divorce, but I doubt whether proof of such adultery sufficient to satisfy village elders entitles those elders to effect divorce against the will of the wife. I think that as the law at present stands the marriage subsists until it is dissolved by the Court except in the two cases, mentioned above, in which the Courts have recognised the validity of a divorce effected otherwise than by the decree of a Court. I think further that if a divorce by mutual consent is established, it is not open to either party to object to the partition, which such a divorce involves on the ground of misconduct of the other party.

In the present case I am of opinion that a divorce by mutual consent was proved Respondent's own witness U. Pe Hlaw said that he attended before the elder U Sin because respondent had told him that his matter with appellant would be settled and respondent himself says that he told the elders to note that he had discarded appellant for misconduct and that from that day they would regard themselves as divorced. If there was a divorce at all at that time, it must, in my view of the law, have been a divorce by mutural consent, and such a divorce involves an equal division of property. But even if respondent can be regarded as having agreed to a divorce at that time under the misapprehension that he was still entitled to resist partition on the ground of his wife's misconduct, that is to say if the divorce before the elders can be regarded as a divorce which leaves open the question whether it is a divorce by mutual consent or a divorce for misconduct, and therefore leaves open the question of the right to partition as a result of that divorce. I think that respondent's defence would fail because I do not think that the evidence which he called was sufficient to establish the adultery which he alleged. He called the man with whom appellant was said to have committed adultery, but that man was a relation of his as well as his servant and it seems unlikely that if he believed that man had seduced his wife he would have kept him as his servant, and would have maintained friendly relations with him as he admittedly did.

The other evidence to prove the alleged adultery was equally worthless. The adultery is said to have taken place during respondent's absence in Mandalay when repondent's three children by an earlier wife as well as a relation of respondent's were sleeping in the same hut with appellant and the servant with whom oppellant is said to have committed adultery. The relation of respondent's a girl of 13, who had been invited to the house evidently to "play propriety" during respondent's absence, swore that the servant committed adultery with appellant while appellant was sleeping by her side. This story does not sound probable on the face of it, and when it is remembered that the girl is a relation of the respondent's to whom respondent had offered presents shortly before she gave evidence and that she is a daughter of another of respondent's witnesses Po Kyaing, who is a man of no substance, it is clear that her evidence carries little if any weight. Similar considerations affect the evidence of Po Kyaing who said that he once saw appellant and the servant disappear together among the growing paddy, while the evidence of Po Shin, who admits that until recently he was an opium smoker, and that he owns no property of any sort is equally open to suspicion.

I agree with the Judge in the trial Court that the alleged adultery was not proved. I have no doubt that respondent suspected appellant of adultery, and that he was willing to agree to a divorce for that reason, but I do not think that he has proved that adultery so as to entitle him to resist her claim to partition, supposing that he is entitled to resist it on that ground.

I hold, therefore, that appellant was entitled to a ½ share of the property of the marriage.

It, therefore, thus becomes necessary to consider what that property was Appellant alleged that the kanwin property consisted of 2 buffaloes valued at 150,3 pairs of gold bangles valued at 100, a set of gold buttons valued at 15,2 boxes valued at 20, crockery valued at 2/2 a looking glass valued at 5 bedding including a mosquito net, valued at 39 and clothes valued at 23-8. Respondent said in his written statement that 2 buffaloes were not kanwin property, but in his evidence he said that he did not know whether they were or not, and that at the time of the negotiations for the marriage he agreed that they might be regarded as kanwin, if the elders thought that they ought to be. I think, therefore, that the judgment in the trial Court was right in regarding them as kanwin. Respondent said that the gold bangles and the buttons had been pledged with a Chettyar for a debt for which he and appellant would both be liable and he called the Chettyar's clerk to prove this. I hold, therefore, that the gold bangles and buttons should be disregarded. As for the rest of the things, which appellant alleged to be kanwins respondent said that they were old and were over-valued in the plaint and this is clearly probable, since it is unlikely that a cane box would be worth 10 or 5 cotton blankets would be worth 25. I think that if the value of these articles be taken at half the amount mentioned in the plaint justice will probably be done. I hold, therefore, that so far as the kanwin properties are concerned appellant is entitled to ½ the value of the buffaloes, that is to say 75 and ½ the value of the other properties excluding the gold bangles and buttons, that is to say to 244.

As for the properties acquired during the marriage I disregard the value of the paddy, which I am satisfied was paid in satisfaction of debts, and I allow appellant only ½ the value of the 150 baskets, which respondent admittedly retained. The value of this paddy at the rate claimed by appellant namely 180 per 100 baskets would be 270 and appellant's share would be 135. As for the clothing said to have been acquired during the marriage I think it fair to deal with it in the same way as the kanwin clothing and on this account I hold that appellant is entitled to 132.

I, therefore, set aside the judgments and decrees of the lower Court and give judgment for appellant for 247-6 with costs on that amount in all Courts Appellant will pay the respondent the difference between the Court-fees and advocate's fees on 900 and these fees on 247-6 in the lower appellate Court.

 (c) Civil P. C., S. 115—Appellate Court deciding correctly but without jurisdiction —High Court will not interfere in revision.

Where the appellate Court has decided correctly but has decided without jurisdiction by holding that appeal lay where appeal did not lie, High Court will not interfere in revision. [P 200 C 1]

(d) Civil P. C., S. 73—Order under S. 73 is order in execution proceedings but is not decree within meaning of S. 47 and is not appealable.

An order under S. 73 is an order in execution proceedings but is not a decree unless all the conditions enumerated in S. 47 are present, and a question arising between rival decree-holders which does not affect or interest the judgment-debtor is not a question which arises between the parties to the suit in which the decree under execution was passed and so the decision of such question is not appealable. 42 Cal. 1, Rel. on. [P 200 C 1]

Judgment.—All the present parties who are Chettyar firms hold decrees against one Tun Maung, and have taken out execution of his decree in Civil Execution 121 of 1928 in the Sub-Divisional Court, Tharrawaddy on 13th October 1928. Respondent 1 took out execution of his decree in Execution cases 87 and 93 of 1928 of the Sub-Divisional Court on 20th and 25th July 1928 respectively, and in execution case 188/28 of the Township Court on 14th July 1928. Respondent 2 took out execution of his decrees in Execution cases 101 and 111 of 1928 of the Sub-Divisional Court of 11th August 28 and 11th September 1928 respectively and in Execution case 276/28 of the Township Court on 20th September 1928. Respondent 3 took out execution of his decrees in Execution cases 92 and 106 of 1928, on 25th July 28, and 29th August 1928 respectively and in execution cases 259, 260, and 261 of 1928 of the Township Court on 8th September 1928. In execution case 93 of 1928 of the Sub-Divisional Court, Respondent 1 attached and brought to sale certain properties belonging to the common judgment-debtor Tun Maung, the sale being held on 29th October 1928.

The other parties claimed rateable distribution in the Sub-Divisional Court but the learned Judge following the decision of a single Judge of this Court in the case Chettyar C. R. M. A. V. K. R. S. v. Chettyar (1) held that rateable distribution could be had only in respect of decrees execution of which had been taken out in the Sub-Divisional Court. The learned Judge's attention was drawn to the decision of a bench of this Court in the case of Kwai Tong Kee v. Lim Chaung Ghee (2) but he said that in his opinion that decision neither overruled nor distinguished the earlier case and that it related merely to the procedure between the High Court and the Small Cause Court, Rangoon. Respondents appealed on the ground that the C R.M A. case (1) was overruled by the decision in Kwai Tong Kee's case (2). Applicant objected that no appeal lay but the appellate Court overruled that objection on the ground that the decision in Kwai Tong Kee's case (2) was a judgment of this Court in an appeal. The learned Judge following the decision in Kwai Tong Kee's case (2) held that respondents were entitled to rateable distribution in respect of the decrees for which they had taken out execution in the Township Court as well as those for which they had taken out execution in the Sub-Divisional Court. Applicant applies for revision of that order on the ground that no appeal lay to the lower appellate Court, and that the holders of decrees which were being executed in Township Court were not entitled to rateable distribution.

As for the latter of those 2 grounds the decision in Kwai Tong Kee's case (2) is conclusive, and there is no room for doubt that the decision of the appellate Court on this point is correct.

On the question whether or not an appeal lay, the appellate Court over looked the fact that Kwai Tong Kee's case (2) was an appeal under the Letters Patent in which there is no provision for revision, and not under the Code and that it does not follow that because an appeal lies under the Letters Patent, there is similar appeal under the Code The right of appeal is a right conferred only by express provision of law, and in cases under the Code, unless the right is given by the Code, there can be no appeal. In the case of Balmer Lawries & Co. v. Jadunath (3), a bench of the High Court of Calcutta said that an order made under S. 73 of the Code is an order in execution proceedings but is not a decree unless all the conditions enumerated in S. 47, are present, that a question arising between rival decree-holders, which did not affect or interest the judgment-debtor is not a question which arises between the parties to the suit in which the decree under execution was passed and that, therefore, the decision of such a question is not appealable. That decision was accepted by a bench of the High Court of Madras in the case of Venkataperumal v Venkata Reddi (4) and I have no doubt that it is good law.

The question then arises whether in a case where the appellate Court has decided correctly, but has decided without jurisdiction, this Court ought to interfere in revision. Interference in revision is always a matter of discretion, since as S. 115 of the Code says that "the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit." In this case since the effect of the District Court's order was to direct the doing of what according to law ought to be done, I see no reason to interfere in revision and I dismiss the application. In the circumstances of the case the parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Art. 4 — Growing palm tree is immovable property—Burma General Clauses Act.

The definition of immovable property given in the Burma General Clauses Act applies to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and as growing palm tree is immovable property for the purposes of the former Act, it is also immovable property for the purposes of the latter Act: 24 Bom. 31; 23 All. 291; *A. S. Gunguli—for Applicants.

P. K. Basu—for Respondents.

Heald, J.—The parties to this litigation are descendants of a common ancestor, Shwe Ban, applicants being the widow and children of Maung Tun, a son of Shwe Pan's son Tha Dun Aung, while respondents are Tha Dung Aung's half brothers and sisters, being children of Shwe Pan by a wife other than Tha Dun Aung's mother. They are litigating about a poddy palm grove valued at Rs 300. Applicants are in possession of the grove and they allege that it belonged to Tha Dun Aung who gave it to his son Maung Tun from whom they inherited it. Respondents on the other hand say that they received it as their share of the estate of Shwe Pan, as a result of arbitration proceedings between them, and Tha Dun Aung's widow Ma Pyu, and that applicants are merely tenants of Ma Pyu. It is to be noted that the litigation relates only to the growing trees and not to the lands on which they stand, the separate ownership of growing palm trees and the land on which they stand being recognized in this province where such trees and land are separately assessed to revenue. The trial Court dismissed respondent's suit, but the District Court on appeal gave them a decree for possession of the trees. Applicants have now filed an application in revision against the decision of the District Court, but under S. 115 of the Code, no revision lies if the decree is appealable. The decree is appealable under S. 100 of the Code if the suit is not of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, and it is appealable under S. 11, Burma Courts Act if it is not a suit of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes, under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, but is a suit relating to immovable property or to any right or interest in immovable property or is a suit in which it is necessary to decide any question relating to succession, or inheritance. So far as both the Code and the Act are concerned, the question whether the suit is one of the nature cognizable by Courts of the Small Causes arises, and so far as the Act is concerned the further question might arise as to whether or not it is a suit in which it is necessary to decide a question relating to succession or inheritance. It is not suggested that that further question arises in this case but it has been assumed that the suit is one of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes on the ground that growing palm trees are not immovable property and therefore a suit for possession of them is not within the purview of Art. 4 of the Sch. 2 to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

In Upper Burma suits for possession of palm groves or growing palm trees have for many years been regarded as suits for immovable property probably on the strength of the ruling in the case of Po Thein v. Maung To (1), where it was held that growing palm trees are not "standing timber" within the meaning of these words in S. 3 of the Upper Burma Registration Regulation so as to be excluded from the definition of immovable property for the purpose of that Regulation But in the case of Maung Kywe v. Maung Kala (2) a learned Judge of this Court, following the case of Natesa v Tengavelu (3) held that a lease of growing palm trees was not a lease of immovable property within the meaning of definition of immovable property given in the Transfer of Property Act, and that the rent reserved by such a lease did not fall within the definition of rent given in that Act, and that therefore a suit for such rent was not a suit for "rent" within the meaning of Art 8, Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, but was a suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes. In support of the view that growing trees are immovable property the following cases have been cited namely Kishnarao v. Babaji (4), Muhammad Sadiq v. Laute Ram (5), Bodha Gandheri v. Ashleke Singh (6) and Lalaji Singh v. Nawab Chowdhury (7). On the other side besides the Rangoon case, only the case of Natesa v. Tangavelu (3) mentioned therein has been cited. The decision in Kishnarao v. Babaji (4) related to the question, whether a growing mango tree was immovable property far the purpose of S. 3, Registration Act of 1866, which like the present Registration Act excluded a "standing timber" from the definition of immovable property and the learned Judges said that "timber" meant properly such trees only as are fit to be used on building and repairing houses and that a mango tree, which is primarily a fruit tree might not always come within the term. They decided, however, on the strength of the statement of the Judge in the trial Court that a mango tree though a fruit bearing one, may be classed as a timber tree, especially in this part of the country (Ratnagiri) where its wood is often used for building houses," that the tree in that case should be regarded as moveable property for the purposes of the Registration Act. The case of Mahomed Sidiq v. Laute Ram (5) did not really raise or decide the question whether or not growing trees are immovable property. The question raised in that case was whether on partition by a Revenue Court, which had statutory jurisdiction to partition "land," the trees growing on the land passed by such partition and it was held that they did pass as being part of the land.

The case of Bodhi Gandheri v. Ashleke Singh (6) was a suit for possession of growing mango trees which was alleged to have been transferred by an unregistered deed of gift. The question was raised whether growing mango trees were "standing timber" within the meaning of S. 3, present Transfer of Property Act, which like the Registration Act excludes "standing timber" from the definition of immovable property. The learned Judges expressed an opinion that in the peculiar circumstances of that case and having regard to the fact that the tree in suit was not intended to be used as timber but was intended and was in fact used for the purpose of enjoying the fruits from it, the tree must be regarded as "immovable property" and not moveable property for the purpose of the Transfer of Property Act. The case of Lalji Singh v. Nawab Chowdry (7) related to the definition of "immovable property" in the Registration Act and the following passage occures in the Judgment

"The question, therefore, is whether fruit trees such as mango trees are to be regarded as standing timber or not. In my opinion they clearly are not standing timbers. They are not intended for use as timber at all, they are in the ordinary course used merely as fruit trees, that is to say, they are there for the purpose of yielding fruit and not for the purpose of being cut down in order to be converted into furniture or parts of houses or for any other purpose for which timber is ordinarily used. It may be that occasionally mango wood is used for the same purpose as ordinary timber, but if so it must be very exceptional. The wood of the mango tree is not in my experience of such a nature that it can be said to be used generally as timber. In the result the learned Judges held that for the purpose of the Registration Act growing mango trees are not " standing timber " and are therefore "immovable property. "

In the Case of Natesa v Tangavelu (3) a written lease of certain palm trees had been given, and the question arose whether that lease needed to be registered. The learned Judge found that the interest conveyed by the document which was the right to take toddy and fruit from the trees for two years was not for the purposes of the Registration Act an interest in immovable property since it proceeded to some extent on a consideration of the fact that fruit upon and juice in trees are moveable properties. It will have to be noticed that in all these cases in so far as they dealt with the question whether or not growing trees are to be regarded as immovable properties dealt with that question in relation to either the Transfer of Property Act or the Registration Act. But the definitions of " immovable property " given in those Acts do not apply to the Code or to the Burma Courts Act, or to the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act.

The definition of " immovable property " which applies to the Code is that given in the General Clauses Act 1897, which says that in all of the Governor General in Council Acts and Regulations made after the commencement of that Act, unless there is anything repugnant in subject of contexts "immovable property" shall include land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth but so far as the Code is concerned that definition is modified by the statement in the Code itself that moveable property includes growing crops. The definition which applies to the Burma Courts Act is that given in the Burma General Clauses Act, which is the same as that given in the General Clauses Act of 1897. There is no definition of immovable property which by law applies to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, because that Act was passed before the General Clauses Act of 1897 came into force and the earlier General Clauses Act contained no definition of immovable property, but I think that in the absence of anything repugnant in the subject or context the definition given in the General Clauses Act which is the same as that given in the General Clauses Act 1897, certainly applies to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. There seems to be little case law on the Subject of the meaning of immovable property in the Code, but in the case of Sakharam v. Vishram (8) the High Court of Bombay held that a suit for possession of a growing Jack fruit tree was a suit for immovable property.

As for the Small Cause Courts Act, the High Court of Madras in the case of Shanti v Vepa (9) which does not seem to have been officially reported said that a Small Cause Court cannot entertain a suit for possession of a growing Jack fruit tree, which is certainly immovable property.

If growing palm or fruit trees are immovable properties for the purpose of the Transfer of Property Act and the Registration Act, which exclude " standing timber " from the definition of " immovable property " then a fortiori they would be immovable property for the purposes of the General Clauses Acts which say that immovable property included things " attached to the earth, " the words " attached to the earth " having already been defined in the Transfer of Property Act as meaning among other things " rooted in the earth as immovable properties in the cases of trees and shrubs" In the Upper Burma case already cited, reference is made to the definition of timber given in Wharton's Law Lexicon, and Strued's Judicial Dictionary and it may be useful to refer to the definition given in the New English Dictionary. There " timber " is said to be building material generally wood, used for the building of houses ships, etc., for the use of carpenter, joiner, or other artisan, wood in general as a material especially after it has been suitably trimmed and squared into logs or further adapted to constructive uses.

(8) [1895] 19 Bom. 207.
(9) 3 M. H. C. 237.

The word is said to be applied to the wood of growing trees capable of being used for structural purposes and hence collectively to the trees themselves as a " Standing timber " and in English law to embrace generally the oak, ash, and elm of the age of 20 years or more and in the particular districts by local custom including other trees such as birch, in the county of York and beech in the county of Buckingham. The Dictionary cites Blackstone as saying that Oak, Ash and Elm are timber in all places, and in some particular Counties by local custom where other trees are generally used for building, they are therefore considered as timber. It is probable that the framers of the Transfer of Property Act and the Registration Act were familiar with the meaning of the word " timber " in England and used this word instead of the word " trees " intending to include only trees ordinarily used as material for buildings, ships, furniture and the like, and to exclude trees, not so used. The view that " standing timber " on the Registration Act means trees " intended for early conversion into timber " has been adopted by Government of Burma in Direction 24 of the Burma Registration of deeds, Directions, and it is clear that there is judicial authority for that view. I think therefore that growing toddy palm trees are ordinarily immovable property under the Transfer of Property Act, the Registration Act, and that there are certainly immovable properties within the definition of the General Clauses Acts and are therefore " immovable properties " for the purposes of the Code, and the Burma Courts Act, and I see no reason to believe that they are not immovable properties for the purposes of the Small Cause Courts Act I would therefore hold that the present suit being a suit for possession of immovable property is not a suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, and that therefore a second appeal lies, and that the application for revision is incompetent.

If a person is convicted of an offence under a particular section of the Code read with S. 114 and if the offence under the particular section of the Code renders the offender liable to whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment either under the Whipping Act or under Burma (Amendment) Act (8 of 1927), the person so convicted is punishable with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment ; 7 *L. Although a Penal law must be interpreted as far as possible in favour of the subject still the Court is not justified in adding at the end of the section a qualifying or explanatory phrase which is not to be found in the section itself. ### Order of Reference.

Baguley, J—One of the accused in this case, Maung Hmen, alias, Hmon Gyi has been convicted under S. 326,

I. P. C., read with S. 114 and sentenced to two and half years rigorous imprisonment and 30 lashes. He appealed to the Sessions Judge, Yamethin, but the appeal was dismissed The case has been sent for by this Court to consider the legality of the sentence of whipping in addition to imprisonment in the case of a conviction under Penal Code, S. 326 read with S. 114. It appears from a perusal of the judgment that the offence really was punishable under S. 326, I. P. C., read with S. 109. The legality of sentences of whipping in cases of abetments is not very clear and there seems to have been some divergence of opinion in this Court as to whether abetment of an offence mentioned in S. 3, Burma Act 8 of 1927 can be punished with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment to which the offender may be liable under the Penal Code. In view of this divergence of opinion and of the importance of the point (for at present moment Magistrates are being urged on the one hand to pass sentences of whipping, whenever they can be legally passed and appear suitable, and on the other hand are being severally dealt with when they pass illegal sentences of whipping) I refer the matter to a Bench or a Full Bench as may commend itself to the Honorable Chief Justice. The only recorded case that I can find on this point is a ruling of the late Chief Judge of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, then Twemey, J., recorded as King Emperor v. Po Han (1). The head-note of this ruling is:

"Persons (other than juvenile offenders) convicted of abetment of theft (or of any other offence specified in S. 3, Whipping Act 1909) cannot be punished with whipping under the provisions of that section."

This case was apparently not argued in Court and the gist of the judgment is as follows:

"The words punishment provided for the offence in S. 109, I. P. C. mean the punishment provided for the offence either in the Penal Code or in some special or local law: (see Ss. 40 and 41)."

The Judge then goes on to point out that the Whipping Act is not a Special or a local law within the meaning of Ss 40 or 41 and that therefore the offence of abetment of an offence mentioned in S. 3, Whipping Act, 1909 cannot be punished with whipping. S. 109 is quite clear in its phraseology. It runs as follows:

"Whoever abets any offence shall, if the act abetted is committed in consequence of the abetment and no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment, be punished with the punishment provided for the offence."

The addition made by Twemey, J., of the words "either in the Penal Code or in some special or local law" do not appear in S. 109 and I see no ground for supposing they were ever intended to be there. Words when perfectly plain and clear must be given their natural meaning and although I fully recognize that a Penal law must be interpreted as far as possible in favour of the subject, I do not think that a Court is justified in adding at the end of a section a qualifying or explanatory phrase, which is not to be found in the section itself. It appears to me that one reason why this clause has been added and has found favour in the eyes of some Judges is that the Whipping Act of 1909 in certain cases mentions abetments in relation to certain offences, but does not mention the word "abetments" in relation to other offences. For instance S. 4 (a) makes whipping specially applicable to the offences of abetment, commission or attempt to commit rape, while in S. 5 which relates to juvenile offenders, abetments, commission, and attempts at commission of certain offences are made punishable by whipping. In my opinion, however, the fact that abetments are mentioned in some places and not in others is not a conclusive proof that it was the intention of the legislature to make all other abetments not punishable with whipping. The offence of abetment is punishable in various ways, according to the form in which the abetment takes place. S. 109 makes one form of abetment, which has certain results punishable with the same punishment provided for the offence itself. S. 110 relates to another form of abetment with other consequences. S. 111 is the same, so are Ss. 112, 113, 115, 116 and 117. When abetment of a certain offence is specially made punishable with whipping I take it that abetment of that offence coming under any section from S. 109 to 117 would be punishable with whipping, but at the moment I am only concerned with abetments punishable under Ss. 109 and 114. With regard to abetments punishable under S 114 it seems to me personally that there can be no possible doubt. S. 114 says that a person who is punishable under that section read with some substantive section

" shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence, that is, the act or offence mentioned in the substantial section."

When a man is deemed to have committed an offence, I take it that that means that in the eyes of the law he is to be treated as though he had committed the offence and is liable to all the pains and penalties which the commission of the offence may bring upon him. If the commission of an offence makes the man, who commits it liable to whipping, he must also be regarded as liable to whipping if he is deemed to have committed the offence, for in the eyes of law he has committed the offence and is liable to all the consequences entailed thereby.

With regard to S 109, the Code says that the man who abets an offence for which he is liable under S. 109 read with some substantive section shall be punished with the punishment provided for the offence mentioned in the substantive section and does not specify in what way the punishment may be prescribed. The reference to S. 40 is in my opinion inapt. S. 40 refers to the definition of the word "offence" and it in no way refers to the punishment for the offence. The offence contemplated in this order of reference are offences under the Indian Penal Code which are punishable either under the Code or under another Act. When the Code says that they shall be punished with the punishment provided for the offence, I see no limit in the words which would restrict the punishment to the punishment prescribed under the Indian Penal Code.

I would therefore refer the following questions :

(1) If a person is convicted of abetment of an offence under the Indian Penal Code for which he is liable to punishment under S. 114 read with the section of the Indian Penal Code applicable to the offence and if the offence under that section renders the offender liable to whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment either under the Whipping Act or under Burma Act 8 of 1927, is the person so convicted punishable with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment either under the Whipping Act or under Burma Act 8 of 1927 and is the person so convicted punishable with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment ?

(2) If a person is convicted of abetment of an offence under the Indian Penal Code for which he is liable to punishment under S. 109 read with the section of the Indian Penal Code applicable to the offence and if the offence under that section renders the offender liable to whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment either under the Whipping Act or under Burma Act 8 of 1927, is the person so convicted punishable with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment ?

Heald, J —In his Criminal Reg. Trial No. 83 of 1928, the Special Power Magistrate, Yamethin, convicted an offender under S. 326 read with S. 114, I. P. C., and sentenced him to 2½ years rigorous imprisonment and 30 stripes whipping under S. 326 of the Code and S. 3 of the Whipping (Burma Amendment) Act 1927.

The learned Judge of this Court before whom the case came in revision suggested that S. 109 should have been applied to the case instead of S. 114 and raised the question of the legality of a sentence of whipping in a case to which either S. 114 or S. 109 applies. He has accordingly referred the following questions :

(1) If a person convicted of abatement..... other punishment ?

(2) If a person is convicted..... ..to any other punishment ?

It is clear that on the case only the former of these 2 questions arises. S. 3, Whipping (Burma Act 1927), renders " any person who commits an offence under S. 326, I. P. C. punishable with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment under S. 4, Whipping Act."

Section 4, Whipping Act says that whoever abets, commits or attempts to commit rape or "commits" certain other offences may be punished with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment to which he may for such offence, abetment or attempt be liable under the Indian Penal Code. S 114, I. P. C. says that whenever any person, who if absent would be liable to be punished as an abetter, is present when the act or offence for which he would be punishable in consequence of the abetment is committed he "shall be deemed" to have committed such act or offence, while S. 109 of the same Code says that whoever abets an offence shall, if the offence is committed in consequence and no express provision is made by this Code for the punishment of such abetment, be punished with the punishment provided for the offence. There is so far as I know no case law bearing directly on the question whether or not a person who under S 114 of the Code "is deemed to have committed" an offence is punishable whith whipping under Ss. 3 or 4, Whipping Act, if the offence is one of those mentioned in these sections other than rape, the abetment of which is specifically mentioned in S. 4 Whipping Act.

In the case of Emperor v. Kashia Antoo (2) which was decided by a single Judge of the High Court of Bombay, an offender was convicted of theft under S. 379 read with S. 114 of the Code, and the question was raised whether or not the provisions of S. 75 of the Code could be applied to the case, that is to say, whether or not he was guilty of the offence of theft. The learned Judge said

"It seems to me that nothing could have been easier for the legislature, had it intended the abetment of an offence ..... to be included under S. 75 than to have said so."

He went on to say that S 114 of the Code does not say

"he shall have committed such act or offence but he shall be deemed to have committed such act or offence."

In other words he is to be treated in the same way as if he had committed the offence. That is not the same thing to my mind as saying he has committed the offence ..... Mr. J. Chandavarker has recently put a construction under the words "shall be deemed" when used by the legislature as follows

"when one thing is not the same as another thing, but the legislature says that it shall be deemed to be the same thing, it creates a legal fiction, and in that case,

"the Court is entitled and bound to ascertain for what purposes and between what persons the statutory function is to be resorted to, per James, L. J. in Ex parte Walton (3). And fictions creted by law shall never be contradicted so as to defeat the ends for which they are invented, though for every other purpose they may be contradicted. Mostyn v. Fabrigas (4), Emperor v. Atmaram (5). It appears to me that this is the a correct construction to be put upon these words. The effect of S. 114, therefore, is that if a man is present at a commission of an offence he is to be deemed to have committed it not that he has committed it."

With all respect for the opinion of the learned Judge, I suggest that the legal fiction in this case was created by the legislature between the Court and the offender for the purpose of enabling the Court to punish the offender for the substantive offence, and that as the learned Judge says, for that purpose he is to be treated in the same way as if he had committed the offence, that is to say, he must be regarded by the Court as having committed the offence. In my opinion a person who is convicted of an offence under a particular section of the Indian Penal Code read with S. 114 of that Code is not convicted of abetment but is convicted of the substantive offence. S. 114 deals expressly with "a person who if absent would be liable to punishment as an abetter," and provides that such person if present when the offence for which he would be punishable "in consequence of the abetment" is committed, he shall be deemed to have committed the offence. I cannot read that section otherwise than as meaning that such a person is more than an abetter, and that he is in fact what is called in English law a principal in the second degree. It is true that that section is included in the chapter of the Code which deals with "abetment" but that chapter deals in Ss. 118, 119, and 120 with matters which it does not call 'abetment' and which in particular cases might possibly not fall within the definition of abetment and it was obviously a matter of convenience to include in the chapter which deals with abetment, a section which deals with the circumstances in which a person, who has in fact abetted an offence, and who even as as an abetter might be punished for the offence committed, is to be regarded as more than an abetter and is "to be deemed to have committed the offence."

For these reasons I am of opinion that the decision of the learned Judge who decided Kashia Antoo's case (2) was mistaken, and I would hold that a person, who is punishable under a particular section of the Indian Penal Code read with S. 114, is punishable not as an abetter but as a principal and is guilty of the substantive offence and not merely of abetment of that offence I entirely agree with the view taken by learned Judge of the Chief Court of lower Burma in the case of Emperor v. Po Han (1), that the wording of the Whipping Act is inconsistent with the view that abetment of the offences which are mentioned in that Act (or to which that Act is made applicable by the Whipping (Burma Amendment Act 1927), is punishable with whipping except in cases where abetment is expressly made so punishable, but I regard cases in which S. 114

(2) [1908] 10 Bom. L. R. 26.
(3) [1881] 17 Ch. D. 746.
(4) [1774] 1 Cowp. 161, 177.

is applied not as cases of abetment, but as cases where the offender is punishable for the substantive offence as principal. I would accordingly answer the question which arises on the reference as follows :

"If a person is convicted of an offence under a particular section of the Indian Penal Code read with S. 114 of that Code, and if the offence under the particular section of the Code renders the offender liable to whipping in lieu of or addition to any other punishment either under the Whipping Act, or under Burma Amendment Act (8 of 1927) the person so convicted is punishable with whipping in lieu of or in addition to any other punishment."

A. I R. 1929 Rangoon 207

CUNLIFFE, J.

J. R. Baroni—Plaintiff

v.

Secy. of State—Defendant.

Original Civil Regular Case No. 75 of 1929, Decided on 6th May 1929.

Government of India Act (1919), S. 96-B—Rules under R. 14—Person occupying position of Extra Assistant Commissioner dismissed—He bringing suit against Crown in damages for wrongful dismissal on ground that provisions of R. 14 and Circular G. No. 18 of 1926 issued by Government of Burma were not followed—Though he cannot rely on alleged breach of procedure in Circular G. No. 18, he is not precluded from bringing suit and decision of case will depend on alleged breach of formalities in R. 14.

Where a person, who occupied the position of E. A. C. was dismissed from his appointment and he brought a suit against the Secretary for State for India in Council in damages for wrongful dismissal on the ground that the provisions of R. 14 and the Circular G. No. 18 of 28th April 1926 issued by the Government of Burma, Central Department were not followed, though he cannot rely on the alleged breach of the procedure laid down in Circular G. No. 18 as such order is purely an executive one, he is not precluded from bringing his action and decision of the case will depend on the consideration of the alleged breach of the formalities laid down in R. 14. Gould v. Stewart, (1896) A. C. 575, Appl. A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 911, Rel. on. [P 203 C 2]

Govt. Advocate—for Defendant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this action is one J. R. Baroni, who formerly occupied the position of Extra Assistant Commissioner in the Burma Civil Service. His plaint alleges that on 9th January 1927, he was suspended from office, and on 30th April 1927, he was dismissed from his appointment by the order of the Local Government. He now sues the Secretary of State for India in Council in damages for wrongful dismissal. The suit is brought in forma pauperis. The reply of the Crown is in the form of a demurrer. It is contended on behalf of the Secretary of State that in the circumstances no action lies. S. 96-B. Government of India Act 1919, in its particulars, material to this case, runs as follows:

(1) Subject to the provisions of this Act and of rules made thereunder, every person in the civil service of the Crown in India holds office during His Majesty's pleasure, and may be employed in any manner required by a proper authority within the scope of his duty, but no person in that service may be dismissed by any authority subordinate to that by which he was appointed, and the Secretary of State for India in Council may (except so far as he may provide by rules to the contrary) reinstate any person in that service who has been dismissed.

If any such person thus appointed by the Secretary of State in Council thinks himself wronged by an order of an official superior in a Governor's province, and on due application made to that superior does not receive the redress to which he may consider himself entitled, he may without prejudice to any other right of redress, complain to the Governor of the province in order to obtain justice and the Governor is hereby directed to examine such complaint and require such action to be taken thereon as may appear to him to be just and equitable.

(2) The Secretary of State in Council may make rules for regulating the classification of the civil services in India, the methods of their recruitment, their conditions of service pay and allowances, and discipline and conduct. Such rules may, to such extent and in respect of such matters as may be prescribed delegate the power of making rules to the Governor-General in Council or to Local Governments, or authorize the Indian legislatures to make laws regulating the public services.

Under this subsection rules were made regarding the Civil Services of India by the Secretary of State. R. 14 is in these terms:

"Without prejudice to the provisions of the public Servants Inquiries Act, 1850 in all cases in which the dismissal removal or reduction of any officer is ordered, the order shall except when it is based on facts or conclusions established at a Judicial trial, or when the officer concerned has absconded with the accusation hanging over him, be proceeded by a properly recorded departmental enquiry. At such an enquiry a definite charge in writing shall be framed in respect of each offence and explained to the accused the evidence in support of it and any evidence which he may adduce in his defence shall be recorded in his presence, and his defence shall be taken down in writing. Each of the charges framed shall be discussed and a finding shall be recorded in each charge."

On 28th April 1926, the Government of Burma, general department issued a Circular G No. 18 of 1926. This circular dealt exhaustively with departmental enquiries, particularly those which involved the dismissal or removal of public servants. Elaborate directions were given as to conduct of those enquiries and any appeals which might be preferred against orders passed in relation to removal or dismissal. The plaintiff alleges inter alia that the provisions of R. 14 and Circular G No 18 have not been followed in his case. S. 32, Government of India Act (on which some reliance was also placed by the plaintiff) as far as sub-S. (1) and (2) are concerned is in this form:

"(1) The Secretary of State in Council may sue and be sued upon by the name of the Secretary in Council as a body corporate."

(2) Every person shall have the same remedies against the Secretary of State in Council, as he might have had against the East India Company, if the Government of India Act 1858, and this Act had not been passed."

I may say at once that S. 75 of 3 and 4 William 4 Chap. 85. lays down that:

"Nothing in this Act shall take away the power of the said Court of directors to remove or dismiss any of the officers or servants of the said company, but that the said Court shall and may at all times have full liberty to remove or dismiss any such officer or servants at their will and pleasure."

I have been unable to discover any later statute dealing with the same power of the Court of Directors of the Old East India Company, and therefore am of opinion that as far as S. 32, Government of India Act is concerned this section does not assist the plaintiff's claim. It is now well established law that, apart from some special statutory safe-guard, no action will lie against the Crown for the wrongful dismissal of a servant of Government. This rule of law is based upon public policy and a prerogative right of the Sovereign. In certain cases however, it has been held that a statute dealing with Governmental employment has by its provisions qualified and restricted the right of the Crown in this regard. Such was the view held by the Privy Council in Gould v. Stewart (1). There the construction of a New South Wales Statute, the Civil Service Act of 1884 was under consideration. Apparently the Act in question did not contain the words during his Majesty's pleasure or any similar words referring to the prerogative of the Crown. It was contended however, that such words must be implied or imported into any Act of this nature. The Privy Council were of opinion that that was so, in all ordinary cases, following the decisions on Dunn v. Reg (2) and De Doshe v. Reg (3), but they held that this particular Act of Parliament in Part 3 thereof contain special provisions for the protection of Government servants, which restricted the unlimited power of the Crown to dismiss them. In principle I am unable to distinguish the case before me now, from the decision in Gould v. Stewart (1). To my mind, the meaning of the words.

"Subject to the provisions of the Act, and of the rules made thereunder, every person in the civil service of the Crown in India, holds office during His Majesty's pleasure" read together with R. 14, is quite clear. They indicate that certain formalities must be observed before a civil servant can be dismissed, and so far as these formalities are alleged not to have been followed, the plaintiff is not precluded from bringing his action. I am fortified in my opinion by a similar view expressed by Buckland, J. in the very analogous case of Satis Chandra Das v. Secretary of State (4). I do not consider however that any alleged breach of the procedure laid down in Circular G No. 18 of 1926, can be relied on by the plaintiff as I regard this order as purely executive one, and not flowing directly from the Statute. The plea of demurrer is therefore dismissed. The case will therefore proceed in the restricted line I have indicated, and will be confined to a decision on the alleged breach of the formalities laid down in R. 14. Costs will be in the cause.

U. Maung Gyi—Applicant.

Naungbo Co-operative Credit Society—Respondent.

Civil Revn. No. 47 of 1929, Decided on 8th May 1929, for leave to sue in forma pauperis.

Civil P. C., O. 33, R. 5—Court cannot dismiss application for leave to sue as pauper by going beyond allegations therein.

Where the allegations made in the application for leave to sue as a pauper show a cause of action, the Court cannot dismiss the application by going beyond the allegations and taking into consideration the evidence of the defendant to the suit. [P 209 C 2]

A. Loo Nee—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The petitioner in this Court U Maung Gyi filed an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis. He alleged that he cultivated his land measuring 120 acres forming part of the Naungbo Athin land, that the paddy the produce of the land valued at about Rs. 7,000 was taken away by the respondent society the Naungbo Co-operative Credit Society by its chairman U. Aung Myat and that the petitioner U. Maung Gyi asked for the return of his paddy or its value and not having got either the one or the other the petitioner filed the present suit. He has filed a schedule showing the property of which he is now possessed, which according to him is of the value of Rs. 58-10-0. The learned Additional District Judge on the application for leave to sue in forma pauperis stated that he doubted the claim, and that he would like to examine the applicant under O. 33, Civil P. C. R. 4, O. 33, allows such a procedure. The petitioner was examined presumably under the power given in O. 33, R. 4, but the Additional District Judge did not stop there and went further and examined U. Aung Myat, the defendant, who naturally denied plaintiff's claim. U. Aung Myat is a Karen Christian, who was made to swear on the Kyanza* and, his evidence must, therefore, be rejected as not having been taken in accordance with the provisions of law. But even if it had been properly taken it should not be taken into consideration in passing an order under O. 33, R. 5.

So far as the record goes there is nothing to show that the statement of U Maung Gyi is false, and that of U Aung Myat is true. The learned Judge of District Court dismissed the application purporting to do so under O. 33, R. 5, Cl. (d). That clause provides that where the allegations do not show a cause of action the application for permission to sue as a pauper shall be rejected. The allegations in the petition do show a cause of action and it is by going beyond the allegations and considering the statement of U. Aung Myat which the Additional District Judge has no business to do that the Judge concluded that the statement of claim in the petition is not true. The procedure of the Additional District Judge is misconceived and his order is wrong There has been no enquiry into the pauperism of the partitioner. The order of the District Judge is set aside and the matter is remanded for enquiry into pauperism and disposal according to law. There will be no order as to costs since neither party is responsible for the order of the District Judge

MAUNG BA, J.

v.

Po Thin Gyi—Accused.

Criminal Revn No. 1281-A of 1928, Decided on 3rd December 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 236—Alternative charges cannot be combined under one charge—S. 236 applies when the law applicable and not facts are in doubt—Conviction in the alternative is bad when distinct finding as to facts is not arrived at.

Alternative charges under two sections cannot be combined together in one head of charge. If the Magistrate desires to charge the accused in the alternative he must frame two separate alternative charges. Section 236 does not apply where there is any doubt as to the facts, but applies where there is a doubt as to the law applicable to a certain set of facts which have been proved. While the facts are in doubt there is no objection to the Magistrate framing alternative charges, but at the conclusion of the case he is not entitled to compromise his doubts as to the true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts, and then only if the law applicable to the facts which he considers to have been proved is doubtful, he may convict in the alternative. [P 210 C 1]

Judgment.—The accused in this case has been convicted, in the alternative, either of having committed the offence of theft of two cart wheels, under S. 379, I. P. C., or of having committed the offence of having taken a gratification of Rs. 5 for the restoration of the said cart wheels without taking any steps to cause the thief to be apprehended, under S. 215, I. P. C. The case has been very badly tried. Alternative charges under two sections cannot be combined together in one head of charge. If the Magistrate desires to charge the accused in the alternative, he must frame two separate alternative charges. Moreover, the facts stated in the charge do not comprise the essential ingredients of an offence under S. 215. Furthermore the conviction in the alternative is bad. Section 236, Criminal P. C., does not apply where there is any doubt as to the facts, but applies where there is a doubt as to the law applicable to a certain set of facts which have been proved. While the facts are in doubt there is no objection to the Magistrate framing alternative charges, but at the conclusion of the case he is not entitled to compromise his doubts as to the true facts of the case by convicting in the alternative. He is bound to come to a distinct finding as to the facts, and then only if the law applicable to the facts which he considers to have been proved is doubtful, he may convict in the alternative.

In the present case there was no doubt whatever as to the facts, or as to the law applicable thereto. There was no evidence whatever to connect the accused with the theft of the cart wheels, and the facts proved were that the accused obtained a gratification of Rs. 5 to restore the stolen cart wheels, and then took no steps either to recover the wheels or to cause the apprehension of the theft. The offence committed by the accused was undoubtedly one under S. 215. The alternative conviction is therefore set aside, and the accused is convicted of an offence under S. 215, I. P. C. In view of the previous convictions proved against the accused the sentence of 18 months' rigorous imprisonment was suitable and will stand.

U San Win—Applicant.

U Yan Nyein—Respondent.

Civil Revn. No. 74 of 1929, Decided on 28th May 1929, against judgment and decree of Dist. Judge, Pyapon, in Civil Appeal No. 100 of 1928.

(a) Burma Rural Self-Government Act, S. 28 (1) (c)—Scope.

The District Council has no power to give authority to a lessee to collect fees which are not authorised by legislative authority. [P 211 C 1]

(b) Burma Rural Self-Government Act, Ss. 28 (1) (c) and 52 — Court interpreting words " on roads or streets within half mile of public or private market " in Ss. 28 and 52 as not necessarily meaning edge of either side of or part of roads or streets—High Court will interfere in revision—Civil P. C., S. 115.

Where the Court interpreted the words " on roads or streets within half a mile of a public or private market " appearing in Ss. 28 and 52 as not necessarily meaning the edge of either side of, or part of roads or streets, the error of the Court is more than an error in law for he has overlooked the canon of interpretation that any statutory provision in the nature of a taxation clause should be interpreted literally in favour of the subject and so the High Court will interfere in revision. [P 211 C 1, 2]

Wellington—for Applicant.

Zeya—for Respondent.

Judgment.— The facts of the case are admitted. The respondent U Yan Nyein has purchased from the District Council of Begale the right to collect fees from the day and night bazaar at Begale for a period of one year The petitioner U San Win is occupying a piece of land and keeps thereon bamboos, and myaws for sale. The respondent claims that as licensee he is entitled to demand fees from the petitioner, and he has brought a suit in the Township Court for the amount he claims to be due. The Township Court has dismissed his suit but on appeal to the District Court, he has been given a decree, and the petitioner has now come to this Court in revision. Accordiug to the license he obtained from the District Council the respondent is entitled to levy fees

" from those persons who expose goods of any kind for sale outside residential building within half a mile from the main bazaar buildings X X X X From the sellers of earthern jars, bamboos, myaws, posts, along the bank the lessee shall levy Rs. 0-4-0 a day. "

It is admitted that the place where the petitioner is selling bamboos and myaws is, within half a mile of the main bazaar buildings and it is apparently outside any residential buildings. The respondent's claim therefore is clearly covered by his license, but the District Council have no power to give authority to a lessee to collect fees which are not authorized by legislative authority. The section of the Burma Rural Self-Government Act 1921 which deals with these powers, is S. 28, read with S. 52, and it is not contended that any part of S 28, except Cl. (1) (c) or any other section of this or any other Act, gives them the power claimed. S. 28 (1) (c) reads as follows:

"With the previous sanction of the Commissioner a District Council may levy a toll or fee for the right to expose goods or live stock for sale on roads or streets within half a mile of a public or private market within the area over which its jurisdiction extends."

Section 52 so far as it is applicable to the present case is similarly worded. The land on which petitioner sells his goods, is apparently Government waste land which at one time petitioner occupied under a license from the Deputy Commissioner which he has since continued to occupy without such license. The place where the goods are exposed for sale is said to be 80 feet from the Strand Road. The learned District Judge in his judgment says:

"The words "on roads or streets within half a mile of a public or private market" which appear in Ss. 28 and 52 of the Act do not necessarily mean the edge of either side of or part of roads or streets."

I do not know what his authority for this statement is The meaning of the words seems to me to be plain.

It is not contended that the goods in this case were exposed for sale on a road or street. It is a well known cannon of interpretation that any statutory provision in the nature of a taxation clause should be interpreted literally in favour of the subject. The learned District Judge in the present case has entirely overlooked this rule, and has read into the provisions of Ss. 28 and 52 a meaning which the plain meaning of these sections cannot to my mind possibly bear. I am clearly of opinion that the trial Judge was right and the District Judge was wrong in his findings in this case. The matter is before me in revision only. But I think the error of the District Judge is more than a mere error in law. He has entirely overlooked the elementary principle of interpretation of statutes and has interpreted certain words in the Burma Rural Self-Government Act in an entirely arbitrary manner giving them a meaning which they cannot possibly bear. I am of opinion that the facts in this case justify an interference in revision. I set aside the decree of the District Court and restore that of the trial Court, dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff-respondent will pay the costs of the defendant-applicant in all three Courts.

(a) Suits Valuation Act (7 of 1887), S. 8—Partition Suit—Plaintiffs' share determines jurisdiction and court-fee—Court-fees Act, S. 7 (iv) f.

In partition suit valuation both for the purpose of court-fee and jurisdiction is the amount at which the plaintiff values his share and not the value of the entire partible estate: A. I. I. R. 1916 P. C. 27, Ref. [P 213 C 1]

Sanyal and S. Mukerjee—for Appellants.

A. C Mukerjee and Lutter—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Plaintiff Mariam Bibi sued for partition, accounts, and her share of the estate of her deceased grandfather Khoda Bux Khan. The suit was valued at Rs. 2,000 for the purposes of court-fees, being the estimated value of her share, but for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs 22,000 being the value of the whole estate.

The District Judge, to whom the plaint was presented, returned it for presentation to the Sub-Divisional Court, and the suit was tried in that Court

It is now contended that the Subdivisional Court had no jurisdiction and that the value for the purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the whole estate.

Reliance is placed upon the Calcutta case of Rajani Kanta Bag v. Rajabala Dasi (1), where it is definitely laid down that ordinarily a suit for partition is triable by the Court which is competent to try a suit valued at the entire value of the property and not the subject-matter of the share, which is to be partitioned.

This ruling, however, was referring to partition suits by Hindus, who are entitled to joint possession, as is clear from the sentence

"But it seems to us that in the present case the plaintiff had to establish his title and had to establish his right to joint possession, which was denied, before he could seek partition of the property in suit."

The parties in the present appeal are Mahomedans and the suit is not strictly a suit for partition of an undivided family estate, but in reality is a suit for a share of inheritance.

I would also remark that an important part of the Calcutta ruling dealing with the case shown by the vakil showing cause is apparently incorrectly reported and I find it unintelligible.

The Patna case of Ranjit Sahi v. Muhammad Qasim (2) cited by the advocate for appellants is against his contention, for it is there laid down, that there is a distinction between suits for partition pure and simple, where the plaintiff is in joint possession of his share and there is no dispute as to his title or share, and suit where the plaintiff seeks for an adjudication of his title or extent of share and for partition after such adjudication. In the latter case it is the plaintiff's share, which will determine the jurisdiction of the Court and not the value of the entire property.

In Velu Goundan v. Kumaravelu Goundan (3), a Bench of the Madras High Court took the view that in a suit by a member of a joint Hindu family praying for a partition of the family property and for the delivery to the plaintiff of his share the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the amount at which the plaintiff values his share.

A similar view was taken by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Wajih-ud-din v. Waliullah (4).

Section 8, Suits Valuation Act, provides that wherein in suits other than those referred to in the Court-fees Act, 1870, S. 7, para. 5, 6 and 9 and para. 10, Cl (d), Court-fees are payable ad valorem under the Court-fees Act, 1870, the value as determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for the purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same.

In the present suit court-fees are payable ad valorem and the suit is not of any of the classes referred to in the paragraphs of S. 7, Court-fees Act, mentioned.

The value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction must therefore be taken to be Rs. 2,000 and the suit was rightly instituted in the Sub-Divisional Court.

On the merits it is argued that the District Court's finding that the children's claim to the masonry building was not barred by limitation, was wrong, that the mortgage-deed executed by Khoda Bux and Rahamat Bibi in favour of Mr. Chatterjee was not legally admitted as an exhibit and should not have been treated as evidence, and that the Court was not justified in holding that the building in question belonged to Rahamat Bibi, wife of Khoda Bux.

Both Courts have relied upon the recital in the mortgage deed referred to (filed at p. 105 of the trial record and marked Ex. I) as proving that the building belonged to Rahamat Bibi.

The particulars required by O. 13, R. 4 have not been endorsed on the document in question and it has not been signed or initialled by the Judge.

It is contended accordingly on the authority of Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (5) that this Court ought to refuse to read the document or allow it to be treated as evidence.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 320=52 Cal. 128.
(2) A. I. R. 1923 Pat. 342=2 Pat. 432.
(3) [1896] 20 Mad. 289=7 M. L. J. 30.
(4) [1902] 24 All. 381=(1902) A.W.N. 88.
(5) A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 27=38 All. 627=43 I. A. 212 (P.C.).

In the case cited their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that in future, in order to prevent injustice, they would be obliged on the hearing of Indian appeals to refuse to read or permit to be used any document not endorsed in the manner required.

Apart from the obvious comment that their Lordships were laying down a rule of procedure to be observed in appeals before them, it has been overlooked entirely that the mortgage-deed in question was put in as an exhibit before the commissioner appointed to take the evidence of Mr Chatterjee, that Mr. Chatterjee proved the document and that it was endorsed by the commissioner as Ex. I, initialled and dated by him on the date on which Mr. Chatterjee was examined.

Under O. 26, R. 7, when a commission has been duly executed and returned, the commission and the return thereto and the evidence taken under it "shall" form part of the record of the suit.

The document was not objected to before the commissioner and apparently not at all in either of the Courts below It is therefore part of the record of the suit rightly and, having been duly proved, is evidence.

The mere fact that the trial Judge omitted to have the endorsement required by O. 13, R 4 made cannot in the circumstances render a document proved before the commissioner, marked by him as an exhibit, initialled and dated, inadmissible as evidence.

The document clearly proves that Rahamat Bibi was the owner of the building in dispute.

The trial Court held that, as Khoda Bux had the building in his possession for 20 years after his first wife's death, and there was no evidence to show that he held it on behalf of the co-heirs, the claim of the other heirs to shares was barred by limitation.

On appeal the learned District Judge, in an able and lucid judgment, held that there was nothing to indicate that Khoda Bux's possession of the building was adverse to his children by Rahamat Bibi and that the natural presumption was that he was in possession on their behalf as well as his own.

I have no doubt that the case of Hari Pru v Mi Aung Kraw Zan (6) remains sound law and that where a co-owner is in possession of undivided property under the circumstances in evidence there is a presumption that he is in possession on behalf of all the co-heirs

Consequently it would be necessary to prove an overt claim to exclusive ownership by Khoda Bux more than 12 years prior to the suit in order to escape from the effects of the presumption No such claim was proved.

The District Court was on this view right in holding that the claim to the building was not barred by limitation.

The appeal therefore fails and will be dismissed with costs.

Special Second Appeal No 25 of 1929, Decided on 21st June 1929, from judgment of Dist Judge, Thaton, in Civil Appeal No. 96 of 1928.

(a) Burmese Law (Buddhist) — Burmese wife transferring property inherited from parents by contract of sale under such circumstances as to raise strong presumption that she was acting on behalf of marriage partnership—Such transfer is binding both on husband and wife though husband is not active party.

Where a person obtained possession under a contract of sale made by a Burmese wife of property inherited from her parents and she disposed of the property under such circumstances as to raise a strong presumption that she was acting on behalf of the marriage partnership, the transfer is a good transfer binding both husband and wife, though the husband may not be an active party to the transfer *A. P. K Basu—for Appellants

Judgment — Respondents 1 and 5 brought a suit against the appellants and respondent 6 in the Sub-Divisional

Court of Pa-an for possession of certain land. Respondent 1 Maung Nge was married to one Nan Pun and respondents 2 to 5 are his children by Nan Pun. The plaint sets forth that the land in suit was the property of Maung Nge and Nan Pun, and that the defendants are in wrongful possession thereof. It does not state how the defendants came into possession. The defendants pleaded that possession of the land was given by Nan Pun during her lifetime under a contract of sale, and that the sum of 900 was paid as consideration Plaintiff 1 when examined stated that he did not know of his own knowledge about this alleged transaction, but that his wife told him that she had mortgaged the land to the respondents, Aung Bin and Ma Tun.

The defendants called evidence to prove that they obtained possession under a contract of sale, and their evidence on this point was believed by the trial Judge. Maung Nge himself was admittedly not an active party to the transfer but in accordance with the principle approved in the case of Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpaw (1), the trial Court held that the transfer by Ma Nan Pun was a good transfer, binding both husband and wife. The plaintiff's suit was therefore dismissed.

The plaintiffs appealed and the District Court modified the decree by directing that one-third of the land be given to the plaintiffs Against this decree the defendants have appealed, and the plaintiffs have filed cross-objections. The land in question was admittedly inherited by Ma Nan Pun from her parents, and in my opinion the trial Court was right in following the principles laid down in Ma Paing's case The District Judge appears to have thought that those principles would not be applicable because the transfer had taken place before the decision in Ma Paing's case. But there is nothing in the judgment in that case to justify any such interpretation of its meaning. In so far as the finding in that case differs from earlier decisions, it interpreted the law in a different manner from previous interpretations, but no Court has the power to make a fresh law, nor did the Full Bench which decided Ma Paing's case purport to do so. The principles approved in that case were held to be principles underlying Burmese Buddhist Law, and if the decision is correct, they were applicable in 1917 no less than in 1927

In the present case, it is admitted that the money which Ma Nan Pun obtained was used to pay off the family debts. The property had been inherited by her, and the circumstances are such as to raise a strong presumption that in disposing of the property she was acting on behalf of the marriage partnership. The District Judge was therefore in my opinion in error in holding that the plaintiffs were entitled to a third share in the land. In the cross-objection one of the grounds is that there is no satisfactory oral evidence as to the alleged transfer. On this point, there was a definite finding by the trial Judge against the respondents, and although the respondents appealed against the trial Court's judgment they did not in their appeal to the District Court question the correctness of the trial Court's finding of fact. They cannot therefore be allowed to raise this point now In my opinion the case was rightly decided by the trial Court. I set aside the decree of the District Court and restore that of the trial Court dismissing the suit of the plaintiff-respondents. The plaintiff-respondents will pay the costs of the defendant-appellants in all three Courts.

First Appeal No 215 of 1928, Decided on 18th February 1929, from judgment of Original Side in Civil Regular No 287 of 1927.

Religious Endowments — Shwe Dagon Pagoda—Under scheme framed by late Court of Recorder of Rangoon in Civil Regular Suit No 139 of 1884 property within precincts of Pagoda grant is vested in trustees and they have sole right to repair buildings such as Zayats.

Under a scheme framed by the late Court of the Recorder of Rangoon in the Civil Regular Suit No. 139 of 1884, the property within the precincts of the Pagoda grant is vested in the trustees and they have the sole right to repair buildings such as zayats, and although bye-law of the trustees mentions that a register shall be kept by them for the purpose of requesting the original donor and his representatives and descendants to undertake the repairs, the maintaining of such register is purely a matter of grace on the part of the trustees and the High Court has no power to act as a Court of appeal or revision from any decision which the trustees might make as to what name should be entered in the register.

E. Maung—for Respondents

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Original Side of this Court, dismissing the plaintiff-appellant's suit, which was for a declaration that she had the sole right to do repairs to the zayat situated at the southern slope of the Shwe Dagon Pagoda now registered wrongly in the name of Daw Kyin as against the defendant-respondents. The defence set up in para 10 of the written statement stated:

"That the zayat, being property subject to a charitable trust under a scheme framed by the late Court of the Recorder of Rangoon in Civil Regular Suit No. 139 of 1884, the trustees of the Shwe Dagon Pagoda appointed under the said scheme have full legal title to and control over the zayat in suit, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this suit against the defendants."

A reference to the scheme shows that amongst the duties of the trustees are enumerated the following :

"(i) They shall, out of the trust funds, keep in repair the said pagoda, and the pagoda, zayats, and other buildings connected therewith, and the platform thereof, and the steps leading thereto.

(ii) They shall control the erection of new pagodas, zayats, spiral sheds, altars, idols, flag-poles, and bells on the above * * *.

They shall have control over all offerings made at the said pagoda and all other property held in trust for the purposes of the said pagoda."

Though, in the scheme, no paragraph specifically vests the property in the trustees, the decree in the said suit—Civil Regular No. 139 of 1884—has the following paragraph :

"And it is further ordered and decreed that all the funds and property now held for the purposes of the said decree shall be, and the same is, hereby vested in the abovementioned persons as trustees of the same for the purposes of the said pagoda."

We are satisfied that the property within the precincts of the Pagoda grant is vested in the trustees, and that they —and they only—have the right to repair buildings, such as zayats. This has not been disputed by the appellant and the trustees have not been joined as parties to the present suit.

The Rules and Regulations of the Shwe Dagon Pagoda Trust (Ex A), set out this very clearly :

"* * * All the kuthodaws built and standing on the Sacred Hill shall be repaired, decorated and maintained only by the pagoda trustees according to their will and pleasure * * *."

The trustees in the exercise of their will and pleasure may request the original donor or his or her representative or descendants to undertake the repairs, and their bye-law goes on to mention that for this purpose a register shall be kept by them, and the names of such descendants may be changed as may be necessary through death or migration elsewhere. But the reading of this bye-law as a whole makes it clear that the maintaining of such a register is purely an act of grace on the part of the trustees, and entries on such register are matters with which they (the trustees), are only concerned

In effect the appellant is asking this Court to act as a Court of appeal or revision from the acts of the trustees. Our simple answer is that we have no such power From any decision which the trustees might make as to what name should be entered on this register, there is no appeal to this Court. They are in a much better position to come to a right decision than we are, and it is clear that they were acting within their powers. The appeal accordingly fails and must be dismissed with costs, seven gold mohurs.

U Po Min—Plaintiff—Respondent.

First Appeal No. 6 of 1929, Decided on 19th June 1929, from a decree of Dist. Judge, Yamathin.

Civil P. C., O. 17, R. 1 (1)—On day fixed for hearing, case not called until 2 p.m.—Six witnesses for plaintiff examined and 40 witnesses for defendant present — Defendant's advocate appearing in other Court and defendant applying for adjournment but Court refusing—Though defendant has not shown sufficient cause for not being ready with his case, Court should use its discretion in allowing adjournment.

On the day fixed for hearing the case was not called until 2 p. m., and 6 witnesses for the plaintiff were examined and 40 witnesses for the defendant were present. The defendant asked for adjournment on the ground that his advocate was appearing in some other suit and the Court refused the application.

Held that although the defendant had not shown sufficient cause for not being ready with his case, the Court should exercise its discretion in allowing an adjournment for even if the defendant's advocate had been present it would have been impossible to proceed very far with the defence case on the day. [P 216 C 2]

Aiyangar—for Appellants.

Po Aye—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The respondent brought a suit in the District Court of Yamethin for possession of 146 67 acres of land. The case was originally fixed for hearing of witnesses on 2nd and 3rd November 1928. On 3rd November 1928, the plaintiff was examined and an adjournment was then allowed owing to the absence of certain maps. The case was then fixed for hearing on 14th November 1928. The diary entry of that date reads as follows :

" Called. Plaintiff and defendants present. Pleader for plaintiff present. Defendant 1 says he and his witnesses will be examined when his pleader appears Six prosecution witnesses examined. Plaintiff closes his case. Defendant 1 states he will not examine his witnesses as his pleader is absent. Judgment on 17th November 1928, parties warned. All defence witnesses present."

On 28th November 1928, an application supported by affidavit was filed asking that the defendants might be allowed to examine their witnesses before judgment was delivered. The Judge passed orders on this application, the next day refusing to allow it, and delivered judgment the same day. The present appeal is filed on the ground that the defendants should under the circumstances have been given an opportunity of examining their witnesses. Affidavits have been filed in which it is stated that the case was not called on 14th until 2 p. m and that when the defendants asked for an adjournment on the ground that their advocate was appearing in the Sessions Court at Pyinmana, the application was refused.

No counter affidavits have been filed, and we may accept these statements as correct. Six witnesses were examined for the plaintiff on 14th November 1928, and it must, therefore, have been getting very late in the afternoon when the plaintiff closed his case. It appears that some 40 witnesses for the defendants were present The defendant had not perhaps shown sufficient reason for not being ready with their case ; but in the special circumstances we think that the trial Court should have exercised his discretion in allowing an adjournment on the payment of costs. Even had the defendant's advocate been there, it would have been impossible to proceed very far with the defence case on 14th November 1928. We accordingly set aside the decree of the trial Court and remand the case to that Court for the defendants to be allowed to produce their evidence on their first paying to the plaintiff the costs of the adjournment, advocate's fee, 3 gold mohurs. Appellants will be entitled to a refund of the court-fees paid in this appeal, but will pay the respondent, his costs in this appeal 2 gold mohurs

(b) Divorce Act, S. 2—Domicile illustrated.

Husband and wife were residing in India since their marriage in 1918. Husband said that he was domiciled in India and had no intention of returning to England. Wife also said that she intended settling in India and did not mean to go back to England.

Held, that there was no reason not to accept their statements that they had made India their domicile. [P 217 C 1]

Judgment. — The District Judge, Mandalay, has passed a decree for dissolution of marriage in favour of one Earnest Walker Blackmore against Mrs. Nora Blackmore, and has referred the proceedings to this Court for confirmation. The proceedings were taken under the Divorce Act and by S. 2 of that Act as amended by Act 25 of 1926 the District Court only has jurisdiction in cases where the parties to the marriage are domiciled in India at the time when the petition is presented. Of the parties to the marriage in this case, the petitioner was born in England and the respondent at Allahabad. The petitioner says that he has been with the Indian Army since 1913 that is, for some 15 years, that he is domiciled in India and that he has no intention of returning to England, and the respondent also says that she intends settling in India and does not mean to go back to Ireland or Britain The parties have certainly been residing in India ever since their marriage in the year 1918, and we see no reason why we should not accept their statements that they have made India their domicile The District Court therefore had jurisdiction in the matter.

The petition filed by the petitioner sets forth that the parties were married in 1918 and have three children. A fourth child was born to the respondent but the paternity of that child is denied by the petitioner. In December 1927 the respondent left the petitioner who was then in Rangoon and went to Mandalay. She has admitted committing adultory there with a person unnamed. Later on the petitioner was transferred to Mandalay and the parties lived together again from 19th April 1928. They remained under the same roof until the 8th July when the respondent left the petitioner taking her children with her. The petition further sets forth that the petitioner has reason to suspect the respondent's relations with the co-respondent, but he makes no definite allegation of adultery with him

The respondent in her written statement denies the charge of adultery. She has since, however, admitted that the fourth child is not by her husband. The District Judge has held that adultery with the co-respondent has not been proved but that it is clear that she had previously committed adultery with others in India and that she has subsequently been unfaithful in Mandalay. Although there was a temporary condonation of these matrimonial offences, the subsequent desertion revived the offences and he therefore gave a decree for divorce.

The learned District Judge has dealt with the facts at some length in his judgment and we agree with him generally thereon. There is certainly no proof of adultery with the co-respondent. It is admitted, however, that the fourth child who was born in Bombay in about June 1927 is not the petitioner's child and in a letter, Ex. H, dated 16th April 1928 the respondent wrote :

" Since leaving you on the 24th December I have been unfaithful to you, having committed adultory with a certain person. This took place in January, while living at the Grand Hotel."

The petitioner has also given oral evidence as to alleged admission by the respondent to him. The respondent says that she wrote this letter because at that time she wished him to divorce her, and that the statement in it as to her committing adultery is not true, But this does not sound very convincing and we accept the District Judge's conclusion that adultery with some persons unknown in Mandalay was proved.

The respondent left the petitioner four days before he filed his petition and has lived apart from him ever since. This does not seem to have been with the consent of the petitioner. In the case of Constance Catherine Moreuo v. Henry William Bunn Moreno (1), at p. 1075 Mukerji, J., remarks:

"We may then treat it as well settled that condonation of past matrimonial offences is impliedly conditioned upon the future good behaviour of the offending spouse, and it follows that if after condonation, the offences are repeated, the right to make the condoned offences a ground for divorce revives to constitute revival of the condoned offences, the offending spouse need not, however, be guilty of offences of the same character as that condoned: any misconduct is sufficient which indicates that the condonation was not accepted in good faith and upon the reasonable conditions implied."

We agree that in the present case the desertion was a sufficient ground for making the previous allegation of adultery a ground for making the previous allegation of adultery a ground for divorce Neither of these adulterers has been joined as co-respondents in the case, but with regard to the offence in Mandalay, it is clear that the name of the adulterer is unknown to the petitioner, and cannot be found out by him. That being so, the petitioner has a good ground for being excused by the Court under S. 11 of the Act from naming this adulterer. There is no suggestion of collusion in this case and we think the decree for divorce is justified. We accordingly confirm the decree.

K. C. Bose—for Appellant.

Hay—for Respondents

Judgment.—The appellant in this case, Ma Thein, claims to be the adopted daughter of U Maung Maung and his wife, Ma Pwa, deceased. After the death of Ma Pwa, U Maung Maung married Ma Mya, the respondent, who is a sister of Ma Pwa, and the appellant claims that she was again adopted by U Maung Maung and Ma Mya U Maung Maung died in 1914, and in 1918 Ma Mya married one Ba Than. The appellant claims partition of property on the ground that her surviving adoptive parent has married again. The suit has been dismissed on the preliminary ground that such a suit does not lie. Two questions arose for decision. It was contended in the first instance that under Burmese Buddhist Law, when one parent died and the surviving parent remarried, the kanitha children of the first marriage had no right to claim partition of property as against the surviving parent, and, secondly, it was claimed that, even if the kanitha children were entitled to claim, an adopted child would have no such right.

On the first point the learned trial Judge held that he was bound by the ruling of a Bench of this Court in the case of Maung Po Kin v Maung Tun Yin (1). But on the second point he held in favour of the defendants, and, therefore, dismissed the suit. The appellant, while, of course, supporting the finding of the trial Judge on the first point contends that he was wrong on the second point, and that an adopted child has the same right as natural children to claim partition on remarriage of the surviving parent. That a keiktima child is not in every respect, so far as inheritance is concerned, in the same position as natural children was decided in the case of Maung Po An v. Ma Dwe (2), where it was held that a keiktima adopted son could not claim from the adoptive mother her auratha son's quarter share of the estate on the death of the adoptive father, and the learned trial Judge has held that on the same analogy an adopted child cannot claim partition on remarriage

(1) A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 211=4 Rang. 207.
(2) A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 148=4 Rang. 184 (F.B.).

We think that it will be more convenient in this appeal to deal with the first question raised before the trial Court first. It is argued before us on behalf of the respondents that, while the trial Court was perfectly right in holding that the adopted child cannot claim partition on remarriage, the decision in Maung Po Kin's case (1) was wrong. If we agree with him on this point, the second question raised does not arise; and, if we do not agree with the contention on this point, it will still be necessary to consider the principles on which Maung Po Kin's case (1) was decided to enable us to come to a decision as to whether the general rights of kanitha children in this respect is a right shared also by adopted children. Before Maung Po Kin's case (1) was decided there were two directly contrary decisions bearing on this point. In the case of Ma Thin v. Ma Wa Yon (3) it was held that a daughter, being an only child, is entitled to claim a one-fourth share of her parents' joint estate from her mother, when the latter remarries after the father's death. The question then decided had reference only to the case of an eldest daughter, but the learned Judges who decided the case were clearly of opinion that the children generally were entitled to claim partition on remarriage

A directly contrary view of the law was taken in Upper Burma in the case of Mi The O v. Mi Swe (4). In that case the late Mr. McColl held that on the remarriage of her mother, the eldest daughter could not make a general claim on the estate; and, if he is right in this contention, clearly the kanitha children could make no such claim. There is no direct reference to Mi The O's case (4) in the judgment in the case of Maung Po Kin (1). There is, however, a reference to an earlier case, that of Maung Shwe Ywet v Maung Tun Shein (5) in which Mi The O's case was referred to. The correctness of the decision in Mi The O's case (4) was not then directly in question, but Heald, J. in his judgment expressed a doubt as to whether the decision was good law. The Bench decision of this Court in Maung Po Kin's case (1) is admittedly not founded on any texts in the Manugye Dhammathat and admittedly the Manugye Dhammathat is binding on us if its provisions are clear on the point. That was definitely decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ma Hnin Bwin v. U Shwe Gon (6). It is to be noted that Mi The O's case (4) appears to have been decided before the decision of the Privy Council in Ma Hnin Bwin's case (6) but Mr. McColl nevertheless based his decision in that case in part on the Manugye. He does not, however, deal with the provisions of the Manugye Dhammathat on the point in any detail.

In Ma Thin's case (3), from the decision in which he was dissenting, Birks, J., remarked:

"* * * the Manugye, Manu, Amwebon seem to say that the eldest daughter is merely entitled to a one-fourth share of the father's clothes and ornaments."

The provisions of the Manugye Dhammathat were exhaustively discussed by Heald, J., in Maung Shwe Ywet's case (5) and he came to the definite conclusion that the provisions of this Dhammathat on the question whether an eldest child other than the auratha, can claim partition on the remarriage of the surviving parent were by no means clear. That view was impliedly adopted by a Bench of this Court in Maung Po Kin's case (1), which was only a development of Maung Shwe Ywet's case (5). Admittedly the point is one on which the Dhammathats themselves are in conflict and it is possible to cite texts from them in support of either view.

After a consideration of the case, a Bench of this Court has definitely held that, on the remarriage of the surviving parent, the eldest child, if he or she has not already taken a quarter share in the joint estate as auratha, becomes entitled to a quarter share in the estate; and also that the children, other than the eldest child, become entitled to a quarter share of the joint estate On a point on which the Dhammathats are so divided in opinion, we are not prepared to differ from this finding. We accept the decision in Maung Po Kin's case that kanitha children can sue for partition after the death of one parent on the remarriage of the surviving parent.

That being so, it remains for us to decide whether this right to claim partition can be exercised by the keiktima child. The learned trial Judge has answered this question in the negative. It was held by a Full Bench of this Court in the case of Maung Po An v Ma Dwe (2), that a keiktima adopted son is not entitled to claim from the adoptive mother on the death of the adoptive father, the auratha son's quarter share of the estate of the adoptive parents. The learned Judge was unable to see the distinction between the case of a keiktima child claiming partition on the death of the parent on the strength of his being auratha, and that of a keiktima child claiming partition on the remarriage of the surviving parent. Heald, J, who referred the question in Maung Po An's case (2) for reference to the Full Bench, remarks in his referring judgment at p. 195 as follows :

"But even if the obscure passage cited above from Ch. 26th of the 10th Book of Manugye be read as meaning that the keiktima child takes its place according to its age among the own children of his adoptive parents, then, although under the modern rule it would share equally with the other children, it does not seem to me to follow that if it was the eldest child of the family it would necessarily acquire the special rights of the auratha or eldest-born child either on the death of one parent or on the remarriage of the survivor. On the contrary I am strongly of opinion, as I have suggested above, that any Burman jurist who was familiar with the Dhammathats and with the constant opposition in meaning between auratha and keiktima, would have regarded the proposition that the keiktima could ever be auratha as a contradiction in terms."

The Full Bench answered the reference as follows

"A keiktima adopted son is not entitled to claim from an adoptive mother on the death of the adoptive father the auratha son's quarter share of the estate of the adoptive parents."

And at p. 200 of their judgment, the following passage occurs :

"We are satisfied that according to the Dhammathats the position of the keiktima child in respect of inheritance was inferior to that of own children, but in view of the judicial decisions which for many years have recognized the right of the keiktima child to share equally with the own children we are of opinion that that right should not now be questioned. But, apart from the recent case of Ma Thein v. Ma Mya (7), mentioned in the order of reference, there seems to be no case in which it has been expressly decided that an only or eldest keiktima child can be auratha or that if it fulfils the conditions which would entitle an own child to be auratha, it can on the death of one parent claim from the surviving parent the auratha child's share of the jointly-acquired property of the parents..... The special right of the auratha is an exception to the general rule of equal partition among children which is now settled law and in the absence of any authority in the Dhammathats or of any long course of judicial decisions extending that right to the keiktima child, we are of opinion that it should not be so extended."

It is clear, therefore, that it must now be regarded as settled law that a keiktima child is in all ordinary circumstances entitled to equal partition of inheritance with the natural children That being so, we are unable to see how the right of a natural child to claim inheritance after one parent has died on the remarriage of the surviving parent can be denied to a keiktima child The rights of an auratha are very special rights that are not shared by the younger children, and the refusal to recognize the claims of a keiktima to these special rights in no way conflicts with his rights to equal partition with the other children. The learned trial Judge speaks of the right to partition in this eventuality as a special right to which the ordinary rules do not apply. But, if a natural born child can claim his rights and the keiktima child cannot, it does not seem to us that the rights of partition are equal. The ordinary children are given the right of severing themselves from the family of their natural parent on his or her remarriage and claiming their share in the family property. They are not bound to make that claim, and, if they do not do so, they can then claim a different share on the death of the surviving parent.

In the case of a natural child, the disadvantages in awaiting the death of the surviving parent are at least no greater than in the case of a keiktima child. It is obvious that the longer a keiktima child awaits to make his claim, the more difficult it will be for him to establish it, and it is at least as likely that a natural child would elect to continue in the family of his natural parent after remarriage as that a keiktima child would elect to live with his adoptive parent on a change of circumstances. In the case before us, there are no natural children, but, if the decision of the trial Judge is correct, the same rule applies if there are both keiktima children and natural children. And we should then have the anomalous position that of different children, who all have precisely the same rights of partition, some could claim to exercise that right while the others would be debarred from doing so.

Whatever may have been the intention of the ancient law givers, we are of opinion that it is impossible, consistently with the principles of equal partition definitely accepted in Maung Po An's case, to hold that the right of a kanitha child to claim partition after the death of one parent on the remarriage of the survivor cannot be claimed by a keiktima child We are of opinion that the learned trial Judge was wrong in rejecting her claim on the preliminary point We, therefore, set aside the decision of the trial Judge and remand the case to the trial Court for a decision on the merits. The respondents will pay the costs of the appellant in this appeal, advocate's fee five gold mohurs.

HEALD AND MAUNG BA, JJ.

D. R Saklat and others—Appellants.

v.

J Hormasjee—Respondent.

First Appeals Nos. 95 and 96 of 1929, Decided on 12th June 1929.

(a) Civil P. C., S 100—Scope—Matter of discretion.

An appellate Court is always reluctant to interfere with the decision in a matter of discretion. [P 222 C 1]

(b) Religious Endowments — Intention of scheme framed by Chief Court of Lower Burma in Civil Miscellaneous Case No. 186 of 1919 indicated.

Scheme framed by Chief Court of Lower Burma in Civil Misc. Case No. 186 of 1919 provides for the filing of affidavits of the Parsi inhabitants who desire to support a particular candidate for appointment as trustee and so it is the intention of the scheme that the information conveyed by those affidavits should be part of the material used by the Court in deciding which candidate to appoint [P 222 C 2]

(c) Religious Endowments—Unless there is cogent reason to contrary, person having support from majority of community ought to be appointed as trustee for Parsi Fire Temple in preference to one having no such support and fact that trustees ought not to be related to each other is not sufficient to disregard such wishes.

In the case of an appointment of a trustee for the Parsi Fire Temple, the wishes of the community ought to be considered unless there is some cogent reason to the contrary, the person who has the support of the majority of the community ought to be appointed in preference to one who has no support from the community and the fact that the trustees ought not to be related to each other is not sufficient to warrant disregarding the wishes of the community. [P 223 C 1]

Leach and Doctor—for Appellants.

Vakheria—for Respondent.

Heald, J.—Mr B Cowasjee, who was a life trustee of the Parsi Fire temple at Rangoon, under a scheme framed by the Chief Court of Lower Burma in Civil Miscellaneous Case No 186 of 1919, died about the 2nd February last and under Cl. 26 of the scheme it was the duty of the remaining trustees or either of them within one month to apply to this Court on its original side to appoint a person or persons to fill the vacancy Neither of the trustees applied to the Court within the month, possibly because they did not agree as to whom they should nominate, but on 11th March a number of members of the Parsi community, who are the appellants in one of the two appeals, with which this order deals, namely C. I. appeal No. 95 of 1929, filed an application to the Court, submitting the name of Mr. A. B. Mehta, who is the appellant in the other appeal, with which this order deals, as the name of a person considered suitable to fill the vacancy Next day, Mr. N. M. Cowasjee, one of the two remaining trustees filed an application setting out the name of Dr. J. Hormasjee, the respondent in these appeals, as that of a person considered suitable to fill the vacancy. On 15th March, Mr. N. N. Burjorjee, the other trustee, filed an application again setting out the name of Mr. A. B Mehta. The Court fixed 8th April for the hearing of the applications and gave public notice of the date so fixed. On 6th April Dr. N. N. Parekh, one of the present appellants, filed an application supporting the recommendation of Mr. A. B. Mehta as suitable for the vacancy and stating that Mr. Mehta had the support of 92 out of the 117 male adult members of the Parsi community in Rangoon.

On 8th April, that is the day fixed for hearing of the applications, affidavits supporting the recommendation of Mr. A. B Mehta were filed by Messrs. B. N. Burjorjee, J. C Batlivala, D R. Saklat, Manchershah Manekjee, Lt. Col. Tarapore, Messrs. Manek Manekjee, D J. Contractor, S B. Nariman, N. B. Behramferam, P. H. Judge, K. M. Setna, A. Hirjee, D. Hormasjee, and D J. Kolapore A number of other applications supporting Mr. Mehta's candidature and containing the signatures of about 100 members of the Parsi community verified by affidavits were also filed No affidavits accompanied or were filed in support of Mr. Cowasjee's nomination of Dr. Hormasjee. When the matter came before the Court on 8th April, the supporters of Mr Mehta applied for an adjournment, but the learned advocate who appeared on the other side opposed it, and it was refused

After hearing the parties, the learned Judge made an order which is now under appeal. He said that Mr. Cowasjee had nominated Dr. Hormasjee and Mr. Burjoriee had nominated Mr. Mehta, that the original 3 trustees were related to each other Mr. N. M Cowasjee, being a nephew of Mr B. Cowasjee, and a cousin of Mr. Burjorjee, that Mr. Mehta was a brother-in-law of Mr. Burjorjee, that he did not think it desirable that the trustees should be related to each other, that it was necessary in the interest of the community that the new trustee should be a stranger to the families of the present trustees, and that for that reason he appointed Dr. Hormasjee to be the third trustee in the place of Mr. B. Cowasjee. Mr Mehta and his supporters appeal against that decision on grounds that the learned Judge's exercise of the discretion given by the scheme was arbitrary and not judicial, that there was no good reason for disregarding the wishes of a majority of the community, and that there was nothing on the record to support the learned Judge's opinion that it was necessary in the interests of the Parsi community that the new trustee should not be related to either of the present trustees An appellate Court is always reluctant to interfere with the decision in a matter of discretion, but it is difficult to see how we can refuse to interfere in this case.

It was said by Lord Halsbury, L. C. in the case of Sharp v. Wakefield (1) to which we have been referred, that :

"discretion means, when it is said that something is to be done within the discretion of the authorities that that something is to be done according to the rules of reason and justice, not according to private opinion, according to law, and not humour. It is to be no arbitrary, vague, and fanciful, but legal and regular."

In this case the learned Judge undoubtedly had a discretion, since under the scheme he was entitled to appoint such person as he deemed fit. But the scheme itself provides for the filing of affidavits of the Parsi inhabitants of Rangoon who desire to support a particular candidate for appointment, and it was obviously the intention of the scheme that the information conveyed by these affidavits should be part of the material used by the Court in deciding which candidate to appoint

In his judgment in this case, the learned Judge made no reference to the fact that the recommendation of one candidate was supported by a large number of affidavits and that the other by none and he made no reference to the contents of the affidavits. The sole reason which the learned Judge gave for his decision was his personal opinion that all the trustees ought not to be related to each other, and that it was necessary in the interest of the community that a stranger should be appointed trustee. There is no affidavit suggesting or supporting that view, and although it was doubtless pressed at the hearing and the learned Judge was entitled to consider it, it seems to us to be an insufficient reason for rejecting what was clearly the opinion of a considerable majority of the members of the community and for appointing a candidate whose candidature was not supported by any affidavits rather than a candidate whose recommendation was supported by a large number.

Respondent's learned advocate asked us to admit at the hearing of the appeal affidavits in support of his candidature, but we are of opinion that such affidavits should have been filed before the date fixed for hearing on the original side of the Court, and that in view of the fact that respondent opposed the adjournment which would have given him and his friends a further opportunity for the filing of such affidavits, sufficient reason for the admission of such further evidence at the hearing of the appeal has not been shown We have accordingly refused to admit any further affidavits.

It is not seriously suggested that respondent is personally otherwise than suitable to fill the vacancy, and we dispose of the matter on the assumption that personally both candidates are equally suitable. We are of opinion that in the case of such an appointment, the wishes of the community ought to be considered and that unless there is some cogent reason to the contrary the person who has the support of the majority of the community ought to be appointed. We do not consider that the learned Judge's opinion that the trustees ought to not to be related to each other was sufficient in the circumstances of this case to warrant his disregarding the wishes of the community, for the explanation of expression of which the scheme itself provides

We are therefore constrained to set aside the order of the learned Judge appointing respondent to be trustee and we appoint Mr. A. B. Mehta to be trustee in the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. B. Cowasjee.

We see no reason why either the trust or the respondent should be made liable for the costs of these proceedings and accordingly we direct that the parties do bear their own costs

Special Second Appeal No 661 of 1928, Decided on 16th May 1929, against judgment of Dist. Judge, Henzada, in Civil Appeal No. 73 of 1928.

Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Husband and wife are liable for debts contracted during coverture but decree passed against one after divorce cannot bind other unless made party to it.

So long as a Burmese Buddhist couple remains as husband and wife, a decree passed against the husband alone or the wife alone during the coverture may be held to be binding on both, on analogy of a partnership, but after divorce the right of the husband or the wife to represent the other in a suit has terminated and though the original debt may be binding on both, a decree against one without making the other a party cannot be binding on the person who has not been made a party. A decree passed against the husband is held to bind a wife so as to enable the decree-holder to proceed against the joint property on a presumption that the husband in effect represented the wife in the suit. Such a presumption can be made only when the husband could represent wife in the suit. If his authority to represent the wife has determined, as by divorce, no such presumption can be made and the wife can be bound by decree only when she is actually a party in suit. [P 224 C 1]

E. Maung—for Appellant.

P. K. Basu—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Ma Kha and Maung Aung Baw, the first and second respondents in this appeal were husband and wife. They divorced in 1922, and it has been found by the lower appellate Court that there was a partition of property at the divorce. The finding of that Court is not challenged by the learned advocate for the appellant. A decree was obtained by the appellant in this suit in which Maung Aung Baw only was a party The suit was instituted after the divorce but it is alleged and it may be held established though it was denied by Ma Kha, that the debt in respect of which the suit was filed was a debt contracted during the coverture, which would have bound both the husband and wife.

It is alleged by the learned advocate for the appellant that the decree passed in these circumstances binds the wife and her share in the property and he relies upon the ruling in V. R. M. A. L. Chettyar Firm v Man Han (1). In that case there was a money decree. As single appellate Judge, I, for reasons given in my judgment held. that Ma Han's share was not bound A Bench following the ruling in Ma Paing v. Maung Shwe Hpaw (2), held that the share was bound and the part of the judgment which applies is at p 447, where the learned Judge says:

> "The conclusion which I draw from the judgments in that case is that ordinarily a decree against either husband or wife who are subject to the Burmese Buddhist law of marriage, and are consequently partners, can be executed against any part of the partnership property, that is, the property of the marriage."

It will thus be seen that though in that case as a matter of fact the suit was instituted after the divorce, the particular point was hot considered by the learned Judge on the analogy of a partnership after the dissolution no partner has a right in a suit to represent any other partner, and even though the debt may be a partnership debt, and binding on all the partners, a decree passed against some of them only will not bind the other partners The simple reason for this is that after dissolution, the right of a partner to represent another partner in a suit has terminated. So long as a Burmese Buddhist couple remains as husband and wife, a decree passed against the husband alone or the wife alone during the coverture may be held to be binding on both, on the analogy of a partnership, but after divorce the right of the husband or the wife to represent the other in a suit has terminated and though the original debt may be binding on both, a decree against one, without making the other a party cannot be binding on the person who has not been made a party A decree passed against a husband is held to bind the wife so as to enable the decree-holder to proceed against the joint property on a presumption that the husband in effect represented the wife in the suit. Such a presumption can be made only when the husband could represent the wife in the suit. If his authority to represent the wife, had determined, as by divorce, no such presumption can be made or inference drawn, and the wife can be bound by a decree only when she is actually a party in the suit It is an elementary proposition that no one can be bound by a decree unless he was actually a party to the suit or effectively represented therein. Any other conclusion would lead to anamolous results, and I am sure that my brother Heald never intended to decide that a decree obtained against one of the couple after divorce, could bind the other

(2) A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 209=5 Rang. 206 (F.B.).

As this is the only point argued in the appeal, the appeal is dismissed with costs

After the judgment is dictated, Mr E. Maung for the appellant applies for leave to file a Letters Patent appeal. As the point involved fs a point of law, and the case a fit one, I grant leave to appeal against my judgment.

(b) Civil P. C., O. 9, R. 9—Person alleging false cause for non-appearance—Court can refuse to restore his suit.

If a person alleges a cause for his non-appearance which is false, the Court is justified in refusing to restore his suit for a person cannot expect to obtain justice on perjury.

S. Ganguli—for Applicant.

Judgment — S. K. S. Krishnappa Chettyar brought a mortgage suit against Jhanda and another in the Township Court of Myingyan. When the case was called for settlement of issues the plaintiff was absent but the defendants were present and pleaded limitation. The suit was accordingly dismissed with costs. The plaintiff then applied to have the suit restored but the application was dismissed He appealed to the District Court of Myingyan and there again his appeal was dismissed So he has come up in revision. The evidence shows that his agent did attend the Township Court on that day, that after his execution cases had been disposed of he went away under a bona fide belief that he had no more cases in that Court.

Under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C., the Chetty is precluded from bringing a fresh suit but he can have the case restored by satisfying the Court that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance. In my opinion the bona fide mistake would amount to "sufficient cause." But the chettyar foolishly alleged a cause which was false Though it may prove hard I am constrained to hold that in these circumstances the Courts below were justified in refusing to restore the suit. The applicant cannot expect to obtain justice on perjury. The present application for revision is therefore dismissed.

Held: that there was no sufficient ground to interfere in revision as the matter had gone beyond the agreement stage and the gift to G was complete. [P 525 C 1, 2]

P. K. Basu—for Applicant.

Zeya—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The petitioner Maung Po Maung sued the four respondents and one Maung Thin for possession of a cart and two bullocks. His suit was decreed by the trial Court, but was dismissed by the District Court an appeal. No further appeal lies, and the petitioner has come to this Court in revision on two grounds. The first ground is that the defendants are relying on a void contract. According to the plaint, the property was first made over to Maung Thin to be hired out, and later the plaintiff agreed that defendants 2 and 3 should take over the property temporarily. Defendants 4 and 5 Maung Paw I and Ma Shin are joined because they are said to be in possession of the property.

The defence was that the plaintiff agreed to give the properties in dispute to defendants 4 and 5 on their agreeing to his marriage with their daughter. The District Court has found this defence to be proved. It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the agreement to give the property is void as being in the nature of a marriage brocage contract. Whether that contention is well-founded or not, the matter has gone beyond the agreement stage. The gift of the properties to the defendants is complete and possession is with the defendants. The defendants are not suing on the contract, but relying on a completed gift. It is admitted that the petitioner has married the daughter of the respondents, Maung Paw I and Ma Shin. I do not think that there is any good ground for interference in revision here. The next ground taken is that the District Court was not justified in interfering with the orders of the trial Court without the defendant Maung Thin being added as a party to the appeal. I have been referred to the case of Chokalingum Chetty v. Singaram Chetty (1). The circumstances of that case are entirely different from the circumstances of the present case. It is not anybody's case here that Maung Thin has or had any title to the property. The respondents merely asked the District Court to set aside a decree which had been passed against them in favour of the present petitioner. They did not ask for any order prejudicial to Maung Thin. I can see no force in this objection. I dismiss the application with costs.

Civil Misc. Appeal No. 166 of 1928, Decided on 12th February 1929, against order of Dist. Court, Pyapon, in Civil Regular No. 27 of 1927.

Civil P. C., Sch. 2, Para. 16—Two chosen arbitrators enlisting services of two additional arbitrators, they having no such powers under terms of reference—Award made and signed by two chosen arbitrators alone—Decree in consequence of such award is not appealable.

Two chosen arbitrators enlisted the services of two additional arbitrators, though under the terms of reference they had no power to do this. But the award was made and signed only by the two arbitrators originally referred to. These gentlemen were given very wide powers:

Held: even if they called in two other persons to assist them, their award could not be attacked on the ground that it was no award at all, and the case was subject to the ordinary rule, which is that a decree in consequence of an award, to which para. 16, Sch. 2 applies, is not appealable A. I. R 1923 P. C. 66, Rel. on. 18 All. 422 (F.B.), Dist. [P 226 C 1]

Leong—for Appellants.

Judgment.—We think no appeal lies in this case The judgment and decree were passed according to an award made in arbitration proceedings to which para. 16, Sch. 2, Civil P. C. apply. The wording of the two sub-paragraphs of this paragraph is plain, and as was pointed out by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Champsey Bhara & Co. v. Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co. (1), they preclude any appeal We were referred to Ibrahim Ali v. Mohsin Ali (2). It is true that in that case the Court expressed the opinion that there were certain exceptions to the rule that decrees upon such awards are not appealable. One such was said to be where the award was not an award at all. It was said that in the present case the two chosen arbitrators enlisted the services of two additional arbitrators, and that as under the terms of reference they had no power to do this, their award was no award in law. But it was admitted that the award was made and signed only by the two arbitrators originally referred to. These gentlemen were given very wide powers, and even if they called in two other persons to assist them, their award could not be attacked on the ground that it was no award at all. This case therefore differs from that contemplated by the Allahabad High Court, and is subject to the ordinary rule, which is that a decree in consequence of an award, to which the above quoted paragraph to Sch. 2, Civil P. C. applies, is not appealable. The appeal is therefore dismissed under O. 41, R 11.

Judgment —U Chan Nyein, now deceased, brought a suit against the appellant Ma Yin Hu and Limma and one S. T. Chokalingam Chettyar for cancellation of a deed of gift and possession of a certain house and its site. The plaintiff's case was that on 3rd December 1923 he had executed an outright deed of gift in favour of appellant 1 who was his sister, but that on the same day appellant 1 executed another registered deed whereby she undertook not to make a gift of, transfer, sell or mortgage the property without the knowledge, consent and permission of the donor, and that, if she did so, she would transfer and return the property to the donor. On 10th July 1925, the appellants executed a mortgage of the property in favour of defendant 3, Chokalingam Chettyar, for Rs. 1,000. The plaintiff claimed that this mortgage was effected without his consent an c that he was therefore entitled under the terms of the agreement to have the property reconveyed to him. As against Chokalingam Chettyar the case has been dismissed and the validity of the mortgage so far as he is concerned is not now in question as there is no appeal aganist this order of dismissal. The trial Court, however, gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff against the two appellants. This decree was confirmed on appeal to the District Court and the appellants now come in second appeal to this Court.

Certain allegations were made as to undue influence at the time the gift was made and it was also contended that U Chan Nyein had given his consent to the mortgage, but on these points the decision of the two lower Courts is against the appellants and they have not been urged in this appeal. U Chan Nyein died during the pendency of the suit in the trial Court and is now represented by his widow Ma Chit May.

The contention now put forward on behalf of the appellants is that the promise not to transfer without the donor's consent is void. It is contended that, if the gift and the promise be considered as forming one transaction, then the provisions of S. 10, T. P. Act, are operative, and that if the promise is treated as a separate transaction, then it must be held to be void as being opposed to public policy and without consideration. I do not think the claim as to consideration can be substantiated. It is clear that two registered documents were executed on the same day, and that the gift of the property was consideration for the promise made. The gift and the promise were made on separate registered documents but it is clear that they were made at the same time and it seems to me that they must be treated as forming part of one transaction. S. 10, T. P. Act, lays down that where property is transferred subject to a condition or limitation, absolutely restraining the transferee or any person claiming under him from parting with, or disposing of, his interest in the property, the condition or limitation is void. I have been referred to two Allahabad cases on this subject.

In the case of Bhairo v. Parmeshri Dayal (1), by a compromise between the parties it was agreed that one of the parties should hold possession of certain property generation by generation and would not alienate the property. It was held that this condition restraining the power of alienation was void as contravening the provisions of S. 10, T. P. Act. Apart from the provisions of S. 126, T. P. Act, which I shall refer to later, Bhairo's case differs considerably from the present case. In that case the transferee was to hold possession generation by generation and the condition restraining the powers of alienation was apparently to be in force for ever. In the present case there is no absolute condition that is to last for ever. As regards the property here the condition merely is that the donee will not transfer it without the consent of the donor. There is no provision in the deed restraining the power of transfer after the donor's death.

Another case referred to on behalf of the appellants is the case of Gopi Ram v. Jeot Ram (2), In that case there was a covenant in a deed of sale that, if the vendee, his heirs or representatives desired to sell the house purchased, they should in such a case first ask the executant, his heirs or representatives for the time being, to purchase it. It was held that this condition was void as offending against the law of perpetuities. But here again the condition was applicable not only to the parties but to their heirs and representatives.

These are the only two official reports to which I have been referred on behalf of the appellants. The trial Judge in his judgment referred to the case of Makund Prasad v. Rajrup Singh (3). This is an unauthorised report and therefore cannct be cited as an authority. But it seems to me that the arguments in that case are sound. In that case as here there was a gift of certain immovable property subject to a condition that the land would be taken back in the event of the donee transferring it.

It was pointed out that S. 126, T. P. Act, recognizes the validity of a power of revocation. That section lays down that the donor and donee may agree that, on the happening of any specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor, a gift shall be suspended or revoked. That appears to me to be the effect of the two documents in the present case when read together. At the time of the gift it was agreed by the donee that the gift would be revoked on the donee's transferring or mortgaging the property without the donor's consent, that is to say, on the happening of any specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor Looked at in this light the agreement does not seem to me contravene the provisions of S. 10. There is only a promise to the donor personally and it is only the donor, during his lifetime who could revoke the gift. There is no absolute restraint on the transferee or any person claiming under him from alienating the property I am of opinion therefore that the provisions of S. 10, T. P. Act do not apply to the present case and that the promise made by appellant is not void as being opposed to public policy. The appellants are bound by their promise and their appeal must therefore fail I dismiss this appeal with costs

BROWN, J.

V S. Aiyar—Appellant.

v.

Maung Nyun and another—Respondents

Second Appeal No 649 of 1928 Decided on 29th May 1929, against judgment of Dist. Court, Magwe, in C. A. No 16 of 1928

(a) Civil P C, O 21, R. 63—Orders made against person applying for removal of attachment—Under O. 21, R. 63 he can sue though attachment is subsequently withdrawn.

Where orders have been passed against a person on his application for removal of attachment O 21, R. 63 gives him a right to file a suit even though the attachment is withdrawn by the decree-holder. 9 L. B. R. 47, Dist. [P 228 C 2]

(b) Jurisdiction—Objection once decided—Second objection cannot be entertained

Where, after question of jurisdiction has been already dealt with and decided, objection is taken to it, the Court is justified in refusing to go into it again [P 229 C 1]

(c) Suits Valuation Act, S 11 (2)—Scope.

Under S. 11 (2) even if objection to jurisdiction was taken at an early stage in the trial Court, the appellate Court is required to dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction, unless it is satisfied that the over-valuation or under-valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits [P 229 C 2]

B. K. B. Naidu—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The respondent Maung Nyun brought a suit in the Township Court, Magwe, against the appellant Mr. V. S Aiyar, and respondent 2 Maung Po Sein. The suit was in regard to a certain piece of land which Maung Nyun claimed to be his. This land had been attached by the appellant in execution of a decree he had obtained against the respondent Po Sein. Maung Nyun made an unsuccessful application for removal of attachment He then brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. He has joined the appellant and defendant 2, respondent, as defendants. So far as the appellant is concerned, he required a declaration under the provisions of R 63, O. 21, Civil P C Against Po Sein he sued for possession, alleging that Po Sein had since the attachment trespassed upon the land which was in his possession

It seems to me open to doubt whether even supposing the provisions of R. 3, O. 7 were sufficiently wide to make it permissible to join the two causes of action in the one suit, it would not have been more satisfactory if the claim against the two defendants had not been made in separate suits. But no objections have been raised now to the decision of the lower Courts on this score. The trial Court held that the plaintiff had proved his claim and gave him a declaratory decree and a decree for possession of the land. The order of the Township Court was confirmed by the District Court on appeal Maung Po Sein has not appealed against the order of the District Court. This appeal has been filed by the other defendant Mr. Aiyar.

The first contention on his behalf laid before me is that he had withdrawn the attachment and therefore no suit against him lay. The provisions of R. 63, O. 21 are quite clear It is admitted that orders had been passed against the plaintiff in the miscellaneous proceedings on his application for removal of attachment. R 63, therefore, gave him a clear right to file a suit. The case of Raman Chetty v. Ma Hmu (1) has been cited on behalf of the appellant, but it does not seem to me to help. In that case it was held that a judgment creditor could not bring a declaratory suit when the judgment-debtor had become insolvent as he then no longer has a right to attach the judgment-debtor's property. I do not understand the appellant's claim to be that he had no longer the right to attach the judgment-debtor's property. In my opinion there is no force at all in this objection.

The other objection which had been taken in this appeal is that the trial Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. It is somewhat difficult to unravel from the mass of plaints and written statements in the trial proceedings what exactly was the course of the litigation in that Court. The present appellant at any rate does not seem to have raised the question of jurisdiction although Po Sein did raise the point, but when issues were framed it was agreed that before deciding the case on the merits the Court should try the first four issues. There are various issues connected with the framing of the suit and include an issue whether the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. On this issue the Court held that as the suit was then framed it had no jurisdiction because in addition to the other reliefs the plaintiff asked for his costs in the miscellaneous proceedings This defect was rectified by the plaintiff amending his plaint and waiving his costs and so far as can be found from the record it was only then that the defendants seriously raised the question as to the value of the property being more than 1,000 and before the decision of the preliminary issue no evidence was adduced by either side to show that this valuation was wrong. It is subsequently to the passing of orders on the preliminary issue that question of the valuation of the property was definitely raised. In view of the fact that the jurisdiction question had already been dealt with and decided I think the trial Court was justified in refusing to go into it any further. Rs. 1,000 was the actual price according to the sale deed for which the land was brought by the plaintiff.

Another objection on the ground of jurisdiction has been raised and that is that there were two distinct causes of action, one against the defendant Po Sein for possession and the other against the appellant Aiyar for a declaration and that for this reason the total value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is over 1,000. Reliance is placed on O. 2 R. 3, Cl. (2), Civil P. C. That rule refers primarily to cases of joinder of causes of action against different defendants and it seems to me very doubtful whether it can be maintained that the value of the aggregate subject-matter of the causes of action in the present case is more than the value of the land. But however this may be, I am of opinion that the case is sufficiently covered by the provisions of S. 11, Suits Valuation Act. Under Cl. (2) of that section even if objection to jurisdiction was taken at an early stage in the trial Court, the appellate Court is required to dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction, unless it is satisfied that the over-valuation or undervaluation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits The District Court was of opinion that if there were an under-valuation, it had no prejudicial effect on the disposal of the suit on its merits. The evidence was recorded at considerable length and a careful judgment was written by the Judge of the trial Court. If the suit had been beyond the jurisdiction of the Township Court, it would have been triable by the Sub-Divisional Court, and the appeal from that Court would also have gone to the District Court. I see no reason for supposing that any undervaluation that may have been made has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits. I am not therefore satisfied that there is sufficient reason for interference on this ground. It has been suggested in argument that full costs of this suit should not have been awarded against the appellant. This ground is not raised in the memorandum of appeal, and I am not satisfied that there is any ground for interference on question of costs alone. The appellant undoubtedly contested the suit on the merits. and denied the plaintiff's title I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Insolvency Case No. 70 of 1923, Decided on 4th May 1928.

(a) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 8 (1)—S. 8(1) gives Court unlimited power to review, rescind or vary and S. 90 (1) cannot act to limit it—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 90 (1).

Section 8 (1) gives the Court an unlimited power to review, rescind or vary and S. 90 (1) of Act cannot act to limit that power by importing the provisions of Civil P. C, O 47, R. 1. [P 232 C 1]

(b) Limitation Act, Art. 162—Review of judgment in Art. 162 refers to review under Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 1

The review of judgment referred to in Art. 162 is the review of judgment mentioned in O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C. [P 232 C 1]

(c) Limitation Act, Art. 162—Application under insolvency jurisdiction is not governed by Art. 162—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S 8 (1).

An application to a High Court for a review of a judgment passed by it in its insolvency jurisdiction is not governed by Art 162. [P 232 C 2]

(d) Limitation Act, Art. 173—Scope.

Article 173 is restricted to applications for review under Civil P. C. [P 232 C 2]

(e) Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, S. 17 Proviso—Person by agreement with his creditors authorizing them to withdraw money to his credit—He adjudicated insolvent and on next day creditors suing him on strength of agreement to have lien on money to insolvent's credit and obtaining decree—Suit instituted without leave of Court— Leave being necessary decree obtained is not binding on Official Assignee or estate of insolvent.

The words of the proviso to S. 17 can be amply satisfied by confining its operation to cases where the mortgagee can realize his security without the institution of the suit. [P 233 C 2]

A person by an agreement with his creditors authorized them to withdraw all sums then and thereafter to his credit and for the purpose gave them a general power of attorney. The person was adjudicated insolvent and on the next day the creditors brought a suit against him on the strength of the agreement to have a lien on money to his credit. No leave to institute the suit was obtained. The creditors got decrees declaring that they had lien on sums of money lying at the credit of insolvent.

Where an attachment is validly withdrawn, though under misapprehension, the second attachment does not relate back to the date of the first attachment and does not have such effect as against a person taking transfer from the judgment-debtor in the interval. Janab Ali, Tambe and Joseph—for Creditors Nos 2, 8 and 9.

Judgment—(4th May 1928)—This is an application under S. 8, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, to review an order passed by Otter, J , on 2nd June 1927. The learned Judge, after admitting the application, went on leave, and I have been directed to dispose of the matter. The application is opposed by creditors 2, 7 and 9. L. W. Nasse had a contract with the Public Works Department under which he would in the ordinary course be due to receive a considerable sum of money and he was also in debt to the applicants On 28th February 1923, he entered into an agreement with them which is on the file of C. R. No. 158 of 1923 of this Court. The agreement after reciting that he was indebted to the applicants to the extent of about Rs 60,000, and that :

" he has now and will hereafter have sums to his credit on bills in the hands of the Executive Engineer, Mingaladon Cantonment Division and elsewhere in the Public Works. Department," goes on to provide

" The said L. W. Nasse hereby agrees and authorizes the said firm of Mansuklal Dolatchand & Co. to withdraw all such sums now to his credit or may hereafter be to his credit from the Public Works Department till all the debts due to them are fully satisfied. That for such purpose he has this day granted them a general power of attorney. Should the said L. W. Nasse after this agreement either withdraw the said sums himself or prevent in any way the firm of Mansuklal Dolatchand & Co. from withdrawing the same, then the said L. W. Nasse will be liable to either civil or criminal action as the firm of Mansuklal Dolatchand may think fit."

The power-of-attorney to which reference is made is dated 2nd March 1923, and is in the same record After giving the applicants authority to withdraw moneys from the Public Works Department in language similar to that employed in the agreement, Nasse gave them specific authority to give receipts therefor and to institute suits in respect thereof. On 28th March 1923, Nasse was adjudicated insolvent On 29th March 1923, the applicants, apparently being unaware of the adjudication, instituted two suits Civil Regular Nos 158 and 159 of 1923 of this Court against the insolvent for the recovery of sums of money aggregating about Rs. 66,000, in which they claimed, on the strength of the agreement above set out, to have a lien on sums of money lying to the credit of defendant 1 in the office of the Executive Engineer, Mingaladon Cantonment Divisin and elsewhere in the Public Works Department and asked for a declaration to that effect.

On 8th April 1923, the Court was informed on the fact of the insolvency. Subsequently notice was issued to the Official Assignee to report to the Court whether he would defend the suit. He summoned a meeting of creditors to ascertain their views on the subject and on 10th July 1923, he filed his report. From this report, it appears that the creditors, before making up their minds wished to find out what moneys were due to the insolvent, and therefore, it had been arranged that on the 13th July the Official Assignee and the insolvent should meet the Executive Engineer, Mingaladon Circle. Further time was asked for until the 31st July. On that date the Official Assignee by his advocate informed the Court that he would not defend the suit on behalf of the insolvent And on 10th August 1923 decrees were passed in favour of the applicants in C. R. 158 for Rs. 50,000, interest and costs, and in C. R. 159 for Rs. 12,500. interest and costs In each case it was declared that the applicants had a lien on sums of money lying to the credit of the insolvent in the office of the Executive Engineer, Mingaladon Cantonment Division, Rangoon, and elsewhere in the Public Works Department.

The differences between the estate of the insolvent and the Public Works Department as to the amount due to the estate were referred to arbitration, and the arbitrator whose award is filed in C M. No. 131 of 1925, found that Rs. 33,752-5-3 was due to the insolvent's estate. This sum was paid to the Official Assignee and the applicants applied that it be paid to them claiming that they had a lien, first on the ground that the lien had been declared by the decress in C R. suits 158 and 159 of 1923, and, secondly, that, independently of those decrees, they had a lien of virtue of the documents to which reference has been made above. Otter, J., by his order of 2nd June 1927, held that the Official Assignee was not bound by the decrees in the suits because the suits were filed after the insolvency without the sanction of the Court and that the documents were inoperative to confer a lien. It is this order which I am asked to review.

I will first deal with two preliminary points which were raised. The present application is under S 8 (1), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, which gives the Court power to " review, rescind or vary an order made by it under its insolvency jurisdiction " It was urged by the objecting creditors that sitting as a Judge in insolvency my powers are no greater than if application were made to me for review of judgment under O. 47, R (1), Civil P. C. and Mr. Burjorjee conceded that, if the provisions of that rule were applicable, he would be out of Court. S. 90 (1) of the Act is recited to me in support of this contention The subsection enacts that in proceedings under the Act, the Court is to have the like powers and follow the like procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. But there is a proviso that the subsection is not in anyway to limit the jurisdiction conferred on the Court by the Act. S. 8 (1) gives the Court an unlimited power to review, rescind or vary and S. 90 (1) cannot operate to limit that power by importing the provisions of O. 47, R. (1) of the Code. Moreover, what I am in substance asked to do is to vary the order of 2nd June 1927, by holding that the applicants have a lien and if I am of the opinion that the order was wrong I am bound to vary it

It is next urged that the application is out of time, because the period of limitation for an application for review of an order under S. 8 (1) is Art. 162, Sch. A, Lim Act, 1908 or in the alternative Art. 173. Mr. Burjorjee concedes that if either of these articles is applicable, his application is time-barred, but says that the case is governed by Art. 181, which provides for applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the schedule or by S 48, Civil P C Art 162 provides in the case of a review of judgment by the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction a period of 20 days from the date of the decree or order. As a matter of construction I should hold that the review of judgment referred to in the article was the review of judgment mentioned in O. 47, R (1), Civil P. C. Mr Tambe, however, contends that " original jurisdiction includes insolvency jurisdiction " and cites a note in Rustomji's Law of Limitation (edn 1927) at p 901, to this effect. The case cited by the learned author, namely, the decision of the Privy Council in In the matter of Candas Narrondas v C. A Turner (1) by no means bears out this sweeping generalisation. In that case judgment had been entered up under S. 86 of Statutes 11 and 12 Victoria Cap 81 (which at the time governed insolvency in British India) in favour of the Official Assignee against the insolvent for the amount of his scheduled debts Eighteen years later the Official Assignee sought to execute the judgment. Under Art 180, Sch. 2, Lim Act, 1877, the period of limitation for an application to enforce a judgment of a Court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction was 12 years from the time when a present right to enforce the judgment accrued to some person capable of releasing the right. It was held that although a Court under the provisions of Statute 11 and 12 Vic. Cap. 21 determines the substance of questions relating to the insolvent's estate, the proceedings in execution and the judgment are the High Court's. Consequently, the judgment which was entered up was a judgment of the High Court in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. The case is not, therefore, an authority for the proposition that an application to a High Court for a review of a judgment passed by it in its insolvency jurisdiction is governed by Art. 162 of the present Lim Act.

Article 173 deals with a review of judgment except in the cases provided for by Arts. 161 and 162, and provides a period of 90 days from the date of the decree or order. Mr. Tambe contends that this article is not restricted to applications for review under the Civil Procedure Code, and cites in support of his contention a passage on p. 921 of the same learned author, based on a decision reported in 3 Mysore Law Journal 124 I disagree with his contention. In my view, therefore, the present application is not barred by limitation.

Mr. Burjorjee then dealt with the two points on which Otter, J., had held against him. At the conclusion of his argument, counsel for the opposing creditors admitted that the agreement on which Mr. Burjorjee relied was effectual to create a charge, but contended that the matter was not concluded by the decrees passed in C. R Suits 158 and 159 of 1923, and submitted that the charge purporting to be thereby created was void, first because at the time it was created the debt was under attachment, and secondly, because it amounted to a fraudulent preference They further urged that the applicants had other securities for their debts and that these should be exhausted before recourse was had to the property in respect of which they claimed a charge. Mr. Burjorjee agreed that the applicants would first realize their other securities and give credit for the net amount realized before seeking to enforce their charge.

I heard counsel first on the question whether the matter was concluded by the decrees in question. Under S. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, on the making of an order of adjudication, the property of the insolvent vests in the Official Assignee and becomes divisible amongst his creditors, and thereafter except as directed by the Act no creditor to whom the insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable in insolvency shall "have any remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of the debt or shall commence any suit or other legal proceeding except with the leave of the Court and on such terms as the Court may impose."

(1) [1889] 13 Bom. 520=16 I. A. 156 (P. C.).

There is a proviso that the section is not to affect the powers of any secured creditor to realize or otherwise deal with his security in the same manner as if the section had not been passed. In the present instance the suits were instituted the day after the adjudication and leave to institute them was not previously obtained. Mr. Burjorjee conceded that, if S. 17 applies, and the case is not within the proviso, leave must be granted before the institution of the suit. But he argued that a mortgagee in instituting a suit to realize his security is within the proviso; in other words, that he is free to realize his security either without the intervention of the Court, as by sale, or by the institution of a suit. In support of this proposition he cited Lang v. Haptullabhai (2), a decision of a Bench of the Bombay High Court, which was cited, but not discussed in Ramchand v. Bank of Upper India, Limited, Delhi (3), a case dealing with an entirely different point. In the Bombay case the Official Assignee was in the position of a mortgagor and the mortgagee brought a suit against him to realize his security. It was held affirming the judgment of Beaman, J., and differing from a decision of Davar, J., set out in a footnote to the report, that no leave was necessary, inasmuch as the proviso to S. 17 covered a suit by a mortgagee to realize his security, the principle being that a suit is one of the recognized methods of realization of mortgage securities, and that if S. 17 had not been passed, the mortgagee could have realized his security in the ordinary way by means of a suit. Reliance was placed on a passage in the judgment in White v. Simmons (4), where Lord Hatherlay declined to hold that where was "an express reservation of all rights, a mortgagee should be precluded from proceeding in equity to enforce his security."

The learned Judges say that Lord Hatherlay was dealing with a proviso in the same words as the proviso to S. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The proviso with which Lord Hatherlay was dealing was the proviso to S. 12, Bankruptcy Act, 1869. But S. 13 merely enacts that

"where a debtor shall be adjudicated a bankrupt, no creditor to whom the bankrupt is indebted in respect of any debt provable in the bankruptcy shall have any remedy against the property or person of the bankrupt except in manner directed by this Act."

It will be noted that there is no provision forbidding the institution of a suit without leave. This provision appears in S. 9, Bankruptcy Act, 1883 and in S. 7 (1), Bankruptcy Act 1914, which are similar to S. 17, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. No English authority since the Act of 1883 came into force was cited in the Bombay cases, and none has been cited to me. I am of the opinion that the English cases decided under the Act of 1869 are not authorities for holding that under S. 17 the leave of the Court is not required for the institution of a suit by a mortgagee to realize his security. I am further of the opinion that the law was deliberately changed by the Act of 1883 with the object of closing the loop hole which those cases had left open. The words of the proviso can be amply satisfied by confining its operation to cases where the mortgagee can realize his security without the institution of a suit. I hold, therefore, that the leave of the Court was necessary for the institution of C. R. Suits 158 and 159 of 1923, and that that leave not having been obtained, the decrees in those suits were not binding on the Official Assignee or the estate of the insolvent. This concludes the matter. On the assumption that the view I hold is erroneous, and that leave was not necessary, unless the Official Assignee was a party to the suit he could not be bound by the decrees passed in them. This was so held by the Privy Council in Kala Chand Banerjee v. Jagannath Marwari (5). That was a decision under S. 16, Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907, the provisions of which, so far as material are similar to those of S. 17, Presidency

Towns Insolvency Act Mr. Burjorjee argued that the Official Assignee must be deemed to have been a party because he was given an opportunity to defend the suits and elected not to do so. The procedure which was followed in the suits would have been correct if the insolvency had supervened after the institution of the suits But at the date of their institution Nasse had been adjudicated and the equity of redemption in the debt had devolved on the Official Assignee He was a necessary party, and should have been sued in the first instance, not having been sued in the first instance he should have been placed on the record as a defendant The case is analogous to that of a suit brought against a man who was dead at the time of its institution. In such a case it would be incumbent on the plaintiff not merely to write to the legal representatives enquiring whether they wished to defend the suit, but to place them on the record. In the case to which reference was last made Kala Chand v Jagannath (5), a contention somewhat similar to that made by Mr Burjorjee was put forward and rejected by their Lordships of the Privy Council On this ground also I hold that the Official Assignee is not bound by the decrees in C. R Suits Nos 158 and 159 of 1923.

The next question is whether the charge purporting to be created was void because at the time it was created the debt was under attachment. The point is one of considerable importance and was not taken in the objections of the opposing creditors which were before Otter, J I, therefore, allowed an adjournment so that the matter might be fully argued Under S 64, Civil P. C. when an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of property attached, or of any interest therein, is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. I may first refer to a suggestion made by Mr. Burjoree, that the charge on which he relies was made by an agreement, and that it did not involve a transfer of an interest in property within the meaning of the section. In Rodick v. Gandell (6), at p. 754 Lord Truro, L. C., says that "an agreement between a debtor and a creditor that the debt owing shall be paid out of a specific fund coming to the debtor, or an order given by a debtor to his creditor upon a person owing money or holding funds belonging to the giver of the order, directing such person to pay such funds to the creditor will create a valid equitable charge upon such fund, in other words, will operate as an equitable assignment of the debts or fund to which the order refers."

(6) 42 Ch. 749.

And it seems impossible to hold that an assignment of a debt or fund, equitable or legal, does not involve a transfer of an interest in that debt or fund.

I will now narrate briefly the facts relevant to this portion of the argument.

Civil Regular No 39 of 1923 of this Court was a suit instituted on 20th January 1923, by V. S. R M. Chettiar (creditor No 2 in these proceedings) against Nasse and others for the recovery of Rs. 20,000 and interest due on a promissory note. On 27th January 1923, on an application by creditor No 2 for an attachment before judgment of the debts due to Nasse by the Executive Engineer, P. W D. Cantonment Division, Rutledge, J. (as he then was) directed a prohibitory order to issue, and it was served on 30th January. On 2nd February Nasse filed an application, supported by an affidavit asking that his personal security might be accepted and the attachment removed. It should be noted that in the affidavit he emphasized the fact that it was his personal security which he was offering On the same day Rutledge, J., passed the following order :

"On defendant giving security to the satisfaction of the bailiff for the amount of claim and costs prohibitory order to be withdrawn."

On this, on the same day, the Deputy Registrar asked the bailiff to report and the bailiff endorsed on the petition "Petitioner Mr. L. W. Nasse is good for Rs 21,560." The bailiff had originally written "surety" but scratched it out and substituted "petitioner." On the same day the Deputy Registrar endorsed on the petition "Let the surety be accepted," and there is a note in the diary:

"On the defendant's application dated 2nd February 1923 tendering his personal security, order passed as prayed."

Under this are initials, not apparently those of the Deputy Registrar. On 3rd February, Nasse executed in the presence of the Deputy Registrar a bond giving personal security. On 5th February there is an entry in the diary, followed by what appears to be the same initials:

"Security bond having been filed 3rd February 1923, attachment is removed."

On the same day a notice was served on the Executive Engineer informing him that the attachment had been removed. On or about 17th February creditor No. 2 filed an application (dated 13th February) complaining that O 38, R 5 (b) of the Code, under which the order of 2nd February had been made, did not contemplate or authorize the acceptance of personal security, and asking for cancellation of the order "accepting the surety" and that Nasse be ordered to furnish proper and sufficient security in terms of the Court's order and on failure to do so "that he be ordered to pay into Court all moneys withdrawn by him to the extent of Rs. 21,500 from the P. W. D. and for such purpose all necessary orders may be given."

Notice was ordered to issue to Nasse and was served on him on 21st, on which date he was given time to file objections until 26th. On 26th he was given further time for this purpose until 2nd March. On 3rd March he filed objections and the matter was directed to be placed before the Court on 5th March. Meanwhile Nasse had executed his charge in favour of the present applicants on 28th February and given them the power of attorney to collect the moneys from the P W. D. on 2nd March. The matter came before the Court on 5th March and Rutledge, J., said that his order of 2nd February never contemplated that the bailiff should be satisfied with Nasse's personal security and had he meant merely personal security, he would have so stated. He continued :

"Such being the case, the prohibitory order must be re-issued and it will only be withdrawn on the defendant furnishing adequate and independent security to the satisfaction of the bailiff."

On 8th March it is stated that the attachment was re-issued. The actual prohibitory order, which was issued on that date, and served on 12th March, says nothing about a re-issue and is in form an entirely fresh prohibitory order. On 22nd March a decree was passed in favour of creditor No. 2. As I have said before, Nasse was adjudicated insolvent on 28th March, and the applicants filed their suits to establish their security on the next day.

It is Mr Burjorjee's case that on the date on which the charge was created, there was no subsisting attachment. To this Mr. Janab Ali replied that, inasmuch as the attachment was removed under a misapprehension by the Deputy Registrar and was immediately restored by the Judge, the attachment ordered to issue on 5th March related back to the date when the prior attachment was first issued, and that the charge must be deemed to have been given while the attachment was subsisting and is therefore void. I may say that before the argument proceeded the record of C R. 39 of 1923 was carefully inspected by counsel on both sides, my attention was not drawn to the peculiarities in the endorsement of the petition of 2nd February and in the diary entries of 2nd and 5th March which I have indicated, and Mr Janab Ali was satisfied that the order removing the attachment was the order of the Deputy Registrar and conceded that he had power to make such an order. In support of his contention Mr Janab Ali cited a number of authorities all of which with two exceptions, are cases of removal of attachment followed by a declaratory suit in which the attaching creditor established his claim Mr. Burjorjee says that this class of cases is distinguishable and that, of the exceptions, one has no bearing and the other was erroneously decided. I will now deal with the authorities.

In Bonomali Rai v. Prosuno Narain Chowdhury (7), a decree-holder attached the property of certain of the defendants who then obtained an order of release under S. 280 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding to O 21, R. 60 of the present Code), and subsequently mortgaged the property. The attaching creditor thereupon sued for and obtained under S. 283 (corresponding to O 21, R. 63), a declaration that the mortgaged property was nevertheless liable to be sold under his attachment. A few days after obtaining the decree he again attached the judgment-debtor's property. The mortgagees then sued on their mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. The sale in execution of the attaching creditor's decree and that ordered by the decree in favour of the mortgagees were both advertised for the same day. The plaintiff purchased at the sale under the attaching creditor's decree and then sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree, the reason being that the judgment-creditor's attachment was restored by the decree under S 283 of the Code, and that the mortgage executed by the judgment-debtors was invalid as against the plaintiff, the purchaser at the execution sale. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to the decree sought. The ground of the decision was that the order for release at the instance of the claimant:

"was not final but provisional, as S 283 declares it to be subject to the result of any suit which the attaching creditor may bring to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute. That right was to do what he had already done "viz., attach it and to do what he wanted to do, but was prevented by the order from doing, to sell it in pursuance of his attachment. The only remedy given to the attaching creditor is by a suit which must be brought within one year from the date of the order, and the object of the suit is to maintain the attachment and get rid of the order. Although, therefore, an order under S. 280 operates to prevent the attaching creditor from proceeding to sell the attached property, it does not operate so as at once to remove the attachment and leave the judgment-debtors free to deal with the property as they like. If they do deal with it, they and those with whom they deal do so subject to the result of the suit as to the attachment being maintained. Any other construction of the section would in very many cases defeat the object of the suit and render the decree infructuous."

The case, therefore, depends on the peculiar remedy given to the attaching creditor by S 283 of the old Code, and is not an authority for the broad proposition that whenever an attachment is removed under a misapprehension and a fresh attachment is made, an intervening charge is subject to the disabilities specified in S 64 of the present Code. This case was followed on the same ground in Ram Chandra Marwari v Mudeshwar Singh (8) and Ali Ahmed Khan v. Bansidar (9). Reliance is placed by Mr. Aiyangar on the remarks of Rankin, J., in Najmunisa Bibi v. Nacharuddin Sardar (10), (at p. 556 of 51 Cal.). That was a case relating to attachments under decrees and a declaratory suit, but no question actually arose under S. 64. Rankin, J., said.

"It is quite plain that, if an attachment comes to an end validly, then upon a second attachment no Court can refuse to recognize an interest validly created in the meanwhile. It is also plain that if an attachment is wrongly released, and the right to attach is subsequently established according to law either by appeal or otherwise the attachment will relate back to the time when it was made."

From the context it would appear that he was discussing the position in relation to O. 21, Rr. 60 and 63 of the Code. If his remarks were intended to have any wider application they were obiter dicta.

In Aziz Bakhsh v Kaniz Fatima Bibi (11), the assignee of a decree attached two properties one of which was burdened with a mortgage in favour of the assignor and the other of which was not so mortgaged. The judgment-debtor objected that the mortgaged property could not be sold in execution without a suit being brought on the mortgage. On 2nd June 1909, the Court dismissed the application for execution in toto.

On 10th August 1909, the decree-holder applied for review of judgment, on the ground that the order dismissing the application with regard to the non-mortgaged property was erroneous, and on 13th June 1910, the review was accepted and the execution as regards the non-mortgaged property ordered to proceed. Between these last two dates the judgment-debtor sold the non-mortgaged property to a third party. After the 13th June 1910, the decree-holder applied to go on with the execution proceedings and to sell the non-mortgaged property. The judgment-debtor (not his transferee) objected on the ground that under O. 21, R 57, the previous attachment had ceased to exist, and that a fresh attachment was necessary and the property could not be sold, as he had already sold it to another person. O. 21, R. 57 provides that when property has been attached but by reason of the decree-holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it may dismiss it and thereupon the attachment is to cease. But in the case under discussion there was no default and no order of dismissal for default, and it was held that the attachment still subsisted and it was valid as against the purchaser. All that the case holds is that the attachment never had been removed. It is not an authority for the general proposition that if the first attachment is actually removed, albeit under a misapprehension, a second attachment relates back to the date of the first attachment. The case on which Mr. Janab Ali most strongly relies is that of Gopal Prasad v. Kashi Nath (12). In that case there were two suits pending against the same defendants by different plaintiffs, one in the Aligarh Court in which Kashi Nath was the plaintiff, and the other in the Mainpuri Court in which another person was the plaintiff. On 9th August 1909, the defendants applied to the High Court to transfer the Mainpuri case to Aligarh in order that both cases might be tried together, and on the same date obtained an order "Let notice go; stay meantime." On 14th August 1909, Kashi Nath attached before judgment certain properties of the defendants. On 27th August 1909, the Aligarh Court, on the application of the defendants, withdrew the attachment on the ground that the order of the High Court must be taken as a stay of proceedings in both Courts, and not of those in the Mainpuri Court only, and that, therefore, the attachment being a proceeding subsequent to the order, was illegal. Kashi Nath appealed to the High Court which held that the stay order of 9th August 1909, related only to the proceedings in the Mainpuri Court :

"and by its order of the 16th March 1910, directed that the parties be restored to the position they occupied on 9th August 1909, and that all orders which had followed from the wrong interpretation of the stay order be set aside."

In the interval between 27th August 1909 and 16th March 1910, however, when as a matter of fact, there was no order in existence attaching the properties the defendants sold them to four different transferees. Kashi Nath obtained a decree in his suit, and took out execution proceedings for sale of the properties on the strength of the attachment before judgment. The transferees having made unsuccessful objections in the execution department, brought four separate suits for declarations that the transfers were good and that the properties were not saleable in execution of Kashi Nath's decee. The suits were dismissed and four appeals were filed, three of which were heard and dismissed by various Benches, and then Gopal Prasad's appeal was heard, apparently by a different Bench. There was no finding that Gopal Prasad had been in collusion with the defendants, and the Court assumed that he was a bona fide purchaser of property which he knew was not at the time of his purchase under attachment. It was held, however, that the order of 16th March 1910, had retrospective effect and that, consequently, the sale to Gopal Prasad effected between 9th August 1909 and 16th March 1910, when there was no subsisting attachment was invalidated. The decision was based on two grounds. First, the Calcutta decisions which I have cited were without discussion treated as authorities for the broad proposition laid down and secondly the Court held that that it was bound by the previous unreported decisions of the Benches in the cases of the appeals of two of the three transferees.

It appears to me that this case is distinguishable from the one which I have to decide. The order of the Allahabad High Court of 16th March 1910, distinctly stated that it was to relate back to 9th August 1906. The order of Rutledge, J., of 5th March 1923, directed in terms an entirely fresh attachment and I do not think it can be implied that he meant it to have retrospective effect ; if he had so meant, he would have so stated just as he had stated that if by his earlier order of 2nd February 1909, he had meant that personal security should be accepted, he would have so stated. Further, I think, that the decision of the Allahabad High Court was not justified by the Calcutta decisions which I have cited and on which it professed to rest. Those decisions, as I have pointed out, are based on the peculiar remedy given to an attaching creditor by O. 21, R. 63, and are no authority in any other class of case. Even if the order of Rutledge, J., is to be deemed to have been passed with the intention that it should have retrospective effect I am of the opinion that the first attachment having been validly withdrawn, no subsequent attachment could have such an effect as against a person taking a transfer form the judgment-debtor in the interval. There is nothing in the Code, or so far as I know, elsewhere, which confers such a power on the Court. I do not say that in properly constituted proceeding, if fraud and collusion were alleged and proved between the judgment-debtor and a transferee a transfer obtained under such circumstances as exist in the present case could not be set aside. But in the objections of creditor No. 2, filed on 31st March 1927, there is no allegation that the charge was obtained either by fraud or collusion, and the objection, raised by Mr. Janab Ali for the first time before me, is simply, that the charge is void by reason of S. 64, Civil P. C. I hold that it was not for that reason void.

The only remaining objection pressed is that, inasmuch as the charge was given on 28th February 1923, and Nasse was adjudicated an insolvent on 28th March 1923, the charge is void as being a fradulent preference. This is a matter which was not gone into before Otter, J., and one on which I must hear evidence. The circumstances under which the charge was obtained may or may not have a bearing on that issue. As to that, at present, I express no opinion.

I think it desirable here to make a few remarks as to the time which the hearing of the review has already taken. A whole day was occupied by a discussion of preliminary objections to the review which failed, and by Mr. Burjorjee's arguments on the two points in issue before Otter, J., on one of which he succeeded, and another half day was occupied by arguments on a point taken before Otter, J., where I have held that Mr. Burjrajee has failed. A further half-day was occupied on an objection not alleged before Otter, J., on which I have held that Mr. Burjorjee has succeeded.

Order.—(25th June 1928) This order should be read in continuation of my order of 4th May 1928. I should first state that the objecting creditors are V. S. R. M. Chettyar (No. 2), Watson and Son Ltd. (No. 8) and D. (or O.) M. Sonai Muthia Pillay (No. 9). In the heading of my previous order by a clerical error V. S. R. M. Chettyar is described as creditor No. 2. In the body "Watson and Son Ltd., was declared as No. 7. It was so described in its objections. When I delivered that order, as it appeared possible that the evidence might be lengthy I directed that the case should come into the daily list in a week's time. The intervention of a long case has been the cause of the delay in the completion of the hearing. In this part of the case Mr. Joseph did not appear. Mr. Tambe was present all the time, but was content to adopt the arguments of Mr. Janab Ali.

The question for decision is whether the transaction evidenced by the charge of 28th February 1923, and the power of attorney of 2nd March 1923, in view of the fact that the adjudication took place less than three months of its date, is a fraudulent preference within S. 56 (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. Mr. Burjorjee said that he did not dispute that Nasse was at the time unable to pay his debts as they became due from his own money, and the only question I have to decide is whether the charge was created by him in favour of the applicants "with a view of giving" them a preference over the other creditors. The law applicable is not in dispute, counsel agree that the view of preferring need not be the whole view, but that it must be the dominant view. As was observed as long ago as 1883 by Baggalay, L. J., in Ex-parte Hill (13) at p. 701 in relation to the corresponding section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869.

> All that S. 92 says is that the conveyance must be made "with a view of giving such creditors a preference:" it does not say with the sole view. I understand it to mean that the substantial object or view must be the giving the creditor a preference, and that the mere fact that besides that view there may have been also some view of an advantage to be gained by the person who makes the preference does not alter the case, or prevent the application of S. 92."

Nor is it in dispute that the onus of showing that there is a fraudulent preference is, at any rate in the first instance, on those who assert it. Mr. Janab Ali argues that if a prima facie case is made out that a transaction amounts to a fraudulent preference, the onus shifts. Mr. Burjorjee does not contest this proposition. Reference is made to In re, Cohen (14). It was there held by a majority of the Court of Appeal that where a bankrupt in imminent expectation of bankruptcy voluntarily pays a particular creditor with the result of giving him a preference in fact, and the reason for such payment is unexplained, there is a prima facie case of fraudulent preference. Consequently, it being held that the trustee had proved a prima facie case of fraudulent preference, and there being no evidence to the contrary, the truestee was entitled to suceed on his application that the payment was a fraudulent preference Warrington, L. J., however, (at p 539) observed :

(13) [1883] 23 Ch. D. 695.
(14) [1894] 2 Ch. 505.

"The case is a peculiar one, and it must not be supposed that it will be any authority for questioning the validity of a payment of a debt made in the ordinary course of business by a man who knows he is at the time insolvent, but who may well make such payments in the hope of keeping his business on foot for a time and perhaps even of passing safely through the period of danger. Such payments have been held not to be fraudulent within the meaning of the section, and I desire to throw no doubt on the correctness of such decisions."

Sargant, L. J., who delivered a concurring judgment, said (at p 543) that there was .

"a general current of authority that, when a preference in fact has been given in anticipation of bankruptcy such preference in fact requires justification by the establishment of some other sufficient dominant intention."

He went on to say (at p 544) that the Court was not dealing with a case :

"where a debtor who knew himself to be insolvent made a payment to a creditor in the course of his business, and with the object of being able to carry his business on."

The position, therefore, is that it is for those who assert that there is a fraudulent preference to make out a prima facie case. If such a case is made out, it can be rebutted by proof that the explanation of the preference is that there was a dominant intention in the mind of the insolvent other than a desire to prefer a particular creditor. If there is such a dominant intention, the prima facie case is rebutted

Mr Janab Ali, accepting the preliminary onus, stated that he relied on the records of C. R. No 39 of 1923 (the suit by creditor No. 2 in which attachment before judgment was effected) and of C. R. Nos. 158 and 159 of 1923 (in which the applicants sought to establish their charge) taking the view that a prima facie case had been made out, he adduced no further evidence and closed his case. Mr. Burjorjee called two material witnesses namely, Vithaldas (a partner of the applicants) and the insolvent himself, to show that the charge was created by the insolvent in the ordinary course of his business and with the object of carrying it on.

I have already dealt at length with Civil Regular Suits Nos 39, 158, and 159 of 1923 and for the purposes of the issue I have now to decide it is only necessary to make brief reference to them in the light of the evidence which has now been given. (After discussing evidence, his Lordship proceeded) After giving my best consideration to the evidence, I have arrived at the conclusion that the dominant intention of Nasse was not to give a preference. As has been said the onus of proving a fraudulent preference is on those who assert it. I do not think that the records on which Mr. Janab Ali relies are sufficient to establish a prima facie case. The omission of the applicants to include their other securities in their suits, to my mind, has no bearing at all on the case. The proceedings in relation to the removal of attachment of the debt have a suspicious appearance, but suspicion is not equivalent to proof. Of evidence of collusion in the matter between the applicants and Nasse there is no proof whatever. Vithaldas says that he knew nothing about creditor No. 2's suit or the attachment proceedings, and Nasse says that he told Vithaldas nothing about them. If he was expecting to get further advances by giving security, he would not be likely to inform the prospective lender of the risky nature of the proposed security. As to his motive for desiring to get the attachment removed, his evidence is that he believed that he had a defence to the suit of creditor No. 2. He also thought that the persons who had been financing the Kokine brickfield had a right to the moneys accruing due in respect of it superior to that of creditor No. 2. And Mr. Burjorjee contends that there is some legal justification for his view inasmuch as if insolvency had supervened before the attachment was removed, the applicants (who were creditors of Nasse alone), would have had the right to be paid before creditor No. 2 who was creditor of a partnership consisting of Nasse and A. K. N. Mohamed Ebrahim.

However this may be, I do not think that Nasse's evidence on this point is sufficient to prove that in executing Ex. F he did so with a view of giving them a preference in the sense in which the expression is used in S. 56 (1) of the Act. I lay no stress on his having stated that he executed it " voluntarily." He was obviously using the word in contradistinction to " under pressure " as that term is usually used in this class of cases.

Even if a prima facie case could be held to have been made out by the opposing creditors, I am of the opinion that it has been rebutted. The applicants had been advancing large sums to Nasse to finance his Kokine brickfield contract. The work was nearing completion, and, so far as the evidence goes, there was at the time every prospect, once it was completed and the inevitable obstacles in the way of getting prompt payment surmounted, of a large sum being received in respect thereof. According to Zaveri, the other witness of the applicants, the claim subsequently made on behalf of the insolvent's estate was for over Rs. 1,20,000. The only difficulty was that Nasse was in embarrassed circumstances and could not pay his sub-contractors and coolies If he could be helped over the last lap, there was a reasonable prospect of the applicants' recovering their money The security which the applicants had was insufficient, and they might reasonably expect as a condition of their advancing further sums that they should receive further security. The same considerations apply, as I think, with even greater force, to Nasse If he could manage to hang on and complete his contract, he had a reasonable prospect of paying off the applicants and of making enough to enable him to continue his business. And this is how, according to the evidence, the charge came to be created Nasse gave the charge in order that he might receive the further advances which would enable him to carry on his business. I am of the opinion, therefore, that the charge was given in the ordinary course of business and was not a fraudulent preference It follows that the present application for review succeeds; and that I must rescind the order of 2nd June 1927, dismissing the applicants' application of 27th January 1924. The applicants are entitled to the order for which they then seek subject to one qualification. As will be seen on p. 6 of my previous order, Mr. Burjorjee undertook that the applicants would first realize the other securities for their debt and give credit for the net amount realized before seeking to enforce their charge. The order which I propose to make is that after the applicants have realized all their other securities for the debt due to them by the insolvent and have given credit for the net amount realized, the Official Assignee be directed to pay to them so much of the sum of Rs. 33,752-5-2 in his hands as may be necessary to satisfy the balance of such debt.

Creditors 2, 8 and 9 must pay the applicants' costs of the application for review. The case involves a large sum of money and important and difficult questions of law arose. The hearing was also protracted. I have noted in my previous order the time occupied up to its date The trial of the issue of fraudulent preference has occupied the equivalent of a full day. I allow as advocate's costs Rs. 340, and special costs at Rs 170 a day for three days.

Ray—for Appellant

R. M. Sen—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiff sued the defendants upon a deed leasing to defendant 1 certain paddy lands. Defendant 2 was impleaded as a guarantor for payment of rent in accordance with the covenants of the lease. The lease was granted in 1288-89 (1926-27) and the rent stated in the lease (Ex. A) was 670 baskets of paddy. The amount claimed by the plaintiff was 448 baskets of paddy or their value, the receipt by him of 222 baskets being admitted. The defence was that the land was leased to them for 250 baskets only, and, among other suggestions by way of defence fraud was alleged against the plaintiff.

It was the case for the plaintiff that of the total sum of 670 baskets mentioned in the deed of lease the amount of 420 baskets represented a debt due to the plaintiff by defendant 1 in respect of rent of other land This debt was, it is agreed, time barred when a deed of lease was executed.

The defendant's case upon the question of the amount was that the rent of 670 baskets of paddy was originally fixed in respect of the two parcels of land, but that later the plaintiff refused to lease one of the parcels to them, the rent for the remaining parcels actually being 250 baskets.

It is unnecessary to deal with the various points argued in the two lower Courts for it was conceded by R. M. Sen on behalf of the respondents that upon the facts the plaintiff was bound to succeed. That this is so is evident from an examination of the statements of the witnesses which in my view disclose an overwhelming case in support of the contentions of the plaintiff

The only serious suggestion made on behalf of the defendant before me was that this is a case to which S. 25, Contract Act of 1872, must apply and as there is no direct reference in Ex. A to the previous time barred debt the amount claimed upon this footing is not recoverable. Furthermore, it was said that as the terms of the Contract Act were reduced to the form of a written document oral evidence to prove the true nature of the consideration was inadmissible. Now it is perfectly true that the document makes no mention of the previous debt. Indeed its terms stated clearly that the rent reserved was in respect of the leased land. The case of Appa Rao v. Suryanarayana (1), is relied upon and supports the first part of Mr. Sen's argument.

The case of Ganpathy Moodelly v. Munisawmi Moodelly (2), is relied upon by Mr. Ray for the plaintiff. In that case there was a clear reference to an existing debt in the document and I am of opinion that the present case must stand upon a different footing. It is clear, however, that S. 92, Evidence Act, forbids only the "contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from the terms of the contract."

The consideration in the present case according to the plaintiff is the exact amount stated in the document. It has been decided that S. 92, Evidence Act, does not prevent a party to a contract from showing by oral evidence that the consideration is different from that described in the contract. What is not allowed by the section is to contradict the terms of the document. The question therefore is whether to show that a part of the consideration is in respect of a previous debt, and is not in respect of the amount due under the lease is a contradiction of the terms of the contract Four cases are of importance upon this point, viz. . Lal Mahomed v. Kallanus (3), Vasudeva Bhatlu v. Narasamma (4), Kumara v. Srinivasa (5) and Ganpathy Moodelly v Munisawmi Moodelly (2)

In all these cases the Courts have held the view that a party is not debarred by anything in the Evidence Act from showing the real character of the consideration fixed between the parties. In the present case the amount of the consideration is correctly stated, and it seems to me that the plaintiff brought himself within the principle I have referred to, when he adduced evidence to show that part of the consideration represented a past debt for rent and not a future liability arising under the contract. For these reasons the appeal must be allowed with costs in all Courts.

Doctor—for Plaintiff.

E Maung—for Defendant.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are perfectly clear. The defendant owed money to the plaintiff in respect of certain betting transactions which apparently took place at the end of November 1927 Some time in December the defendant having made default in payment of the amount due, except a sum of Rs 600, the plaintiff began pressing him for payment and sent two of his assistants to get the money from the defendant. They apparently did not succeed, in getting anything from him, and some time about the third week of December, Abraham, one of the assistants of the plaintiff, went and told the defendant that unless he paid up his master the plaintiff threatened to post him. The defendant pretends that he does not know the rules of the Turf Club in this respect, but I have not the least doubt that he knows everything about them The defendant thereupon gave a cheque post dated to 15th January. On that day or on the next day he wrote to the plaintiff asking him not to present the cheque and promising to make payment of Rs 1,000 on the succeeding Friday and the balance in the succeeding month. The plaintiff did not post the defendant as he could have done, and I am satisfied that the consideration for the passing of the cheque is the plaintiff's act in refraining from posting him before the Turf Club and bringing him on the list of defaulters of the Turf Club, which is the punishment inflicted in such cases.

The next question for consideration is the legal question whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover on the cheque in these circumstances It is alleged that the consideration for the cheque was an illegal consideration. The cheque was given for a collateral purpose, namely to induce the plaintiff to refrain from posting the defendant, and there is nothing in S. 30, Contract Act, which makes a promise based on such a consideration illegal. In the case of Leicester and Co. v. S. P. Mullick (1), the facts were somewhat similar to the facts in this case. There a hundi was passed and the person in whose favour the hundi was passed had already reported to the Turf Club, but agreed in consideration of the passing of the hundi to withdraw his name and prevent him from being posted as a defaulter. In Hyams v. Stuart King (2), the facts were exactly similar to those in the present case, the consideration there being a promise to refrain from declaring the giver of the cheque a defaulter. This was held to be a good consideration. The case in 27 Calcutta Weekly notes therefore practically disposes of the defendant's contention, but Mr. E. Maung, who appears for him, argues that the Calcutta case proceeded more or less on the English decisions which themselves were based upon a different Act Some of the provisions of the English Gaming Act are undoubtedly different from the Indian Act, but the principles applied are the same both in England and in this country. As a matter of fact at p. 447 (of 27 C. W. N) in Leicester's case (1) the Calcutta High Court disposes of an argument based upon S. 30, Contract Act, that that Act makes agreements by way of wager illegal. The learned Judges of the High Court pointed out that the sections of the Contract Act make a wagering contract void to the extent that no Court will enforce such a contract and not illegal. The collateral agreement therefore based upon a transaction which was originally a wagering transaction is not on that account illegal. I am therefore satisfied that there has been good consideration for the passing of the cheque in that the

Eunoose—for Appellant.

T. S. V. Chari—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are that the defendant Ma Pwa Sein and Ma Thin Hline (deceased) were sisters, being the daughters of U Po Ku from whom they had inherited certain properties. Ma Thin Hline died on 8th July 1927 and 11 days before her death, namely on 29th June 1927 she executed what purports to be a release of her rights in the share or interest to which she was entitled in the estate of her father, U Po Ku. After Ma Thin Hline's death, her husband Maung Ba Saw and her two children, plaintiffs 2 and 3, instituted the present suit for administration of U Po Ku's estate As regards the deed of release executed by Ma Thin Hline, they alleged that it was executed on the death bed of Ma Thin Hline, and that it was obtained by the defendant by undue influence at a time when Ma Thin Hline was enfeebled by illness. The defendant Ma Pwa Sein pleaded that the release deed was for consideration and was executed by Ma Thin Hline when she was in a sound state of mind. She also alleged that there was a prior partition and that the suit for administration did not therefore lie. The trial Judge found against the defendant on all the issues and gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendant now appeals. As regards the question of prior partition, the evidence of Maung Tun Pe, one of the lugyis who admittedly effected the partition shows that the sisters divided only the moveable properties leaving immovable properties undivided. A division therefore of a portion of the estate does not preclude any of the heirs from filing an administration suit in respect of the undivided portion.

As regards the other defence, the trial Judge held that the deed was in effect a transfer by way of gift and having been made on Ma Thin Hline's death bed was invalid The Burmese doctors who were examined as witnesses state that Ma Thin Hline was suffering from a lingering disease of which she died. They and U Po Hla, the Sub-Registrar, who went to the house, all state that her mind was not in any way clouded, when the deed was executed This may or may not be so, but there is no doubt that Ma Thin Hline was ill at the time of the execution of the deed and died of the illness. She must have known that she was going to die. If the deed is a death bed gift no question of the donor's mental state arises The deed itself, though not very happily worded shows clearly that it was intended to be a release of Ma Thin Hline's rights in her father's estate. The consideration is stated to be the necessaries supplied to Ma Thin Hline and her children by the donee, Ma Pwa Sein, for over 5 or 6 years and the necessaries supplied during Ma.Thin Hline's sickness. It is fairly clear that this is a very illusory consideration. Both the sisters had an interest in the paddy lands, the two houses and house sites, which form part of the estate of U Po Kin, and if the defendant did support her sister or sister's children it may reasonably be presumed that she did so out of the proceeds of their father's estate. The learned trial Judge was perfectly right in the conclusion he arrived at that the consideration was illusory and that the document if it could take effect at all could only take effect as a death bed gift is not within the competence of a Burmese Buddhist. The appeal must therefore fail. We may also note that whether as a release or as a gift, it is very doubtful if Ma Thin Hline could without being joined by her husband, transfer her interest to her sister or relinquish the same in her favour. For these reasons we dismiss the appeal without costs.

Halker—for Applicant.

Ba Soe—for Respondents

Judgment — The respondents brought a suit against the petitioner, Maung Po Htaik, for the recovery of Rs 141. Their case was that money was collected for a confederacy to buy tickets for the Rangoon St. Leger Sweep from Mandalay. The confederacy to purchase the tickets consisted of certain officials in the Thayetmyo District. The petitioner was collecting one rupee contributions and obtained Re. 1 for this purpose from the respondents. The confederacy finally won a prize as a result of the race and each subscriber of Re. 1 obtained as his share of the prize Rs. 141. The respondents claimed a similar sum from the appellant. The trial Court dismissed the suit, but the suit was decreed by the District Court on appeal and the petitioner has now come to this Court in revision.

Section 30, Contract Act provides that "agreements by way of wager are void and that no suit shall be brought for recovering anything alleged to be won on any wager or entrusted to any person to abide the result of any game or other uncertain event on which any wager is made."

It is clear, therefore, that the respondents could not possibly succeed merely on the strength of their agreement with the petitioner. The second clause of S. 30 which the trial Judge discusses obviously has no application to the present case

The District Court referred to an unofficial report of a case decided by the late Chief Court of Lower Burma. The question decided there was also decided in Bholanath v. Mulchand (1). If, as a result of a wagering contract, an agent has received money on his principal's behalf, he is then liable to account to the principal for that money, but a suit cannot be brought in which the cause of action is based directly on the wagering contract The plaintiffs in the present case clearly could not succeed merely on the strength of their contract with the petitioner They must prove that the petitioner has received the prize money and is holding it on their behalf. The plaint on this point is vaguely worded, but assuming that it does allege that the petitioner did receive the money, it seems to me quite impossible to hold that that allegation has been proved. There is no evidence whatsoever on that point. The prize money was received by the confederacy, but the evidence on the record is to the effect that the respondent's names were never entered in the books of the confederacy as having contributed towards the stake money. The learned District Judge remarks:

"Defendant on the other hand admits having received Re. 1 from the plaintiffs for the Office Society Confederacy and for the Mandalay Sweep and he also admits that a prize has been won and that each share amounted to Rs. 141, but he avers that as Maung Ma who kept the list of subscribers had told him that the list had been closed, he had added to the Re. 1 given by the plaintiffs another Re. 1 and purchased a share in another sweep, the list of subscribers in that confederacy being held by one Maung Po Nyo and he submits that he informed the plaintiffs of this fact. The point for decision, therefore, is . Did the defendant inform the plaintiffs that the Office Society list had been closed and that their Re. 1 had been deposited with Maung Po Nyo for another sweep, and if so, did the plaintiffs agree? The onus of proof lies on the defendant, who has not been able to produce a tittle of evidence to prove this point."

It seems to me that the District Judge has entirely misconceived the question he had to decide. The plaintiffs could not sue on their wagering contract and could not claim from the petitioner because he had failed to carry out its terms. They have to prove affirmatively that he had actually received the prize money on their behalf. There was no evidence whatsoever on this point nor can I see how any presumption can be drawn that the petitioner did receive the money. In my opinion, the respondents entirely failed to prove a cause of action on which they could sue The case is before me in revision, but I think there is sufficient ground for interference It seems to me that the District Court's method of arriving at its conclusion was irregular and that the Court entirely misconceived the point at issue I set aside the decree of the District Court and restore that of the trial Court dismissing the suit of the plaintiff-respondents. The plaintiff-respondents will pay the costs of the petitioner throughout.

Civil Misc. Appln. No. 129 of 1928, Decided on 25th March 1929.

(a) Income-tax Act, S. 66 (3)—In particular year assessment made on actual income—Objection that sum already assessed in previous years was included in assessment—Assistant Commissioner finding that assessment in those years being on best data, there was no conclusive proof that sum was already assessed—Question of law arises from such order viz., whether assessee is entitled to show sum is included in estimate in previous years and Commissioner must refer case.

In a particular year an assessment was made on actual receipts. It was objected by the assessee that a certain sum already assessed in previous years was included in the receipts. Assistant Commissioner in appeal found that as the estimate of income in those years was not assessment strictly on accrued basis but merely on best available data, there was no conclusive proof that such sum had already been included in the assessment of the previous years.

Held, that a question of law arose from the order whether or not the assessee was entitled to show that the actual receipts had in fact been included in the estimates of the previous years and the Commissioner must state and refer the case on the question.

Venkat Ram—for Applicants.

C. Grant, Offg. Govt. Advocate—for Respondent.

Heald, J.—Applicants, who are the C. T. V S. Chettyar Firm were assessed for income-tax on an estimated income of Rs 19,030 for the year 1924-25. For the year 1926-27 they submitted a return showing a loss of over Rs 45,000 They said that the actual income from their business for the two years 1924-25 and 1925-26 was Rs. 10,250 and that in view of the fact that for those two years they had paid on an estimated income of Rs. 56,138, they had already paid on an excess of more than Rs 45,000 over their actual income. They produced certain accounts and a statement which showed their actual income for 1925-26 as Rs. 1,795 and another statement which showed their loss as Rs. 3,877-10-0. The Income-tax Officer rejected these statements on the doubtful ground that although an assessee can file a revised return he cannot file revised statements. On an examination of the accounts for the year 1925-26 the Income-tax Officer found that appellant's income for that year was Rs. 36,654 That assessment was based on a calculation of interest which had actually accrued due during that year in the case of transactions with other Chettyars and interest which had been actually received in that year in the case of transactions with customers other than Chettyars. Applicants objected that part of the sum which on that method of calculation represented the actual interest received from non-Chettyar customers during the year 1925-26 had already been assessed to income-tax in that year and in the previous year, because in those years the amount entered on account of interest from non-Chettyar creditors was based on an estimate and not on actuals, and that estimate included interest earned, but not yet received in the year of assessment. The Income-tax Officer rejected this contention and assessed applicants on Rs. 36,654 for 1926-27.

Applicants appealed to the Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax who said that it was obvious that so much of the interest receipts from non-Chettyars as accrued in the previous years must have been taxed already in those years and that to include those receipts in the present assessment would be tantamount to double taxation. He accordingly returned the proceedings to the Income-tax Officer for enquiry and report as to the amount of interest from non-Chettyars which accrued in the previous years and which was included in the assessment for 1926-27. The Income-tax Officer reported that the amount of interest from non-Chettyars which accrued in the previous year was actually received in 1925-26 was Rs. 34,876 but the Assistant Commissioner said that on further consideration he found that the estimates made for the two years 1924-25 and 1925-26 were not strictly assessments on what is known as the "accrued" basis but mere assessment on the best data available and that therefore there wrs no conclusive proof that the sum of Rs. 34,876 had been included in the assessment for the previous years. He accordingly dismissed the appeal. Applicants then applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax to state the case and refer it to this Court under the provisions of S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act. The Commissioner refused to state and refer the case and at the same time he passed an order dealing in review with the Assistant Commissioner's orders. Applicants now ask us for an order under S. 66 (3) of the Act requiring the Commissioner to state and refer the case to this Court. The only question which is at present before us is whether a question of law arises out of the Assistant Commissoner's order.

It seems to me clear that a question of law does arise, that question being whether in a case where an assessment has been made not on actual receipts but on estimated receipts during the previous two years and the basis of assessment for the third year is charged to a basis on actual receipts, the assessee is entitled to show that the actuals which are taken as the basis of the assessment for the third year that is, in the present case the year 1926-27, include sums which were included in the estimates for the earlier year or years, on which income-tax was paid for those years. It seems clear that if the income-tax has in an earlier year already been paid on amounts actually received in a later year, income-tax cannot be charged on those receipts in the later year, and it does not seem to me to matter whether the income-tax authorities choose to call the assessment for the year or years in which the tax was actually paid on those amounts an assessment on the "accrued basis" or an estimate on the best data available. In either case, the basis of of the assessment is admittedly an estimate and the question of law seems to me to be whether or not the assessee is entitled to show that receipts for the latter year have in fact been included in the estimate or estimates for the earlier year or years. I would therefore require the Commissioner to state and refer the case under the provisions of S. 66 (3), Income-tax Act. The cost of the present application should abide the orders of this Court on the reference.

Otter, J.—This is an application under S. 66 (3), Income-tax Act, 1922, asking this Court to require the Commissioner to state a case upon a question of law for reference to this Court. The short history of the matter is that, on 29th January 1927, by an order of the Income-tax Officer, Maubin, the applicant firm was assessed to income-tax for the year 1926 27 on the sum of Rs. 36,654 in respect of income for that year. The assessment for that year was made so far as non-Chettyar customers were concerned upon the basis of cash receipts from them during that year. The figure arrived at by the Income-tax Officer for such receipts was Rs. 79,716. It was objected by the applicants that included in that sum was an amount of about Rs 39,000 which had already been assessed to income-tax in the two preceding years. In these years, viz., 1924-25 and 1925-26, the assessment was said to have been made on what is known as the "accrued basis." For the year 1926-27 the basis of calculation was altered and as I have said, the applicant firm was assessed for non-Chettyar receipts upon a cash basis. Upon an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner the latter by an "interim order dated 23rd March 1927, returned the proceedings to the Income-tax Officer for enquiry and report " as to the amount of interest from non-Chettyars which accrued in previous years and which had been included in the sum of Rs. 79,716."

and adjourned the appeal. The Income-tax Officer reported the correct figure to be Rs. 34,876, on 27th April 1927, the Assistant Commissioner passed final orders dismissing the appeal. In the course of that order he stated that he found that the accountant's description of the previous assessment on "accrued basis" was not strictly correct. It should be stated that it is said that an assessment on "accrued basis" means an assessment upon amounts due but not necessarily paid during the period in question. The Assistant Commissioner went on to say that after a return by the applicants had been filed (for the year 1924-25) the firm's books were called for and after extracting certain figures from the books certain calculations were made according to the system then in vogue, it was reported that the assessable income was Rs. 19,630. This figure was accepted by the Income-tax Officer and assessment was made accordingly. According to the Assistant Commissioner this method was in reality an estimate on the best data available. For the following year according to him, after the return had been filed by the applicant firm certain figures were again extracted from the account books, and after making certain calculations according to the same system as in the previous year, the accountant reported the assessable income as Rs. 37,188 and assessment was made accordingly on this figure. Here also, according to the Assistant Commissioner it was an estimate on the best available data." This officer went on to say that:

"It could not rightly be called the accrued basis. It follows therefore that there is no conclusive proof that the amount Rs. 34,876 had been taxed in the previous years."

He, therefore, was unable to exclude this amount from the assessment for 1926-27.

On 26th May 1927, the applicant's firm applied under S. 66 (2) of the Act to the Commissioner of Income-tax praying that certain questions of law arising out of the appellate order of the Assistant Commissioner should be referred to this Court. On 19th August and 16th September 1927 respectively, notices were issued by the Commissioner of Income-tax to the assessee under S. 33, Income-tax Act, calling upon them (apparently) to make any representation they wished to make in respect of a proposed revision of their assessment. On 5th March 1928, the Commissioner modified the orders of the Assistant Commissioner, dated 23rd March 1927 and 27th April 1927 by passing an order rejecting the appeal of the assessees dated 26th February 1927 on the ground :

" that the assessments for the previous years having been computed on a method of averages, the sum in question viz., Rs. 39,000 . . . . . has not been subject to double assessment. "

In other words he held that as the method adopted was not " accrued basis " but a basis he called a " method of averages " as a matter of fact, the Rs. 39,000 was not and could not have been doubly assessed He seems also to have thought that the Assistant Comissioner would be bound by his conclusion contained in the adjournment order of 23rd March 1927 and he therefore " modified " this order and that of 27th April 1927. On 7th March 1928 the Commissioner of Income-tax passed orders upon the application preferred by the applicant firm on 26th May 1927 and said that none of the questions he was asked to refer could be said to arise and refused to state a case for this Court.

I observe that the applicant firm had objected to the revision proceedings initiated by the Commissioner but these objections were overruled in the order which is not before the Court. The Commissioner deals with these objections at length. He also says (as I understand at the end of para. 6, of his order) that as the figures for 1924-25 and 1925-26 were taken from assessee's books which were kept on a cash basis (and not on accrued basis) no double taxation took place. Later he makes a statement that I cannot follow viz :

" as regards the first objection, I do not think that it can be contended seriously that the question whether or not the assessment in the previous years was made in the " accrued " basis is a question of fact. "

He may not have meant to say this, but if of course this is a question of law it should be stated for this Court.

It seems to me however, that the matter should be put differently viz., as a matter of law, cannot the assessee be allowed to show not necessarily that his assessment was made on one basis or another but that in fact from figures he has been doubly assessed. In other words is the applicant not to be allowed to show (if he can) that the total of the estimated income of the firm for 1924-25 and 1925-26 plus the actual income for 1926-27 in fact exceeded the total actual income for those 3 years. The Commissioner then deals with the objection that revision proceedings cannot be opened by the Commissioner in a case where an application is pending under S. 66 (2) of the Act He decides that such an application is no bar to proceedings under S. 33. But surely this is a question of law He can only pass orders subject to the provisions of the Act. (sub-S. 2) and it might be argued that when the Act provides a remedy for an assessee, action should not be taken by the Commissioner until it is decided whether such remedy is available or not. It is true that the proviso to sub-section of S. 66 may provide an answer But it might also be argued that action by a Commissioner under S 33 which cannot (apparently) be called in question by this Court might shut out an assessee from his remedy under S 66 (2)

I think, therefore, that the Commissioner must state a case for our decision upon the following questions of law :

(1) Is the applicant firm entitled to show that the income upon which he was assessed for the 3 years in question exceeded the income actually received in those 3 years ?

(2). Can the Commissioner during the pendency of an application under S. 66, sub-Ss. 2 and 3, Income-tax Act, take up under S. 33 of the Act proceedings which are the subject of the said application ?

Opinion.—On Civil Miscellaneous Application No. 129 of 1928, the Commissioner of Income-tax was required to state the case of the assessment of the C T. V. S. Chettyar Firm for the year 1926-1927 and to refer it to this Court. His statement of the case shows that for the assessment for the year 1924-1925 the firm produced its account books, and that after an examination of these books its income was computed at Rs. 19,030 and that for the following years its income was similarly computed to be Rs 37,188, the computation for both years being made not according to the income shown in the account books, but by a determination of the total capital of the firm and a calculation of the interest which might reasonably be expected to be earned by that capital, after deduction in respect of borrowed capital and expenses. For the year 1926-1927 a different method of assessment was adopted, the assessment being based on actual receipts of interest in respect of transactions with non-Chettyars, that is as the Commissioner says with "the vast majority of the persons to whom loans are made" and on interest accrued due, but not necessarily received in respect of transactions with Chettyars. On that basis, the assessment for the year 1926-1927 was Rs. 36,654. The firm appealed to the Assistant Commissioner against this assessment on the ground that, so far as transactions with non-Chettyars are concerned it included actual receipts of interest amounting to 39,000 which had accrued due in the previous years, and according to the method of assessment adopted in those years had been included in the assessment for those years.

The Assistant Commissioner accepted that view and sent the case to the Income tax Officer for a report as to what part of the receipts included in the assessment for 1926-1927 represents interest which had accrued in the previous years. The Income-tax Officer reported this sum to be 34,876. The Assistant Commissioner then changed his mind, and found that because the assessments for the previous years were not based directly on the firm's accounts, this sum of 34,876 could not be regarded as having been included in the assessments for these years. He accordingly rejected the claim to have that amount excluded from the assessment The firm thereupon applied to the Commissioner to refer to this Court certain questions or alleged questions of law. Before disposing of the application for a reference to this Court the Commissioner reviewed the Assistant Commissioner's orders and substituted for them an order rejecting the appeal to the Assistant Commissioner on the ground that the assessment for the previous years having been computed on a method of averages, the sum which the firm claimed to exclude from the assessment for 1926-1927 had not been subject to double assessment. On the footing of his finding that the basis of the assessment for the two previous years was not technically an assessment on what is known as the "accrued basis" but was "a method of averages" and of his having set aside these parts of the Assistant Commissioner's order which were in question he held that none of the questions which he was asked to refer arose.

The firm then applied to this Court under the provisions of S 66 (3) of the Act, and a Bench of the Court required the Commissioner to state the case, and refer it under that section. Of the two Judges who dealt with the application under S. 66 (3) one was of opinion that the question of law which arose on the facts was whether in a case where the assessment for the two previous years had been made on a basis not of actual income but of income established at a certain rate per cent on the capital of the business, and where for the third year the basis of assessment is changed to a basis of actual income the assessee is entitled to show that the actual income which is taken as the basis of assessment for the third year, includes sums which formed part of the estimated income for the previous years and which had therefore been included in the assessment for those years on which tax had already been paid. The other learned Judge put the same question in a more practical form namely:

"Is the applicant firm entitled to show that the income on which he was assessed for the three years in question exceeded the income actually received in these three years?"

He also added a question whether during the pendency of an application under S 66 (2) of the Act the Commissioner can exercise his power of review under S 33. As an answer to the latter question I would say merely that proviso to S 66 (2) of the Act shows that the Commissioner can exercise that power.

In his order of reference the Commissioner says that :

He thus admits the right of an assessee to show that there has been a double assessment, and that right cannot be questioned. If in fact there has been a double assessment it is clear that in law, there is no warrant for such double assessment, and that income on which tax has already been paid must be excluded from the assessment. But the Commissioner goes on to say that if the assessment for a particular year was based on an estimate and not on actual figures, then the assessee " cannot show " that income included in a subsequent assessment was included in the assessment based on that estimate. If as seems probable this statement was intended to be a statement of fact, and to mean that it is impossible to show that income subsequently assessed was included in the computation on which an earlier assessment was based or in the assessment based on that computation, then it is a statement based entirely on the Commissioner's opinion and not on the facts of the case. If on the other hand it was intended to be a statement of the law, namely that where an assessment has been based on a computation under the proviso to S. 13 of the Act, an assessee is not entitled to show that income included in a subsequent assessment was included in the computation and in the assessment based on the computation, then it raises a clear question of law which it is for this Court to decide.

As supporting his statement, whether it is a statement of fact or law the Commissioner relies on the decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of K. T. S. K. A S. Chettyar (1), but in that case the Court was clearly of opinion that the inclusion of income in the assessment for one year which had in fact been included in the assessment on which tax had been paid for a previous year would warrant the exclusion of such income from the assessment for the subsequent year, and the basis of the decision was that because the assessment for the previous year was an assessment made by the Income-tax Officer " to the best of his judgment " under S. 23 (4) of the Act, and because it was the inclusion of the disputed income in the assessment for that year which was alleged to be mistaken, that alleged mistake could not be allowed to be proved because no appeal lies against an assessment under S. 23 (4), so that the applicants who by their own default had precluded themselves from appealing against the inclusion of that income in the assessment for the previous year, could not in the following year be allowed to claim that the mistake should be corrected by the exclusion of that income from the assessment based on the receipt of the year in which it was actually received.

Whether that decision was right or wrong, and it seems probable that as a general statement of law it was wrong, it is no authority for the proposition that where income has been assessed for one year under the proviso to S. 13 [and not under S. 23 (4)] the assessee cannot whether in fact or in law show that the same income has been included in the assessment for the following year.

A case which was in some respects similar to the present case was decided by a Special Bench of the High Court of Madras in the Commissioner of Income-tax v. Muthu Sarvarayadu (2) where the question referred was :

" where computation of the income, profits and gains for the particular year is made as directed in the proviso to S. 13, Income-tax Act of 1922, are any income, profits or gains which accrued during that year, but are received subsequently liable to be assessed as income for the year during which they are received ?"

The Bench said that if the wording of the question was intended to propound the question whether, if a man has been taxed in respect of book debts owing to him in one year, which he has not actually received he can again be taxed on the same sums of money when they are actually received in cash in a later year of assessment, the answer must obviously be " No." But in that particular case the Commissioner had recorded, as a finding of fact based on the evidence in the case, that the sums which the assessee claimed to deduct from his assessment for the subsequent year had not been included in assessment from the previous years, and by reason of that finding the learned Judges said that the question referred could not really arise out of the findings of fact which were binding on them, namely, that the man had not been taxed at all on the sums in question until he was sought to be taxed in the year of assessment, which was under consideration in that case.

In the present case there is no finding of fact that the sums in question were not included in the assessments for the previous years. On the contrary the only finding of fact on this subject is that of the Income-tax Officer that Rs. 34,876 had been so included. The findings on the footing of which the Assistant Commissioner and the Commissioner rejected the claims were either findings of fact based on evidence or findings of law, since they were that the assessee could not prove that the sums in question were included in the "computation" which was made under the proviso to to S 13. The Commissioner said that his finding on this point was a finding of fact and he put into the form of a finding of fact when he said that there had not been a double assessment, but the reason which he gave for that finding, namely, that the assessment for the previous years had been computed on a method of averages and that the assessee could not prove that the disputed income had been included in these assessments shows that his answer begged the question of law and as a finding of fact was not based on any relevent evidence.

(1) Civ. Misc. Appln No. 19 of 1927.

The facts of the case are that the assessments for 1924-25 and 1925-26 were based on a computation of income, profits and gains under the proviso to S. 13 of the Act; that that computation included all interest earned or "accrued" whether it had been received or not, that for the year 1926-27, so far as interest from non-Chettyar customers was concerned the basis of the assessment was changed from a basis of computation of accrued interest to a basis of interest actually received; that by reason of that change the question arose whether interest actually received in the year, on the income of which the assessment for 1926-27 was based, had accrued and had therefore been included in the computation and assessments for the previous years, and that the Income-tax Officer found that a sum of Rs. 34,876 which was received in the year on the income of which the assessment for 1926-27 was based and was therefore included in the assessment for 1926-27, had in fact accrued and had therefore been taxed in the previous years. On these facts it seems clear that there had been a double assessment and that the assessee was entitled to relief unless the Commissioner was right in holding that because the assessments for 1924-25 and 1926-27 were made under the proviso to S. 13, the assessee could not prove that income included in the assessment for 1926-27 had already been included in the assessments for 1924-25 and 1925-26.

I know of no authority in the Act or elsewhere for the view that the fact that the basis of an assessment was a computation under S. 13 of the Act, precludes the assessee from showing that particular income was included in that assessment, and I see no reason to believe that there is in fact any warrant for the Commissioner's opinion that it is impossible for an assessee to show that such income was included in such an assessment.

I would accordingly decide the question, which in my opinion is raised by the case, by saying that where the computation of income, profits and gains for a particular year has been made under the provisions of S. 13 of the Act:

"upon such basis and in such manner as the Income-tax Officer may determine," the assessee is entitled to show that income, profits and gains included in the assessment for a subsequent year were included in that computation, and that it is a question of fact, to be decided on the evidence in the particular case, which he succeeds in showing that they were so included. I would direct the Commissioner to pay the costs of the firm in this reference and in Civil Miscellaneous No. 129-28, advocate's fees in each case to be 10 gold mohurs.

To a suit by the owner to recover possession of immovable property of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards, it is a valid defence that the defendant had been put into possession under an oral contract of sale after paying the purchase money and such defence can be raised even though the right to sue for specific performance of the contract of sale may be barred by limitation: *A. Brown, J.—The plaintiff-appellants sued the defendant-respondents for possession of certain land. The defence was that the defendants had been put into possession under an oral contract of sale by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs. The trial Court found that the defendants did obtain possession in this way and that the plaintiffs had obtained the purchase money, and the suit was accordingly dismissed. The District Court on appeal concurred with the trial Court in its finding on the facts and dismissed the appeal. The appellants then came to this Court in second appeal, and it was urged that the defendants were not entitled to rely on their possession under the contract in view of the fact that at the time the suit was brought a suit by the vendees for specific performance of the contract of sale was barred by limitation. The appeal was heard by a single Judge of this Court who decided against the contention put forward by the appellants but who subsequently granted a certificate under S. 13 of the Letters Patent for further appeal on the ground that the point had not previously been decided specifically by this Court.

In the case of Maung Myat Tha Zan v. Ma Dun (1), it was held by a Full Bench of this Court that to a suit by the legal owner for possession of immovable property of a value of Rs. 100 or upwards it was a valid defence that the defendant was given possession of the property by the legal owner under a contract for sale as defined in S 54, T. P. Act. It has not been suggested that we are not bound by this decision. But it is contended that the decision had reference only to cases in which a suit by the person in possession for specific performance of a contract of sale was not barred by limitation. Although the answer to the reference in that case was made in general terms, it is clear that in making that answer two at least of the Judges of the Bench had in mind the fact that in that particular case a suit for specific performance was not barred. I agree therefore with the contention put forward by the appellants that Maung Myat Tha Zan's case (1) does not decide definitely the point now at issue between the parties. I am, however, of opinion that the principle approved in Maung Myat Tha Zan's case (1) must be held to be applicable whether a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale is or is not barred by limitation.

I dealt precisely with this point as an Additional Judge of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court, Mandalay, in the case of Maung Po Tha v. Maung Ba Din (2). The view I took in that case was that although the provisions of the Limitation Act would prevent the defendant from suing for specific performance of a contract, they did not debar him from setting up his contract in defence to a suit for possession by the plaintiff. At the time I wrote that judgment there were conflicting decisions on the point, and the view of the High Court of Madras was that unless there was a registered document in the circumstances to which S 54, T P. Act applied, the person in possession under a contract of sale could not resist a suit for possession brought by the owner. But the previous decisions to that effect have since been overruled by a Full Bench of that Court in the case of Vizagapatam Sugar Development Co v Muthuramareddi (3) In that case the plaintiff had agreed to sell all lands worth more than Rs 100 to the defendant, had received consideration and had put the defendant in possession but had not executed a conveyance It was held by the Full Bench that part performance by way of delivery of possession and an enforceable right on the defendant's part to specific performance were each a good defence to the action; and when the same case came up for decision on a further point before a Bench of two Judges, that Bench held that the plea of part performance was not limited to cases where the right to sue for specific performance was not barred on the date of the subsequent suit. A similar view of the law has been taken by the High Court of Bombay in the case of Sandu Walji v. Bhikchand Surajmal (4).

We have been referred on behalf of the appellants to the case of Kalipada Basu v. Fort Gloster Jute Manufacturing Co.

Ltd. (5). It is suggested that this is an authority for holding that the defence raised in this case cannot be put forward when the claim for specific performance would be barred by limitation. I notice, however, that in the Calcutta case it was the plaintiff who was seeking to recover title on the strength of his possession and the present question was not therefore directly in issue.

I referred to and followed the Allahabad case of Salamatuzzamin Begam v Masha Allah Khan (6) in my judgment in Maung Po Tha's case (2). I see no reason for altering the opinion I expressed in that case, and for the reasons set forth therein I hold that the defence that the defendant has been put into possession under a contract of sale after paying the purchase money can be raised in a suit to recover possession by the original owner, even though the right to sue for specific performance of the contract of sale may be barred by limitation

It is contended that the ordinary rule should not be followed in this case because it is in evidence that the defendants knew at the time of the contract that a registered document was necessary in order to convey a valid title But we are unable to see how these facts can affect the principle applicable It is suggested that the defendants deliberately refrained from obtaining a registered deed in order to save stamp duty and thereby defraud the revenue This argument appears to me to be somewhat farfetched, and if there were any fraud at all it was not against the plaintiffs I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs

Rutledge, C J.—I agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs. While Maung Myat Tha Zan's case (1) does not expressly decide the point at issue in the present case, I am also of opinion that the principles therein approved must be held applicable irrespective of a suit for specific performance lying or not The cases cited by my brother Brown show that a large preponderance of Indian judicial opinion is in favour of the view we take.

Tun Tin—for Respondent.

Judgment.—These two appeals arise out of an administration suit filed in the District Court of Hanthawaddy by one Ma Nwe who claims to be the legitimate daughter of the late U Tun Lin by his wife Ma Ngwe Sa against her stepmother Ma Sai Da. Ma Nwe claimed a three-fourth share valued at Rs. 1,16,000. The status of her mother as a wife was denied, and it was contended that, if Ma Nwe was entitled to any share, it could not be three-fourths. But what the share should be has not been stated in the written statement. The learned District Judge held that Ma Nwe is U Tun Lin's legitimate child, and passed a decree in her favour giving a half share in the payin property of her father and one-eighth share in the hnapazone property of the last marriage. Ma Nwe appeals because she considers that she is entitled to three-fourths share in the payin property. Ma Sai Da also appeals because Ma Nwe has been held to be the legitimate child of U Tun Lin. (Here his Lordship discussing evidence on the question whether Ma Nwe was the legitimate child of U Tun Lin concluded that there was no reason to disturb the finding of the learned Judge of the Court below.) Now we come to the question of shares.

The estate appears to be made up of the payin property brought to the last marriage by the deceased as well as of the hnapazone of that marriage. The major portion was inherited after the death of Ma Nwe's mother and before the marriage with Ma Sai Da. Tun Lin's father U Ein Ga died in 1273 (1911). A month or two after U Ein Ga's death there was a partition of his estate between Tun Lin and his step mother Ma Yon. Ma Sai Da was married about three years later. The inherited property no doubt constituted the payin of Tun Lin when he married Ma Sai Da The learned Judge followed the division made in a similar case of Ma Leik v. Maung Nwe (1) by Moore, J., in which Hartnoll, J., concurred, namely half to the stepchild and half to the stepparent Moore, J., after referring to the Dhammathats in S. 229 of Kinun Mingyi's Digest observes :

"There is thus a fairly general consensus of authority for the proposition that of the property taken by the father to the second marriage, the children of the first marriage shall receive three-fourths and their stepmother one-fourth. I think it is clear from the above quotation that the property referred to is the property of the first marriage, and that the children of the first marriage are awarded a larger share in this property because it was their parents' property at the commencement of their union."

Out of the 25 Dhammathats quoted in S. 229 about seven seem to support that view. They refer to the payin brought to the second marriage as the property of the former marriage. But it is very strange that Manukye has not been quoted in S. 229 at all. The Privy Council has given that Dhammathat a commanding position among all the Dhammathats and in the case of Ma Hnin Bwin v. U Shwe Gon (2) their Lordships have laid down that where Manukye is not ambiguous other Dhammathats do not require to be referred to.

Section 8 of Book X of the Manukye gives the rule of partition between the stepparent and the step-child, regarding the payin taken to the second marriage and the hnapazone of that marriage. As regards payin it gives three-fourths to the stepchild and one-fourth to the step-parent. This division is the same as laid down by the majority of the Dhammathats quoted in S 229 of the Digest. But Manukye does not appear to restrict the payin to the property acquired during the former marriage. It seems to include also the property acquired during the two marriages. The expression " Maya dwin shithamya oksa" (all the property possessed by the wife) is wide enough to include such property. The above rule of partition given in the Manukye is in no way ambiguous. If the property was inherited before the last marriage, the stepparent is entitled to only a quarter share, but if the property was inherited during the last marriage, the stepparent is entitled to half We therefore cannot accept the rule of division laid down in Ma Leik's case (1) As regards the hnapazone of the last marriage, the division made by the lower Court is correct and is in accordance with the rule of partition laid down in the Full Bench case of Ma Nyein v. Maung Maung (3).

We accordingly modify the decree of the lower Court by increasing Ma Nwe's share in the inherited property of her father from one half to three-fourths. She is entitled to her costs on the value of the quarter share in this Court and on the value of the three-fourths share in the Court below. Ma Sai Da's cross-objection is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Ref. No. 131 of 1928, Decided on 7th February 1929, made by Dist. Mag., Bassein.

(a) Burma Expulsion of Offenders Act, S. 2 (B) (3) and (4) — Under S. 2-B (3) and (4) person may become offender not by reason of conviction of offence.

Under S. 2-B (3) (4) a person may become an offender not by reason of conviction of an offence, for it is well recognised law that orders under S. 118, Criminal P. C., or under S. 7, Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act are not convictions of offences. [P 255 C 2]

(b) Burma Expulsion of Offenders Act, S. 4 (1) — Wording of S. 4 (1) restricts its application to offender under S. 2-B (1) (2).

Wording of S. 4 (1) restricts the application of the section to persons who are offenders under S. 2-B (1) (2) and the section can have no application to a person who is an offender under S. 2-B (3) (4). [P 255 C 2]

(c) Burma Expulsion of Offenders Act, S. 4 — Neither District Magistrate nor High Court has jurisdiction to deal with person against whom order of restriction is passed under Burma Habitual offender's Restriction Act S. 7.

Although a person against whom an order of restriction is passed under S. 7 is an offender and is liable under S. 3 to be expelled, the Act provides no machinery for the enforcement of the liability and so neither the District Magistrate nor the High Court has any jurisdiction to deal with the matter under S. 4. [P 255 C 2]

Gaunt—for Referee.

Judgment—This is a reference made by the District Magistrate of Bassein under S. 4 (4), Burma Expulsion of Offenders Act, 1926. The respondent is a Bengali Mahomedan by birth and has apparently lived in Burma for some 13 to 15 years. He has married a wife, who, on the mother's side, is partly of Burmese blood, and has apparently several children by her. Thus, by birth, he is a non-Burman, but it may be that he has acquired a domicile in Burma; and, if that is so, he would not be a non-Burman within the definition in S. 2 (A) of the Act referred to

Before the District Magistrate the respondent admitted that he was a non-Burman, and the District Magistrate seems to have acted on this. But I am not prepared to accept such an admission as conclusive in a case of this kind. Being a non-Burman by birth, an ignorant person, such as the respondent, might very well admit that he was a non-Burman without knowing that any question of domicile is involved On this question, therefore, I should have been obliged to return the proceedings for further enquiry, but for certain other considerations with which I will now deal.

The respondent, in 1926, was convicted of an offence of theft under S. 379, I.P.C. and was imprisoned for six months. But, for the purposes of the present case, that conviction is immaterial. He has not since been convicted of any offence, but, on 11th October 1928, an order of restriction was passed against him under S. 7, Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, and it is this order which is the basis of the present proceedings and of the District Magistrate's recommendation that the respondent be expelled from Burma.

Section 2 (B), Expulsion of Offenders Act, contains the definition of an "offender" for the purposes of that Act. Cls. (i) and (ii) of that subsection deal with certain convictions of offences. Cl. (B) (iii) deals with orders under Ss 118 and 110, Criminal P. C, and under analogous laws. Cl. (iv) deals with an order of restriction under the Burma Habitual Offenders Act, and it is under this last clause that the respondent becomes an "offender" as defined in the Act.

Section 3 of the Act provides that any non-Burman who is an offender under the definition in S. 2 shall be liable to be expelled from Burma. S. 4 then proceeds to set out the manner in which an offender may be expelled; but sub-S. (1), S. 4 is somewhat curiously worded. It reads:

"When an offender becomes liable by reason of his conviction of an offence to be expelled from Burma under the preceding section, the District Magistrate of the district in which such offence was committed may call upon him to show cause why he should not be expelled."

The remaining subsections of this section deal with subsequent procedure.

Now, in sub-S. (1) the insertion of the words "becomes liable by reason of his conviction of an offence" is of considerable importance. Referring back to the definition of an "offender," we find that it is only under S. 2 (B) (i) and (ii), that a person becomes an "offender" by reason of a conviction of an offence. Under Cls. (iii) and (iv) of that section, a person may become an offender not by reason of conviction of an offence, for it is well recognized law that orders under S. 118, Criminal P. C., or under S. 7, Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, are not convictions of offences.

The result is that the insertion of the words above quoted in S. 4 (1) restricts the application of this section to persons who are offenders under S. 2 (B), Cls. (i) and (ii) and that this section can have no application to a person who is an offender under Cls. (iii) and (iv), S. 2 (B) The result is that, although such offenders as the present respondent are liable under S 3 of the Act to be expelled from Burma, the Act, in fact, provides no machinery for the enforcement of that liability.

In my view, therefore, neither the District Magistrate, nor this Court, has any jurisdiction to deal with the matter under S 4 of the Act. It is impossible, therefore, for me to deal with a reference under sub-S. (4) S. 4. The proceedings may be returned to the District Magistrate with a copy of this order.

Nga Po Seik—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revision No. 389-A of 1929, Decided on 3rd May 1929, against order of Township Magistrate of Myanaung, in Criminal Regular Trial No. 114 of 1928.

(a) Burma Excise Act, S. 30 (a)—"Country liquor" explained — Particular kind must be specified.

"Country liquor" is a generic term which can be equally applied to tari, country spirit, and country alcoholic liquor other than spirit, i. e., country fermented liquor. In Excise cases, it is always necessary to distinguish bstween these different kinds of country liquor and specify which particular kind is involved in the case, as the quantities of each of these different kinds of alcoholic liquor which may be possessed without a license differ. [P 256 C 2]

(b) Burma Excise Act, S. 30 (a)—Person cannot be convicted for possession of less than one quart of country spirit or country alcoholic liquor other than spirit.

A person cannot be convicted under S. 30 (a) for mere possession of less than one quart of country spirit or country alcoholic liquor other than spirit, the quantity being within the limits for possession prescribed for either of the kinds of liquor in the Excise Department Notification No. 61 of 14th June 1928 [P 256 C 2]

(c) Burma Excise Act, S 37—Proof of offence under—Guilty knowledge must be proved.

In order to establish an offence under S. 37 it is necessary that the guilty knowledge or belief, which is an essential ingredient of the offence should be included in the particulars of the offence stated to the accused and proved at the trial. [P 256 C 2]

(d) Burma Excise Act, Ss. 30 (a) and 37—Alteration of offence under S. 30 (a) to one under S. 37—Criminal P. C., S. 227.

An illegal conviction under S. 30 (a) cannot be altered to a conviction under S. 37 if the accused is not called upon to answer a charge under the latter section. [P 256 C 2]

Judgment.—In this case, the accused has been convicted of an offence under S. 30 (a), Burma Excise Act, for the possession of half a quart of "country liquor" and an empty bottle with the smell of "country liquor."

"Country liquor" is a generic term which can be equally applied to tari, country spirit, and country alcoholic liquor other than spirit, i. e., country fermented liquor. In Excise cases, it is always necessary to distinguish between these different kinds of country liquor and specify which particular kind is involved in the case, as the quantities of each of these different kinds of alcoholic liquor which may be possessed without a license differ: vide Excise Department Notification No. 61, dated 14th June 1928, reproduced as as item 261 of the correction pamphlet to the Burma Excise Manual.

In this case the accused admitted possession of the liquor seized and pleaded that he had kept it for the purpose of a propitiatory offering to the nats according to the Karen custom. As almost invariably country spirit is used for this purpose, the liquor involved in this case may be presumed to have been of that variety But whether the liquor involved was actually country spirit or country alcoholic liquor other than spirit, the quantity seized which was less than one quart, was within the limits for possession prescribed for either of those kinds of liquor in the Excise Department Notification mentioned above. Hence no conviction under S. 30 (a), Excise Act, could be had in respect of it.

But if the accused was in possession knowing or having reason to believe that the liquor was obtained from an illicit source, he would thereby commit an offence under S 37 of the Act. In order to establish an offence under S. 37 it is necessary that the guilty knowledge or belief, which is an essential ingredient of the offence should be included in the particulars of the offence stated to the accused and proved at the trial On this point the Magistrate is referred to para. 783-A, Burma Courts Manual, added by item 19 of Circular No. 5. This guilty knowledge or belief was not, however, alleged in the particulars of the offence stated to the accused, nor proved at the trial in this case. The conviction under S. 30 (a) was obviously illegal. It cannot be altered to a conviction under S 37 as the accused was not called upon to answer a charge under that section. The conviction and sentence are therefore set aside and the fine paid must be refunded to the accused.

Second Appeal No. 99 of 1929, Decided on 18th July 1929, from judgment of Dist., Judge of Thaton in Civ. App. No. 126 of 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100—When Court arrives at finding there being no evidence there is error of law—High Court can consider whole case.

Where the lower Courts arrive at a finding when there is no evidence on the point, there is an obvious error of law which vitiates the judgment. The High Court can admit an appeal and is not confined to a consideration of the particular error which vitiates the judgment but the whole case is open for consideration [P 259 C 1]

(b) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Person paying consideration but purchasing property in wife's or son's name has to show the object with which the property was purchased.

A Burman husband or father purchasing property in the name of his wife or child does not stand in the position of a Hindu or Mahomedan in whose cases the law raises a presumption of benami. He has to show further with what particular object or motive he purchased the land before the Court can decide whether the property purchased was a benami transaction or not: *Rang. Tun Aung—for Appellant.

Ko Ko—for Respondents.

Judgment—The plaintiff in this case, who is the respondent in this Court filed a suit against the defendant Ma Sa for declaration and recovery of possession of a piece of paddy land and for cancellation of a registered deed of sale in the following circumstances:

The plaintiff Ma Sein Nu was the wife of Maung Pan Byu (now deceased). Maung Pan Byu was the son of Ma Sa and U Khe. U Khe is dead When Maung Pan Byu was 14 or 15 years old, the old couple Ma Sa and her husband U Khe bought a piece of paddy land, which is now in dispute, in the name of their son Maung Pan Byu. They had at the time other children also. The land was being assessed in the name of Maung Pan Byu until 1925-26. In the year 1925 when U Khe was alive, Maung Pan Byu purported to convey the land to his parents for an alleged consideration of 500. It is admitted that no consideration was paid to Maung Pan Byu and the defendant's case was that the land was originally purchased in the name of Maung Pan Byu without any intention that he should be the beneficial owner of the property and that later he conveyed the property to his parents who were the actual owners.

The question therefore before the lower Court resolves itself mainly into whether the property was purchased by the old couple in Maung Pan Byu's name as an advancement to their son Maung Pan Byu or without it, was merely put in his name without any intention of conferring upon him the beneficial ownership. The lower Court decided in the plaintiff's favour and gave a decree as prayed. The judgment was confirmed by the lower appellate Court, and hence this second appeal.

Under S. 100, Civil P. C., a second appeal lies only on the grounds; (a) that the decision is contrary to law or some usage having the force of law; (b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law; (c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits.

It was argued before me that the finding by the trial Court that the original transaction was not a benami transaction but was intended to confer ownership on the son is a finding of fact and that as both the Courts are clear in their finding, no appeal lies to this Court under S. 100, Civil P. C. The learned advocates on both sides cited a number of authorities, in some of which it was held that a question of intention is a question of fact, while in others it was held that a question is one of law In the case of Har Parshad v. Bhagat Singh (1), which was a decision under the Provincial Insolvency Act 3 of 1927 whether the finding that a person made a transfer of his property with intent to defeat or delay his creditors was a question of law or fact. All the cases are cited therein and some of them are explained. The Punjab Court decided in favour of the position that the question of intention is a question of fact This position, if it were necessary, I would have accepted because the question of a man's state of mind is a question of fact, but in this case, it is unnecessary to decide this particular question, because there is an obvious error of law which vitiates the judgment. Both the Courts have held that the transfer by Maung Pan Byu of the property to his parents for an ostensible consideration of 500 was made with intent to defeat the rights of his wife There is absolutely no evidence on this point and it was merely an inference from the admitted fact that no consideration was paid.

The Courts assumed that Maung Pan Byu was the absolute owner and since he had transferred the property to his parent and taken no money for it, they came to the conclusion that the transfer was made with the intent to defeat the wife's right. They failed to see that even assuming Maung Pan Byu to be the owner of the property, there was nothing to prevent a son making a gift to his parents and that very often gifts are made in the form of conveyance for consideration, but no consideration is paid.

It is true that the finding of the lower Courts about the validity of the transfer may be supported on the Full Bench ruling in Ma Paing's v. Mg Shwe Hpan (2), because a husband has no power to make a gift of property without his wife's consent· see U Po U v. Ma Tek Gyi (3). The lower Courts did not decide the case on this point, and on the point on which they did decide, they were wrong, and I have jurisdiction to entertain this appeal. When there is an error of law, which vitiates the judgment the High Court is not confined to a consideration of the particular error which vitiates the judgment, but the whole case is open for consideration.

Turning to the question as to whether the transaction was benami or an advancement, it is necessary to consider a recent ruling by a Bench of this Court reported as Kyaw Pe v. Maung Kyi (4). The summary of the ruling in the headnote that if a Burman had property in the name of his child, a presumption of advancement of the benefit would arise, does not exactly reproduce the effect of that ruling. To consider what that ruling actually decided a little explanation is necessary.

It was held in Ma On Pe v. Ma Nyien Kin (5), that the burden of showing that a transaction which on the face of it is operative as a transfer of property was not intended so to operate is on the person alleging it, that is, the plaintiff in this case, if he challenges the transaction.

This is the view of the burden of proof which was taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Maung Po Kin v Maung Po Shein (6). This question of burden of proof is not affected by the prevalence or otherwise of benami transactions in a country. Where once, however, the person who alleged that a transaction is benami proves that he paid the purchase money, the law so far as Hindus and Mahomedans are concerned raises a presumption that a purchase in the name of a son or wife raises a contrary presumption, namely that it was intended as a provision for the wife or child. These presumptions are not due to any peculiarity of the laws of the country, but are merely a judicial recognition of the well known usage of the people. In India, it is quite common for a person to buy property in the name of his child or wife without any particular object or motive. In England on the other hand, when a person buys property in the name of his child or wife, in the vast majority of cases it is because he intends to make provision for his wife or child. That this is the ground of the presumption is quite clear from the fact that even in English law property purchased in the name of a stranger raises no such presumption and the person in whose name the property is purchased holds in trust for the person who advanced the purchase money. In Burma on the other hand, as pointed out in the ruling referred to and certain other rulings there is no prevalent usage of purchase of property without any rhyme or reason in the name of the wife or child, but there are many occasions where property is purchased in the name of a wife or child with some particular object or motive. When therefore a Burman husband or father who had purchased property in the name of his wife and child produces no evidence that he advanced the purchase money, he does not stand in the position of a Hindu or Mahomedan, in whose cases the law raises a presumption of benami. He has to show further with what particular object or motive he purchased the land, before the Court can decide, whether the property purchased was a benami transaction or not. This is all that was intended to be laid down in that ruling. This is clear from the last paragraph of the judgment which appears in p. 212 of the report.

Turning to the facts of this case, when the property was purchased, the person in whose name it was purchased was a boy at the time. He admittedly did not advance the money which was actually advanced by his parents. A presumption of advancement in his favour is countered by the fact that there were a number of other children for whom no provision was made by the parents. The question then for consideration is whether the course taken by the parents referred to in the judgment supports any presumption that the purchase in Maung Pan Byu's name was intended as an advancement for him.

The evidence on this point is that Maung Pan Byu was cultivating the land for a long time. This is quite consistent with the ownership of the parents because he is working the paddy fields of his parents. Moreover, he also cultivated paddy fields of his parents other than the one in dispute.

The next point is that tax was being paid in Maung Pan Byu's name right through. This is nothing whatever, because since the property is in Maung Pan Byu's name, his parents would naturally pay the tax in his name. There is some evidence that at Maung Pan Byu's marriage, his parents stated that he (Maung Pan Byu) was the owner of a piece of land. It is unnecessary to discuss the evidence at any length which to my mind is not very convincing, but assuming that Maung Pan Byu's parents who made such a statement, namely that he was the owner of a piece of paddy land, it cannot be read as an implied recognition of Maung Pan Byu's ownership of this piece of land. Such a declaration is too weak to raise any inference that the boy was intended to be a beneficial owner of the piece of land. These are the points against the case of the defendant and she in her evidence states that the property was purchased in the name of Maung Pan Byu because an astrologer told appellant that no paddy land should be accepted in their own name. This strikes me as being a very likely explanation. It must be remembered that the parties are Taungthus, who are very superstitious and if an astrologer tells them what to do, I have not the least doubt that they would act upon the advice of the astrologer.

In the judgments of the lower Courts, this was considered to be an unlikely explanation, and it was asked why then, should the property be put in Maung Pan Byu's name and not in that of any other children, but it has to be put in some child's name.

From a consideration of the whole of the evidence, I have come to the conclusion that the defendant Ma Sa has made out a case that the original transaction was benami and that the property was put in Maung Pan Byu's name without any intention of conferring beneficial ownership upon him. If that is so, no question of the validity of the transfer by Maung Pan Byu to his parents arises because Maung Pan Byu is only putting in his parent's names what already was their own property. For these reasons, I set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs in favour of the defendant-appellant in all three Courts.

Judgment.—The suit land originally belonged to Ma E. Appellant is her granddaughter. She is now in possession after having obtained it by a suit under S 9, Specific Relief Act. The respondent sought to oust her from such possession, relying upon their title derived from Ma E's son-in-law Aung Baw under an unregistered sale-deed, Ex. B, dated 28th December 1927. He was given a decree for possession. Both the Courts below have overlooked the law governing the case. Though the value of the property sold is less than 100 the sale deed requires to be registered under S. 54, T. P Act. Of course the sale could have been effected without any deed and by mere delivery of the property. Since a deed was executed, it must be registered and since it was not registered no legal title passes under it. The claim based upon such deed must fail. The decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the suit dismissed with costs thoughout.

Special Second Appeal No. 364 of 1928, Decided on 18th February 1929, from Dist. Judge, Akyab, in Civil Appeal No. 26 of 1928.

(a) Burma Registration of Business Names Act (1920), S. 3 Proviso—Proviso refers to S. 3 (c).

The proviso refers back to S. 3 (c) for in it is found the only reference to a change or addition to a name. [P 261 C 1]

(b) Burma Registration of Business Names Act (1920), S. 3 (b) and S. 5 (1) — Arkanese carrying on money lending business in his own name — After his death his widow carrying on same business under old name with " and Co " added — Mortgage entered in business name — Registration effected but widow's children shown as partners when they were not — Suit on mortgage by widow—Case falls under S. 3 (b) and as plaintiff widow was under disability provided in S. 5 (1) her suit must fail.

One Maung Tha Nyo carried on a money lending business in his own name. After his death his widow carried own the same business under the style of Maung Tha Nyo & Co. She entered into a mortgage and the mortgagees were described as Maung Tha Nyo & Co. Then a registration was effected but the names of parties were shown as the name of the widow together with her children though the children were not partners. She brought a suit on the mortgage.

Held : that S. 3 (proviso) did not apply to the case as it fell under S. 3 (b) and as the business was not carried on in the true name and that as the plaintiff widow was under the disability provided by S. 5 (1) her suit must fail. [P 261 C 2]

Lambert—for Appellant

Sein Tun Aung—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an unfortunate case. This suit is upon a mortgage. The only point of apparent substance taken on behalf of the defendants has been that in consequence of provisions of the Burma Registration of Business Names Act of 1920 the plaintiff firm is unable to enforce their claim against the defendants This point was not taken in terms in the written statement but it was argued in both lower Courts unsuccessfully in the Sub-Divisional Court but with success in the District Court. The short facts are that a man called Maung Tha Nyo carried on a money-lending business in his own name till he died on 8th February 1921. Since his death the widow Ma Hla Ma Khine has carried on and still carries on the same business under the style of Maung Tha Nyo & Co On 10th May 1924 the mortgage in suit was entered into, the mortgagees being described as Maung Tha Nyo & Co. The Act in question had come into force on 1st June 1923. I may observe at once that the drafting of the Act leaves much to be desired It is described in the preamble (which of course does not form part of the Act) as an Act to make provision for the Compulsory Registration of Business Names :

Section 3 of the Act is as follows :

Subject to provisions of this Act :

(a) " Every firm having a place of business in any area to which this Act extends and carrying on business therein under a business name which does not consist of the true names of all partners who are individuals and the corporate names of all partners who are corporations ;

(b) every individual having a place of business in any area to which this Act extends and carrying on business therein under a business name which does not consist of his true name ;

(c) Every individual or firm having a place of business in any area to which this Act extends, who or a member of which has either before or after the passing of this Act changed or added to his name except in the case of a woman in consequence of marriage shall be registered in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

And the following proviso is then enacted: Provided that:

"(1) Where the change or the addition merely indicates that the business is carried on in succession to a former owner of the business, that change or addition shall not of itself render registration necessary."

It is said that S. 3 (b) and perhaps S. 3 (a) have been infringed for when on 3rd June 1924 a registration was effected by a mistake the names of parties were shown as Ma Hla Ma Khine together with each of her ten children. It should be said that the family is an Arkanese family and the business is carried on in Akyab. There is no doubt of course that a technical breach of S. 3 (b) occurred if that section applies to the case.

It is said by the plaintiff, however, that the proviso (1) applies, and that registration is unnecessary. It is not easy to see exactly what the proviso is intended to mean. It is clear, however, that whatever its meaning it only refers back to sub-S. (c), S. 3, for in it is found the only reference to a change or addition to a name. There are more than one point of difficulty with regard to the wording of the subsection, e. g., it is not clear how far the subsection is intended to be retrospective. But in the present case I cannot see that the "change or addition" contemplated took place. The only "change" was in name of the "business" Ma Hla Ma Khine did not change her name and the word "firm" is defined as meaning an unincorporate body (a) of two or more individuals or (b) one or more individuals and one or more corporations who have entered into partnership with one another with a view to carrying on business for profit. Thus I think S. 3 (b) must apply without qualification for there is no doubt Ma Hla Ma Khine carried business under a name which did not consist of her true name.

It becomes necessary therefore to see what the Act says is to be the effect of these matters. S. 5 is as follows:

"Where any firm, corporation or individual by this Act required to furnish a statement of particulars or of any change in particulars shall have made default in so doing then the rights of that defaulter under or arising out of any contract made or entered into by or on behalf of such defaulter in relation to the business in respect to the carrying on of which particulars were required to be furnished at any time while he is in default cannot be enforceable by suit or legal proceedings either in the business name or otherwise."

I would observe that nowhere in the Act is there any provision requiring a firm etc, to furnish a statement of particulars. All the Act requires is "registration in accordance with the provisions of this Act." It is true there is a penalty laid down by S. 6 (b) in the case of a person who furnishes particulars which he knows or has reason to believe are false. But the Act neither says "particulars" are to be furnished, nor of course what particulars are to be furnished. Moreover the words "default" or "defaulter" are not defined.

It is said by the appellant that she has done all that she is required to do viz., she has furnished "particulars." But these "particulars" are inaccurate for the children are not partners and although there is no clear provision requiring particulars or correct particulars that such are required may be inferred from Ss. 3 (a) and 6 (1) (b) of the Act. That being so the plaintiff was at all material times under the disability provided for by S. 5 (1) of the Act and upon purely technical grounds her suit was correctly dismissed. So far as I am able to judge, however, Ma Hla Ma Khine acted honestly throughout and with a genuine endeavour to comply with the Registration Act. I observe that she did apply to the District Judge for a remand of the case in order that she might apply to the Court for relief. I observe also that this application was refused. I do not understand what was the reason for this refusal, and the learned Judge merely states that he sees no reason to remand the case as a fresh suit will not be barred. That being the view of the learned Judge I think the best course for the plaintiff is to register in accordance with the Act (and this I am told she has done) and bring a fresh suit. Her appeal therefore for the reasons I have have given must be dismissed but in the special circumstances of this case the appeal is dismissed without costs.

Po Naw and another—Appellants.

Maung Ba Chit—Respondent.

Special Second Appeal No. 241 of 1929, Decided on 26th July 1929, from decree in Civil Regular No. 96 of 1926.

Evidence Act, S. 92—Surety bond—Wording not supporting that surety was not liable for decretal amount—Surety told that he was for appearance only—Application for surety supporting him—Release order vague—Evidence held admissible to prove that execution was under mistake.

The wording of the surety bond did not support a person's contention that he did not sign a bond for payment of the amount but for his appearance and payment of the amount only on failure to produce him, The evidence showed that though the bond was read out to the person, he was told that he was surety for the appearance. The person had offered himself to be a surety by an application in which he stated that as the judgment-debtor would be produced he placed the properties mentioned therein as security. The order for the release of the judgment-debtor was vague.

Held: that though ordinarily the wording of the bond could not be allowed to be contradicted there was ample ground for holding that the bond happened to be executed under a mistake as to its real purport. [P-262 C 2]

Janabali—for Appellants.

Kyaw Zan—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The respondent, Maung Ba Chit, obtained a money-decree against one Maung Tha Hto in Civil Regular No. 96 of 1926 of the Township Court of Paan and made a verbal application for the execution of the decree under O. 21, R. 11, Civil P. C., by arrest and imprisonment of the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor then expressed a desire to prefer an appeal and to be released to enable him to have an opportunity of doing so. The Court ordered that he might be released if he furnished sufficient security. The present appellants offered themselves to be sureties by a petition in which they stated that, as the judgment-debtor would be produced before the Court on the date fixed, they placed the properties mentioned therein as security. Their suretyship was accepted and they executed a security bond and it is in this security bond that the respondent seeks to require the payment of the decretal amount from the appellants, because, although they were able to produce the judgment-debtor in Court when required, the latter was unable to pay the amount.

The appellant's case is that they never signed a bond for payment of the decretal amount on the judgment-debtor's failure to pay the same, but that they executed a bond for the appearance of the judgment-debtor in Court, whenever he was required by the Court, and for payment of the decretal amount in the event of their failure to produce the judgment-debtor when the latter's appearance was required by the Court. The wording of the bond does not support the appellant's case, but it is clear from the statement in their petition offering security and the evidence of the Head Clerk and Bench Clerk of the Township Court, that the appellant executed the bond in the belief that it was a bond for the production of the judgment-debtor whenever they were required to do so, and to be liable to pay the decretal amount in the event of their failure to produce the judgment-debtor.

The evidence of the Head Clerk and the Bench Clerk clearly shows that although the bond was read out to them, the appellants were told that they were sureties for the appearance of the judgment-debtor. Ordinarily it would be difficult to give any substantial weight to such evidence and allow the wording of the bond itself, which was before the parties to be contradicted. But in this case, judging from the vagueness of the order for the release of the judgment-debtor on furnishing security, which appears to me to have in fact been written after the bond was executed, and the definite offer made in the application for the production of the judgment-debtor on the date fixed by the Court, there is ample ground for believing in the truth of the story that the bond happened to be executed under a mistake as to its real purport.

The clerks of the Court should not have made use of the form on which this bond was printed, but from the mere fact that they did make use of this form, it is not sufficient to say that their evidence in the present proceedings is false, for it might most probably be due to their ignorance of the proper terms in which the sureties' undertakings should have been couched, or, in other words, their incompetency or neglect. The case appears to me to fall within the proviso to S. 92, Evidence Act. The appellants cannot be called upon to pay the decretal amount unless and until they failed to discharge their obligation to produce the judgment-debtor when required by the Court. This obligation appears to have been fulfilled, because, when execution was taken out, it was taken out both against the judgment-debtor and against the sureties, the judgment-debtor duly appeared in Court. For these reasons, I allow this appeal, set aside the order of the District Court, and restore that of the Township Court. U Kyaw Zan for the respondent pleads that he should not be saddled with costs, because everything was due to the mistake made by the officer of the Court. I make no order as to the costs of this appeal.

Fontyne & Co.—Appellants.

S. C. Appanna—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 530 of 1928, Decided on 20th June 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, Amherst, D/- 5th September 1928.

Evidence Act, S. 101—Plaintiffs suing defendants for sum of money said to be due to him in respect of labour supplied to them and producing document signed by partner in defendants' firm saying balance claimed was due to him—Onus is on defendants to show that document which amounted to admission was obtained under circumstances not legally binding.

Plaintiff sued defendants for recovery of a sum of money said to be due to him in respect of labour supplied to them. He alleged that accounts of labour supplied were settled and the sum of money was found due to him and produced a document signed by a partner in defendants' business saying the balance claimed in respect of labour was due to plaintiff :

Held : that it was an admission and it was for the defendants to prove that such an admission was obtained from them under circumstances which would prevent its being legally binding upon them : A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 318, Cons. and Dist., A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 471, Rel. on. [P 264 C 2]

A. B. Banerjee—for Appellants.

M. M. Rafi—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against a judgment and decree of 5th September 1928 passed by the District Court of Amherst, setting aside a judgment and decree of the Sub-Divisional Court of Moulmein. The plaintiff (respondent) sued the defendants (appellants) for the recovery of Rs. 3,434-5-0, said to be due to him on account of labour supplied to the defendants up to July 1927. In para. 1 of the plaint, it was alleged that the accounts of labour supplied were settled and a sum of Rs. 3,434-5-0 was found due, and a document Ex. (A), was annexed to the plaint in the following terms :

" Due to Appanna, balance Rs. 3,434-5-0 for labour up to July 1927."
Signed over one anna stamp.
" Por Pro Fontyne & Co.,
H. E. Stephenson 3-8-1927."

The defendants by their written statement stated inter alia that they denied any settlement of account, and also that a sum of Rs 3,434-5-0 was then found due. They further alleged that in consequence of a misrepresentation by the plaintiff to Mr. H. E. Stephenson (a partner in the defendant's business) the former obtained the acknowledgment I have set out above. Certain issues were apparently prepared by both sides, and on 23rd June 1928, those prepared on behalf of the defendants seem to have been approved by the then Sub-Divisional Judge. On 12th July, however, it appears that the following issues were settled after examination of parties :

(1) Was the sum of Rs. 3,434-5-0 due to the plaintiff ?

(2) If not, did Mr. Stephenson grant the acknowledgment on the plaintiff's misrepresentation ?

It is clear from the judgment of the lower Court that it was upon these issues that the trial proceeded. By a diary order dated 20th July 1928, it is plain that when the case was called on, both parties were represented by their advocates. It is also plain that both sides confined themselves to the pleadings, and did not cite any witnesses, nor do they appear to have argued, and the matter was left to the Court. By his order of 23rd July 1928, dismissing the case, the Sub-Divisional Judge stated that the advocate for the plaintiff had said that he would not examine any witnesses if the defendant firm did not examine any and he went on to say that as both counsel :

" agreed that case be decided on the pleadings as they cannot agree on whom the burden of proof lies. 2 P. Ws. and 2 D. Ws. ..... are waived and discharged."

The matter was then apparently "left entirely in the hands of the Court." The learned Sub-Divisional Judge was of opinion that, as the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff upon the first issue and as the defendants denied that anything was due, the plaintiff had failed to discharge the onus, which was upon him. In the District Court, however, to which the plaintiff respondent appealed, the learned District Judge in a careful order reversed the order of the lower Court and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs.

In that Court, as also before me, the only question was whether the plaintiff was entitled to succeed upon the ground that in view of the admission by the defendants that the acknowledgment (Ex. A) had been signed on their behalf, the onus of proof was shifted to them, and that as they called no evidence, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment upon the prima facie case set up upon the pleadings. It is conceded I think, that if Ex. (A) may be regarded as an admission of liability by the defendants, the order of the District Court was correct. It is said, however, that as the case for the plaintiff was based upon a settlement of accounts between the parties, it was incumbent upon him to prove such settlement, and it was also suggested that Ex. A, partly because it was said to have been given as a result of such a settlement, and partly I think from its terms, cannot be regarded as such an admission of liability as would in law place upon the defendants the onus of disproving liability

The case of Hoe Moh v. I. M. Seedat (1) is relied upon on behalf of the defendants. That was a suit on promissory-note, and the defendant, though admitting his signature denied that the amount claimed was due and stated that he had signed a blank note upon which figures denoting a lesser amount appeared. It was held that as the defendents had specifically denied a promise to pay the sum named, the burden of proving the loan rested upon the plaintiff. It seems to me that this case may be distinguished from the present case, for if Ex. (A) can be construed as an admission of liability (or a promise to pay) it clearly covers the whole amount claimed by the plaintiff. From a perusal of the judgment in Hoe Moh's case (1), it seems to me that had the defendant there in addition to admitting signing the promissory note admitted that the figures representing the amount claimed appeared upon it, the decision would have been otherwise.

The Full Bench decision in the case of Ram Chand v. Chhunnumal (2) was relied upon by the plaintiff. In that case the alleged admission was an admission regarding receipt of consideration and not a direct admission of liability. The example given at p. 473 (of 6 Lah.) of the report seems to me to bear upon the present case. The learned Chief Justice said :

"If A sues B for money due on a document, the burden of proving the existence of facts, upon which the legal liability of B depends lies on A. When A has proved the execution of the document by B, x x x x x and the document contains an acknowledgment of the receipt of consideration, it is the duty of B to show that what he himself admitted ..... was as a matter of fact false and that he did not receive the consideration."

At p. 475 (of 6 Lah.) of the report, the learned Chief Justice also said :

"Nor is there any valid reason in principle for drawing a distinction between an admission in a registered deed and that contained in an unregistered document, in so far as the question of onus probandi is concerned. In both cases the person denying consideration is confronted with his own admission, and it is for him to prove that it was falsely made."

In the present case, therefore, it seems to me that it may well be successfully argued that the person denying liability is confronted with his own admission of liability and it follows, therefore, that it is for him to prove that such an admission was obtained from him under circumstances which would prevent its being legally binding upon him. If I am right in my view on these authorities, the only question then on this part of the case is whether Ex. (A) can be construed as a plain admission of liability. Upon its wording I have no doubt it can, and for the amount claimed The matter does not quite rest here, however, for, as I have previously indicated, Mr. Banerjee on behalf of the defendants (appellants) argued that, as the decision of the case rests upon the settlement of accounts and that as Ex. A. is only alleged to have been given as a result of such settlement, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff-respondent to prove by other evidence that a settlement in fact was come to

(1) A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 319=5 Rang. 527.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 471=6 Lah. 470 (F.B.).

It is clear that Ex. A is in itself not an admission that a settlement of accounts had taken place. On the other hand it is by no means clear to me that the present suit could be described as one upon a settlement of accounts, or in other words according to English procedure, as an action upon an account stated. It does not appear that it is necessary to decide this point, however, for upon the pleadings the suit may, in my view, be properly described and I think was, a suit for money due in respect of labour supplied. It is possible that it may also be a suit upon a settlement, but I think it makes no difference. If I am right in this, there can be no doubt at all that if Ex. A is an admission of liability, as I hold it is, it is an admission that the amount claimed is due in respect of labour supplied. That being so, I cannot help coming to the conclusion that the decision of the District Court that a prima facie case had been established in the lower Court by the plaintiff is correct.

Being of that opinion the next question is whether the judgment in favour of the plaintiff should be allowed to stand or whether I should send the case back to the lower Court in order that the defendants may have an opportunity of establishing their case. I was at first inclined to take this latter course upon the ground that it would appear from the diary order I have quoted, that it was by agreement between the advocates concerned that no evidence was called on either side. This may have been so, though from the judgment of the Sub-Divisional Court this may not be quite so clear. I observe, however, that on behalf of the defendants two witnesses were in fact present, but they were discharged. This of course was done before the Sub-Divisional Judge passed his order, which he seems to have done later in the day. There was no obligation, however, upon either advocate to come to the agreement I have referred to, or to discharge his witnesses. In my view the ordinary procedure ought to have been followed and the Judge should have been asked to decide the preliminary point as to onus of proof. Having decided it, the case should have proceeded, and the matter dealt with, if necessary, upon the pleadings. Furthermore it might also well be argued that as the parties agreed to a trial upon the pleadings and as I hold that in these circumstances the plaintiff should succeed the matter should rest there The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs and the order of the District Court must stand.

First Appeal No. 237 of 1928, Decided on 25th April 1929 from judgment of District Court, Hanthawaddy, in Civil Regular No. 56 of 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 20—Neither appellant nor respondents deriving claim touching dispute in appeal from party not joined in appeal—Decision of appeal not injuriously affecting interest of that party under decree appealed against—Such party is not necessary to appeal.

Where neither the appellant nor the respondents derive their claim in respect of the dispute in appeal from a party to suit but not joined in appeal and from the nature of the appeal itself it is evident that either the success or the failure of the appeal will in no way injure the interest acquired by the party under a decree appealed against such a party is not a necessary party to the appeal: *A. The children of the first marriage who have already taken their share of inheritance on the occasion of the second marriage have no claim to inheritance in respect of property inherited by their father after the death of their mother and before the second marriage; nor can they have any share in respect of the property inherited by their father after the second marriage which becomes the lettetpwa property of that marriage: A. I. R 1921 P. C. 88, Rel. on; A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 23, Expl. and Dist. [P 268 C 2]

Ba Thein (1)—for Appellant.

Hay—for Respondents.

Heald and Mya Bu, JJ.—The learned counsel for the respondents has raised a preliminary objection contending that the appeal is incompetent for non-joinder of a necessary party and should therefore be dismissed The appeal is against the preliminary decree in an administration suit filed on behalf of a minor plaintiff named Ma Htwe Sein (now deceased) against the appellant, Ma On Thin, and the respondents, Ma Ngwe Yin and Ma Nyun, for administration of the estate of U Mya, deceased The respondents are the issue of U Mya's first marriage. After the death of their mother Ma Thaw, U Mya gave them half of the properties of the first marriage. He then married his second wife Ma The Myit and the plaintiff Ma Htwe Sein was born to them. Ma The Myit also predeceased U Mya. Thereafter U Mya married the appellant and died a few months later on 5th July 1927, leaving the appellant enciente and she subsequently gave birth to a son.

In the lower Court there was no dispute as to the heirship of the parties. The only issue was :

"To what shares are the parties respectively entitled in the estate of U Mya deceased ?"

In view of the partition between U Mya and the respondents of the properties of the first marriage, the Court held on the authority of the rulings in the cases of Ma Toke v. Ma U Le (1) and Ma Htay v. U Tha Hline (2), that the respondents were not entitled to any share either in the remaining properties of the first marriage or in the joint properties of the second and third marriages. The Court went on to fix the shares of the plaintiff and the appellant respectively in these properties ; and in the absence of any dispute and practically in accordance with the unanimous opinion of the Court and the counsel appearing for the respective parties, the Court found that the three parties as representing three families were entitled to one-third each in the properties inherited by U Mya after the death of his first wife.

The preliminary decree made in accordance with the judgment declared:

(1) that the plaintiff was entitled to three-fourths share in the properties of the first and second marriages, one-eighth, share in the properties, if any, of the third marriage and one-third share in the inherited properties of U Mya ;

(2) that Ma On Thin, defendant 1 (now appellant) was entitled to one-fourth share in the properties of the first and second marriages, seven-eighths share in the property, if any, of the third marriage and one-third share in the properties inherited by U Mya ; and

(3) that Ma Ngwe Yin and Ma Nyun, defendants 2 and 3 (now respondents) were entitled to one-third share in the properties inherited by U Mya. It was ordered that a commissioner be appointed to find out inter alia what the inherited properties were and what the properties of the first, second and third marriages respectively were. This decree bears date 30th June 1928.

The appellant filed the present appeal on 12th September 1928 only as against the respondents merely objecting to the declaration in the preliminary decree in the latter's favour, valuing the appeal at Rs. 2,000 "being one-third share in the inherited property" but without joining the plaintiff either as an appellant or as a respondent. It may be pointed out that the minor plaintiff, Ma Htwe Sein, died on 1st August 1928, that is after the preliminary decree and before the filing of the appeal.

In support of his contention, the learned counsel for the respondents urges that the legal representatives of Ma Htwe Sein were necessary parties to this appeal and should have been joined as such, that the appeallant's omission to join Ma Htwe Sein's legal representatives has deprived his clients of their right to take, if they chose, cross-objection adversely affecting the interest of Ma Htwe Sein or her legal representatives; that the time limited for an appeal against Ma Htwe Sein having expired neither she nor her legal representatives can now be joined ; and that the whole appeal has for these reasons become incompetent.

The learned counsel quotes the rulings in the cases of V. P. R. V. Chokalingam Chetty v Singaram Chetty (3) and V. P. R. V. Chokalingam Chetty v. Seethai Acha (4). They refer to the same case, the former being a decision of a Bench of this Court and the latter being a decision of the Privy Council on appeal arising out of the same case. In that case the plaintiff having bought from the Official Assignee property which had belonged to the insolvent sued several defendants for recovery of the property alleging that the transfer by the insolvent to the first defendant and transfers by defendant 1 and other defendants to one another successively were all invalid. When the suit was dismissed, the plaintiff appealed against the dismissal without joining defendant 1 as a respondent, at the time of the hearing of the appeal, which took place after the expiry of the period of limitation for such appeal, the plaintiff applied to join defendant 1 in whose absence the appeal could not succeed. The application was refused on the ground that as defendant 1 held a decree against which an appeal was barred so far as he was concerned, he was not interested in the result of the appeal within the meaning of O. 41, R. 20. It was also pointed out that under O. 41, R. 33 an appellate Court could add a defendant as respondent for the purpose of making a decree against him.

In the present case the position of the plaintiff who has not been joined as a party to this appeal is quite different from that of defendant 1 mentioned in the above rulings. Neither the appellant nor the respondents derived their claim in respect of the dispute in this appeal from the plaintiff as the respondents in those appeals did from defendant 1. From the nature of the appeal itself, it is quite evident that either the success or failure of the appeal will in no way injure the interest acquired by the plaintiff under the preliminary decree and that therefore any such order as this Court may pass in this appeal may be passed without adversely or injuriously affecting the interest held by the plaintiff. For these reasons the plaintiff cannot in our opinion be said to be a necessary party to this appeal.

We have not been shown any authority for the view that it was incumbent on an appellant to join in an appeal a party who is unnecessary for the purpose of the appeal itself, in order to enable the respondent or respondents to take cross-objection which may affect the interest of such party. The objection raised on behalf of the respondent does not appear to us to possess any merits. We consider that the appeal may finally be heard and decided as it stands.

The learned counsel for the appellant, however, has no objection to bringing on record in this appeal the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff for the purpose merely of satisfying the respondent. As pointed out above the nature of the appeal does not indicate any likelihood of a decree in this appeal affecting injuriously the estate of the deceased plaintiff acquired under the preliminary decree and at the present stage it is too early for us to say whether the decision in this appeal will affect the deceased plaintiff's estate beneficially. If the decision does affect such estate beneficially the provisions of O. 41, R. 33 may safely be taken advantage of: see Jawahar Bano v. Shujaat Husain Beg (5). At this stage we do not consider it necessary or expedient to order the joinder of the deceased plaintiff's legal representatives in this appeal. We overrule the objection raised on behalf of the respondents and direct that the appeal be heard on its merits (The case subsequently came before Heald and Otter, JJ. and the following judgment was delivered).

Heald, J.—Respondents are children of one Maung Mya by his first wife, Ma Thaw, who died about 20 years ago. There is also a daughter, Ma Twe Sein, by Maung Mya's second wife, Ma The Myit, who died about three years ago. Appellant was Maung Mya's third wife. Ma Twe Sein, the daughter by the second wife sued for administration of Maung Mya's estate, and the Court made a preliminary administration decree declaring that she, Ma Twe Sein, was entitled to three-quarters of the properties of the first and second marriages and to one-eighth of the property of the third marriage, and was further entitled to a one-third share of certain property which was inherited by Maung Mya, that appellant Ma On Thin, the surviving widow was entitled to a quarter of the properties of the first and second marriages, to seven-eighths of the property of the third marriage, and to one-third of the inherited property, and that respondents, the children of the first marriage, who had admittedly received the share of inheritance in respect of the first marriage to which they became entitled by reason of their father's second marriage, were entitled to one-third of the inherited property only.

Neither of the parties to this appeal contests the correctness of the shares allotted to Ma Twe Sein, the daughter of the second marriage, but appellant says that respondents ought not to have been given any share in the inherited property, and that the share allotted to them ought to have been allotted to her, that is to say, she ought to have been given two-thirds of that property and respondents ought not to have been given any share of it It is common ground that the properties in dispute were inherited by Maung Mya after the death of his first wife Ma Thaw who was respondent's mother, but it does not appear whether they were inherited before or after the date of the second marriage. It is, however, said to have been agreed in the lower Court that it should be assumed that they were inherited in the interval after the death of the first wife and before the marriage with the second.

The learned Judge in the trial Court said that the learned advocates who appeared for the parties were of opinion that each of the three sets of heirs, that is the children of the first marriage, the child of the second marriage, and the surviving third wife, should each be entitled to a one-third share of those properties, and he gave judgment accordingly.

Appellant now says that the opinion of the learned advocates was mistaken, and that under Burmese Buddhist Law the children of the first marriage who had taken their shares of inheritance on the occasion of the second marriage have no claim to inheritance in respect of property inherited by their father after the first marriage had come to an end.

There is so far as I know no judicial authority directly on the point, the nearest approach to a decision on the matter being the case of Ma Thaung v. Ma Than (6), which was not cited to us by either side. In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted a passage from Dhamathatkyaw as saying:—

"After the death of the husband, the wife partitions the property with her children and marries again. On her death the children of her former marriage cannot claim from their stepfather any property which she took to the second marriage, because they have already obtained their shares. The same rule applies when after the death of the wife the husband marries again after having given the children their respective shares."

Their Lordships accepted that rule and applied it to a case, where before the second marriage the father had made a partition of the properties of the first marriage and after the second marriage had carried on the family business, which was the subject matter of the partition, in partnership with the children of first marriage so far as concerned the shares which the children of that marriage received at the partition Their Lordships said that although there was no definite separation between the father and the children of the first marriage, the new menage was carried on quite independently and separately from them. A verbal translation of the passage cited by their Lordships runs as follows

"If after the death of the husband the wife divides the properties that there are into son's share and daughter's share and taking her own share marries another husband and then dies, and if the children say we ought to get the properties which went with our mother, let them not say so. The later husband and children should have them because they (the children of the first marriage) have already been given their own shares. If the mother die, and the father give (their shares) to the children and take a second wife and die in the time of the second wife, in the same way the children of the first marriage shall not be entitled to the property which went with their father."

That passage, which as I have said, was accepted by their Lordships of the Privy Council as a rule of Burmese Buddhist Law, would seem to settle the matter in controversy in the present appeal, since on the assumption that the property in dispute was inherited by the father after the mother died and before the second marriage, that property would clearly be property which "went with the father" to the second marriage, while if in fact the property was inherited after the second marriage, it would be lettetpwa property of that marriage in which the children of the first marriage could have no share.

But it is sought to distinguish the present case on the ground that the children of the first marriage did not separate from their father, but lived with him and their stepmother. There is no allegation to that effect in the pleadings on which, apparently by consent, the preliminary decree was passed, but even if it were established that the children of the first marriage did continue to live with their father after the second marriage, I do not think that that fact would be sufficient to distinguish the case from Ma Thaung's case (6), where, as I have said, their Lordships pointed out that there was no definite separation between the father and the children of the first marriage.

Reliance is placed on an obiter dictum of mine in the case of Po San v Po Thet (7) (at p 441 of 3 Rang.) where I said :

"I have no doubt that under the old law joint living, that is a continuance in the family, was necessary for a continuance of rights in the family property, and that a child who took his share and separated himself from the family was regarded as having no further interest in the family property Manussika and Dyajja in dealing with the right to partition between children and the stepparent on the death of the parent make the right of the children of the first marriage to share in the property of the second marriage dependent on their having assisted in the acquisition of that property, that is not having left the family, and Vannana says that if the children of the first marriage have taken their share on their parent's remarriage they have no interest in the property of the second marriage, while the Dhammathats cited in S 211 of the Digest enunciate a similar principle. But it has been held in many cases and very recently by the Privy Council in Maung Dwe v. Khoo Haung-Shein (8), that the requirement of joint-living is now relaxed and that in the absence of actual separation from the family the right of inheritance subsists. It would seem to follow that even if the auratha has taken his share on the death of a parent or on the remarriage of the surviving parent, he is still entitled to claim a share on the death of the surviving parent or on the death of the stepparent unless separation is proved or is to be presumed "

Those remarks it will be noted applied to the share of the auratha son, in whose case no question of separation from the family arose under the old law since he took the father's place in the family, and they would not apply with equal force to children who have taken their share of inheritance on the surviving parent's remarriage, since in the case of such children there is some initial presumption of an intention to separate and not to regard themselves as members of the family of the second marriage, and in any case such an obiter dictum carries no weight against a decision of the Privy Council. Reliance is also placed on the second " manner of partition " mentioned in Manugye (X-2) but that passage is corrupt, vide my judgment in the case of Shwe Ywet v. Tun Shein (9), and it does not refer to a case where the children of the first marriage have already received their shares.

I know of no authority either in the Dhammathats or in the cases for the proposition that children of a first marriage, who have already received their shares of the property of the marriage of their parents on the remarriage of the surviving parent are entitled to claim from the stepparent after the death of the surviving parent any share of property inherited by the surviving parent after the death of the parent either before or after the second marriage, and as the decision of the Privy Council in Ma Thaung's case (6), seems to me to warrant a finding that respondents, who are the children of the first marriage have no claim as against appellant, who is the stepmother, in respect of property inherited by their father after the death of their mother, I would allow the appeal with costs and would alter the preliminary decree passed by the lower Court so as to give appellant Ma On Tin two-thirds of the inherited property and to omit the part of the decree which says

"It is further ordered that Ma Ngwe Yin and Ma Nyun, defendants 2 and 3, are also entitled to one-third share in the properties inherited by their father U Mya (deceased) after the death of their mother Ma Thaw."

I would note that the reference in the decree to the properties of the first marriage is of course to the properties of that marriage which were left after the children of that marriage had received their shares

Where a judgment-debtor paid a certain amount towards the satisfaction of a decree to the decree-holder but the decree-holder did not certify or recognize the payment and took out execution of the whole amount due under the decree and where the judgment-debtor brought a suit to recover the amount paid, such suit is maintainable and S. 47 does not bar such suit as it is based on an alleged failure of the decree-holder to carry out his promise of crediting the amount to his decree which though bearing on question as to satisfaction of decree is not directly a question relating to such satisfaction: A.I. R. 1923 Rang. 88, Rel. on. [P 270 C 2]

Venkatram—for Appellants

Basu—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The respondents brought a suit against the appellants for the recovery of a sum of Rs 604 together with interest thereon. Their case was that in December 1924 they paid the sum of Rs. 500 to the appellants towards satisfaction of a decree the appellants held against them. The appellants have since that date taken out execution for the whole amount due under the decree and have not certified or recognized this payment of Rs. 500 They further stated in their plaint that the actual amount overdrawn in the executing Court by the appellants was Rs. 604, and the amount they actually claimed is this sum of Rs 604. It is quite clear, however, that so far as the case is based merely on an overdrawal in the executing Court, the present suit cannot lie and this is admitted by the learned advocate for the respondent. The question for decision now is whether a suit can be brought for recovery of the Rs 500.

The trial Court held that it could not and dismissed the suit. The District Court in appeal held that such a suit could be brought and remanded the case for a decision on the merits The case of Maung Myo v. Maung Kha (1), is clearly in favour of the view taken by the District Judge. The District Judge appeared to have thought that the decision in Maung Myo's case (1) was difficult to reconcile with the wording S. 47, Civil P. C. Under that section questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the satisfaction of the decree must be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. But the question that arises in this case is the alleged failure of the appellants to carry out their promise of crediting the amount to this decree. It has of course a bearing on questions as to the satisfaction of the decree, but it is not directly a question relating to such satisfaction. I see no good reason for dissenting from the decision in Maung Myo's case (1). It has been suggested that the present suit must fail because of the wording of the receipt given for the payment of the money. That point has not yet been considered by the trial Court and it is sufficient to say that I am not satisfied at this stage that it is shown that this objection is fatal to the suit. The question of limitation which has also been mentioned must also be left for decision in the first instance by the trial Judge. I am of opinion that the suit as regards the Rs. 500 with possibly interest thereon is maintainable. I therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—This is an application for revision of the findings of the Township Court of Zigon on certain preliminary issues, namely: (1). Whether the promissory note in suit was sufficiently stamped, and (2) if not, whether it was admissible in evidence. The Township Court held that the promissory note was sufficiently stamped and that, therefore, the second issue did not arise. It is clear that this view is erroneous. One of the two one anna stamps on the promissory note was not duly cancelled, as required by S. 12 (1) (b), Stamp Act, and under Cl. (2) of the same section the promissory note was to be deemed unstamped so far as the uncancelled stamp was concerned. One one-anna stamp alone was insufficient for the promissory note in suit. Be that as it may, an erroneous decision on these issues is no ground for revision during the pendency of the suit. An error in the decision of these issues could be made a ground of appeal from the decree passed in the suit Moreover the amended plaint filed before the determination by the Township Judge of these issues bases the claim on alternative causes of action, namely the promissory-note, or in the event of the promissory note being held inadmissible in evidence on the original cause of action, the loan itself. The issues in question, are not such as are sufficient to dispose of the suit, whether they are found in the affirmative or in the negative In any case there are no grounds for revision and I dismiss this application with costs, advocate's fee 2 gold mohurs.

So Nyun—for Appellants

Lun Thi—for Respondent

Judgment. — The plaintiff in this case sued to redeem a mortgage, which is admitted. She also claimed mesne profits for last year on the ground that she offered to redeem the land but was not allowed to do so. The trial Judge gave a mere redemption decree and disallowed the claim for mesne profits On appeal the learned District Judge allowed the plaintiff's claim for mesne profits also. He purported to follow a ruling of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma in the case of Po Tun v. E Kha (1). The facts about which there is no dispute are that the mortgagor did ask to be allowed to redeem orally and also wrote a letter offering to redeem and asking the mortgagees to bring the title-deeds to her place when they would be paid the money two days after notice.

The mortgage in this case is a usufructuary one, and in this class of mortgages, the mortgagee remains in possession realizing the profits of the land in lieu of interest. S. 84, T. P. Act, enacts that interest on the principal money ceases from the date when the money is tendered to the mortgagee. On an application of that principle the liability of the usufructuary mortgagee to account for the mesne profits will arise only when money is tendered to him. It has been held in a number of cases that money must actually be tendered. Thus in Chetan Das v. Govind Saran (2), it was held that an offer by letter to pay the money due on a mortgage is not a good tender. In a later case of the same High Court in Mahomed Mushtaq Ali Khan v. Banke Lal (3), where a notice was sent to the mortgagee offering to pay him a certain sum of money, it was held that, as no actual money was produced, there was not a valid tender of the sum due under the mortgage.

In a case which arose apparently at Nagpur, but of the reports there are no copies in this Court, it was held that the tender must be made at the mortgagee's place: Makadaji v. Pairia (4). The notice, therefore, sent by the mortgagor asking the mortgagees to come to her place, and take the money cannot be a tender of the money and no liabilities of the mortgagees can possibly arise to account for the profits of the land.

(1) [1916] 9 L. B. R. 18=33 I. C. 735=9 Bur. L. T. 117.

(2) [1914] 36 All. 139=22 I. C. 659=12 A. L. J. 111.

(3) [1920] 42 All. 420=55 I. C. 931=18 A. L. J. 440.

The learned District Judge followed the case of Po Tun v. E Kha (1). If that ruling was intended to lay down broadly that a production of money was not necessary to validate an offer of redemption in all cases, I cannot accept it But in that case, the mortgagee denied the mortgage, and obviously there was no use in tendering money to a mortgagee, who did not even accept the position of a mortgagee. That case is, therefore, distinguishable from the present one. For these reasons, I set aside the judgment of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court. There will be no order as to costs either in this Court or in the District Court. The order as to costs in the trial Court will stand.

Special Second Appeal No. 161 of 1929, Decided on 9th August 1929.

(a) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—If Burmese Buddhist directs one of coheirs to discharge his liabilities which are a great deal less than value of his property, transaction is to be regarded as gift of excess of property over debt and principle of part performance does not apply to such case—Part Performance.

When a Burmese Buddhist directs one of the heirs to discharge his liabilities which are a good deal less than the value of his properties, and take over his properties, the transaction is equivalent to a gift of the excess of the property over the debt, or a will of that excess, it may be a death-bed gift of that excess. The principle, therefore, of part performance, which applies to a purchaser of the property for consideration has no application to such a case and if such heir discharges the liabilities by selling a portion of the property, he holds the other property on behalf of other heirs. [P 273 C 1]

(b) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Admission by one heir—Evidence Act, S 18.

Admission by a person that one of the heirs has absolute right to the property to which the person along with others is an heir, cannot affect the other heirs. [P 272 C 2]

(c) Decree—Form of.

Giving of money decree for immovable property is wrong. [P 272 C 2]

P. K. Basu—for Appellant.

S. S. Halkar—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this suit claimed as the stepson of one Ma Ye to recover a house and site from the defendants. The house admittedly formed part of the estate of one Ko Maung, whose niece Ma Ye was. Ma Ye was one of the eight nieces and nephews, and it is admitted that Ma Ye would have been entitled to a one-eighth share, if there were no circumstances showing that she had obtained the whole of this property. Her case was that Ko Maung at his death asked her to take his properties and discharge his liabilities and that she did so. She had been paying the taxes on the house and remained in possession of the house till she died. These are the circumstances relied upon by the learned advocate for the appellant as showing that Ma Ye had become the owner of the house. He also relies upon the reply sent by one of the heirs, Maung Shwe Hla, to a notice sent on behalf of the appellant. The position taken up by Maung Shwe Hla will not, as a matter of fact affect the other heirs, even if the letter could be deemed to be an admission of the rights of Ma Ye to the property. The trial Judge accepted the plaintiff's contention and gave him a decree as prayed. This was varied by the lower appellate Court which held that the plaintiff was entitled to a 1/12th share in the property as Ma Ye's son and gave him a money decree for 41-10-8. This giving of money decree for immovable property is wrong, but no objection is taken by the learned advocate in respect of this part of the decree, and I do not propose to interfere with it, if I am in favour of the respondents in other respects.

The decision of the case depends upon exactly what happened when Ko Maung died and the construction to be put upon that transaction. The evidence obviously is not quite clear, and the circumstances in which Ma Ye paid the debt and remained in possession of the property are ambiguous and are capable of being construed that she as one of the co-heirs was acting on behalf of herself and other co-heirs and not necessarily that she was acting as carrying out the directions of Ko Maung it is highly probable as the lower appellate Court has held and it has not been shown that it was wrong in so holding that Ma Ye sold a portion of the property, discharged the Chettyar's liability and remained in possession of the unsold property. The learned trial Judges viewed the transaction as an inchoate sale and applying the principles of part performance, held that Ma Ye was entitled to the property, though there was no registered conveyance. But the transaction is capable of being viewed in a different light When a Burmese Buddhist directs one of the heirs to discharge his liabilities, which are a good deal less than the value of his properties, and take over his properties the transaction is equivalent to a gift of the excess of the property over the debt, or a will of that excess, or it may be a death-bed gift of the excess. The principles, therefore, which would apply to a purchaser of the property for consideration have no application to a case of this nature. Even, therefore, on the assumption that this part of Ma Ye's case was true, in my opinion she would be holding this property on behalf of all her co-heirs, having sold a portion and discharged the liabilities of the deceased. In this view the judgment of the lower appellate Court is right, and I therefore dismiss this appeal with costs

K. C. Bose—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a petition by way of revision from the order of the learned District Judge of Arakan, dismissing the petitioner's application to sue as a pauper under O. 33, R. 5 (d), that her allegations do not show a cause of action inasmuch as the cause of action, if any, has been long barred by limitation The main objection urged is that the Court was not competent at the enquiry into her pauperism to go into the merits of her case and dismiss it. The learned trial Judge, we notice, has discussed in the first three pages of his judgment a number of cases, not a single one of which is reported in an authorized report. They are consequently of no assistance to us and have no binding force as authorities on the trial Court.

The decisions of the several High Courts are by no means unanimous in respect of how far a Court may go in enquiring into the substance of the cause of action in applications to sue as a pauper. But the decision relied on on behalf of the petitioner in Jogendra Narayan v. Durga Charan (1), is really against her. There a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that it is open to the Court to consider not only the statements made in the plaint but also the statements made in his examination by the applicant before determining whether his allegations disclose a cause of action as laid down in O 33, R. 5, clause (d), but the Court cannot examine other witnesses for deciding the question of limitation or any other question than the pauperism of the applicant

It is not suggested that any other witness has been examined here except the applicant herself. The Court has taken into consideration her examination as well as her petition which if admitted constitutes her plaint. The Court has also taken judicial notice of certain proceedings in Court in which the petitioner was party and in which she made certain applications. In so doing the Court's action was, in our opinion, perfectly correct

(1) [1918] 46 Cal. 651=52 I. C. 610.

The learned trial Judge has set out very clearly from the 5th page of his judgment beginning with the words :

"The first ground of objection is that the plaint discloses no subsisting cause of action and that applicant's claim is barred by limitation" down to the middle of the 7th page ending with the words :

" and I do not think any such trust can be inferred from the circumstances of the present case" his reasons for holding that the petitioner's present claim is on the face of it barred by limitation. We are in full agreement with his finding and do not consider it necessary to add any further reasons. The application is dismissed with costs

Letters Patent Appeal No. 134 of 1928, Decided on 25th March 1929, from judgment of Rangoon High Court in Second Appeal No. 254 of 1928.

(a) Contract Act, S. 40 — Illustrations (a) and (b)—Specific performance can be asked against legal representative in respect of contract for purchase of immovable property.

In view of S. 40 and its illustrations which indicate the class of contracts which the legal representative of a person must perform and those which one cannot ask him to perform, the specific performance can be asked against a legal representative in respect of a contract for purchase of immovable property and the remedy does not die with the party who agrees to purchase. [P 274 C 2]

(b) Specific Relief Act, S. 27 (b)—Scope.

The words "any other person claiming under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract," include the heirs and legal representatives of a deceased party to a contract. [P 274 C 2]

Thet Tun—for Appellants.

Halkar—for Respondents.

Judgment.— This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment on second appeal by Das, J., reversing the decision of the Sub-Divisional Court, confirmed on first appeal by the District Court of Amherst, on the ground that specific performance could not be asked in respect of a contract for the purchase of immovable property, the remedy apparently in the opinion of the learned Judge, dying with the party who agreed to purchase. This decision seems to be irreconcilable with S. 40, Contract Act and its illustrations, namely:

"(a) A promises to pay B a sum of money. A may perform this promise either by personally paying the money to B or by causing it to be paid to B by another: and, if A dies before the time appointed for payment, his representatives must perform the promise, or employ some proper person to do so.

(b) A promises to paint a picture for B. A must perform this promise personally,"

These illustrations seem to indicate the class of contracts which one cannot ask the legal representatives of a dead man to perform such as the painting of a picture, and the class of contracts which the legal representatives must perform such as the payment of the balance of purchase money, as in the present case. The learned Judge seems to have misconstrued the terms of S. 27, Cl. (b), Specific Relief Act. The words:

"any other person claiming under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract," in our opinion clearly include the heirs and legal representatives of a deceased party to a contract. The test is not whether they repudiate and wish not to be bound by the contract, which their predecessor-in-title had entered into, but it is whether they are, in fact, the heirs and legal representatives of such deceased party. If they are, the estate of the deceased is vested in them and that vesting of title arose subsequently, namely, on death, to the contract in suit. They claim under him by operation of law, being his heirs and legal representatives. If the estate is unable to meet the legal obligations of the deceased, the law does not require them to do the impossible. No personal liability devolves upon them but the estate which has come into their hands is answerable for the liabilities of its deceased owner, and, as representatives of the latter, they must defray these liabilities so far as that estate will enable them to do so. The the points raised in the memorandum of appeal before Das, J., do not seem to have been proved before him and do not require discussion here. For these reasons we reverse the decision of this Court and restore the order of the District Court. The plaintiff-appellants to have costs throughout.

(b) Civil P.C., S. 47—Correctness of decree cannot be called in question in execution.

A judgment-debtor cannot raise an objection that he has no saleable interest in the property ordered to be sold in execution of a mortgage-decree. Judgment.—The District Court of Pegu has ordered the sale of certain properties in execution of a mortgage-decree. We are asked to set aside that order on the ground that the judgment-debtors have no saleable interest in the property and that S 60, Civil P. C., therefore, applies. The property in question apparently consists of land which forms part of a Government estate, and for which the appellants are lessees or licensees of Government. It is stated that the appellants' license has not been renewed for the current year We are unable to see how it is possible to pass the order desired. The property is not being sold in execution of an ordinary money decree, but in execution of a mortgage-decree. No attachment is necessary and the provisions of S. 60, Civil P. C., do not apply. Further if the provisions of the section did apply the proper time to raise the objection was at the hearing of the suit and before the decree ordering the sale was passed. The correctness of that decree cannot now be called in question in execution. The sale will not of course pass anything more than the right, title and interests of the parties in the mortgaged properties, but the decree-holder has under the decree the right to put that to sale if he so desires. The view we are taking is that taken by the High Court of Patna in the case of Amrit Lal Seal v. Jagat Chandra Thakur (1), and by the majority of the Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad in the case of Bholanath v. Mt Kishori (2). Auzan—for Appellants.

E. Maung—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-respondent Abdul Hamead Khan brought a suit against the appellants and the other respondents for possession of a share in an estate. The property in dispute is the estate of Nahiruddin and his wife, Sunni Mahomedans, both of whom died in the year 1914. They left as heirs 6 daughters. The plaintiff-respondent married one of the daughters, Marian Bibi, who died on 9th November 1921. He had two daughters by her and they have both since died, and he now claims under the Mahomedan Law to be entitled to an 11/12th share of Marian Bibi's share in the estate The plaint as originally filed set forth that in the year 1920, the question of partitioning the estate between the heirs was referred to one U Nyein, who made an award.

Under that award, certain lands were apportioned to Marian Bibi but she never in fact got possession of those lands. A house was also awarded to her, and she did get possession of that house, but since her death the plaintiff-respondent has handed the house back to the defendant appellant 1, Ma Bibi. The plaintiff subsequently filed an amended plaint. In that plaint, he again sets forth the award. He gave further details about the house and as regards the paddy land said that Ma Bibi had paid to Marian Bibi the rents and profits of the paddy land awarded to her. It is not disputed that the plaintiff did represent his deceased wife Marian Bibi to the extent of an 11/12th share of her estate. The award by U Nyein was denied and it was contended that the estate was partitioned a year or two before the suit was filed. The defence claims that about a year and half before the filing of the suit there had been a final partition of the estate and that the plaintiff was a consenting party to this partition. It became quite clear, however, in evidence that at this so called partition, the plaintiff was not awarded any share. He has since married another daughter of the deceased, but the share claimed by her is quite distinct from that claimed by the plaintiff as heir of Marian Bibi.

The trial Court found that the so-called award by U Nyein in 1920 had been proved, but that, for some reason which the learned Judge does not make very clear, it was abortive. He held, however, that the plaintiff was entitled to claim his share in the estate irrespective of the award and gave him a decree accordingly. The present appeal has been filed on a number of grounds, but only one ground has been pressed before us, and that is that the suit was barred by limitation. The contention is that the suit was one for enforcing an award, that the article of the Limitation Act applicable to such suits is Art. 120, and that as the award is dated more than 6 years before the filing of the suit, the suit is barred by limitation.

We have been referred to certain rulings, which it is contended to support the view that the suit to enforce an award must for the purposes of limitation be held to be governed by Art. 120. In the case of Rajmal Girdharlal v. Maruti Shivram (1), a suit was brought to enforce an award. It had been contended that the article of Limitation applicable to such a suit was Art. 113 and that for this reason the suit was barred by limitation. The Court overruled this contention and the learned Chief Justice in his judgment stated that the period allowed was 6 years under Art. 120. He dealt with the matter in these words :

"It seems to be settled now that a suit to enforce an award is a suit not provided by any other article of the Limitation Act. Then the time is 6 years under Art. 120."

There is no discussion of authorities and no further reason given for this decision. The report of the case does not show what was the nature of the award, and the effect of the judgment was that Art. 113 did not apply and that the suit was not barred by limitation. It does not seem to us that this is an authority for the contention that in every case suits which are based on an award must be governed by Art. 120. In a later Bombay case Nanalal Lallubhai v. Chottalal Narsidas (2) the decision in Rajmal Girdharlal's case (1) was followed. In this latter case, the award was for the payment of money and the effect of the decision was that the plaintiff was allowed 6 years within which to file his suit instead of the ordinary 3 years that would have been allowed in a suit for recovery of money due Here again there was no discussion of the principles underlying the decision.

On the other hand the High Court of Calcutta in the case of Bhajahari Saha Banikya v. Behary Lal Basak (3) held that in a suit brought on an award by an arbitrator declaring the plaintiff's right to land, suit being for the recovery of possession of land was a suit under Art 142 or 144, Lim. Act. This case was followed in the Upper Burma case of Maung Ne Dun v. Maung Cho (4). Another case which has been cited for the appellants that of Kartar Singh v. Bhagat Singh (5), is not of much assistance, and it was admitted that in that case Art. 120 was the article applicable.

Now the present case, though as framed it was in part based on an award,

(1) A. I. R. 1921 Bom. 389=45 Bom. 329.
(2) A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 519=49 Bom. 693.
(3) [1906] 33 Cal. 881=4 C. L. J. 102.
(4) A. I. R. 1923 Rang. 108.
(5) A. I. R. 1921 Lah. 71=2 Lah. 320.

was in substance a suit for a share in the estate of a deceased person. If the award was treated as a valid award, it would have the effect of vesting certain rights in immovable property in Marian Bibi and the suit would be one for possession of that immovable property. There is no specific article of the Limitation Act applying to suits for the enforcement of an award. It may be that in many such suits, it would be impossible to say that the suits can be classified under any other article, and, therefore, that Art. 120 applies. But had the legislature intended that in all suits to enforce an award, entirely irrespective of their nature, the period of limitation applicable should be 6 years it is extremely unlikely that a specific article dealing with such suits would not have been inserted in the schedule. Actually the decree as framed is not directly based on the award at all. The trial Court has held the award to be abortive and has merely passed a preliminary decree declaring the plaintiff to be entitled to 11/12th of the share of the deceased wife Marian Bibi in the estate of her parents. And regarded as a suit for a share in this estate, we agree with the learned trial Judge that the suit was not barred by limitation, the finding being to the effect that until quite recently the estate or at any rate Marian Bibi's share of it has been expressly held by Ma Bibi on behalf of the other heirs. We are, therefore, of opinion that the trial Judge was right in holding that the suit was not barred by limitation. No other point has been pressed before us on behalf of the appellants, and we must, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Special Second Appeal No. 89 of 1929, Decided on 15th August 1929, from decree of Dist. Judge, Amherst, in Civil Appeal No. 153 of 1928.

Registration Act, S. 57 (5) — S. 57, Registration Act only shows that when secondary evidence has in any way been introduced as by loss of original document copy certified by Registrar is admissible to prove contents of original — Evidence Act, S. 65 (f).

Section 57, Registration Act, only shows that when secondary evidence has in any way been introduced as by proof of the loss of the original document a copy certified by the Registrar shall be admissible for the purpose of proving the contents of the original, that is, it shall be admitted without other proof than the Registrar's certificate of the correctness of the copy and shall be taken as a true copy. But that does not make such a copy a document which may be given in evidence without other evidence to introduce it. [P 278 C 1]

E. Maung—for Appellants.

Darwood—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appeal turns upon the question as to the admissibility of the document Ex 1 which is a certified copy of a registered deed of gift alleged to have been executed by Ma Bok and Ma Lauk, both deceased in favour of the first appellant and father of the second appellant, on 7th May 1914. Both the Courts below have held on the evidence that the appellants failed to prove the alleged loss of the deed, and this being a pure question of fact, ground 1 set out in the memorandum of appeal is untenable and has not been pressed. The plaintiff respondents' case is that Ma Bok and Ma Lauk made a valid gift of only 1/3 of the land in suit to Maung San Lun by registered deed, but the defendant appellants claim that the whole of the land was given to Maung San Lun.

The appeal has been pressed on the lines indicated in grounds 2 and 3 of appeal The provisions of S. 65 (e), Evidence Act, and of S. 65 (f) read with S. 57 (5), Registration Act, have been relied on in support of these grounds. The general rule as to the proof of documents declared in S. 64, Evidence Act, is that the documents must be proved by primary evidence, that is, by production of the documents themselves, and S. 65 deals with the exceptions to this rule In Krishna Kishori v. Kishori Lal (1), their Lordships of the Privy Council held that secondary evidence of the contents of a document cannot be admitted without the non-production of the original being first accounted for, so as to bring it within one or other of the cases provided in S. 65, Evidence Act. Thus the learned authors of the Law of

(1) [1887] 14 Cal. 486=14 I. A. 71=5 Sar. 18 (P.C.).

Evidence applicable to British India, Sir John Woodroffe and Mr. Amir Ali pointed out at p 508 of the eighth edition, that although there are cases in which secondary evidence is admissible even though the original is in existence and produceable as in the case of Cls. (e) (f) (b) and (g), S. 65, ordinarily, it must be shown that the document is not produceable in the natural sense of the word for this is the general ground upon which secondary evidence is admitted.

With reference particularly to the operation of S. 57 (5), Registration Act or S. 65 (f), Evidence Act, I think it is safe to accept the view expressed in the case of Harishchunder Mullick v. Prosunno Coomer Banerjee (2), which is to the effect that S 57, Registration Act, only shows that when secondary evidence has in any way been introduced as by proof of the loss of the original document a copy certified by the Registrar shall be admissible for the purpose of proving the contents of the original, that is, it shall be admitted without other proof than the Registrar's certificate of the correctness of the copy and shall be taken as a true copy. But that does not make such a copy a document which may be given in evidence without other evidence to introduce it. I see no reason to interfere with the judgment and decree of the Courts below. The appeal is dismissed with costs

Nga Po Ngwe—Accused—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 87-B of 1929 Decided on 12th March 1929, from order of Addl. Mag., Taungdwingyi, in Criminal Regular No. 164 of 1928.

(a) Penal Code, S. 227—In case under S. 227 conviction of accused, its date of sentence and fact that accused was granted remission of punishment and the conditions on which remission was granted must be proved by documentary evidence.

In a case under S. 227 the conviction of the accused, its date and the sentence passed should be proved by documentary evidence. Further the facts that the accused person was granted a remission of punishment and that the conditions on which the remission was granted must also be proved by documentary evidence. But the fact that the accused is the person convicted, sentenced and granted remission and that he has committed a breach of a condition of remission may be proved by oral evidence. The Magistrate should not overlook the requirements of documentary evidence and the accused should not be questioned at all until proper evidence is on the record. [P 278 C 2]

(b) Burma Act (3 of 1928), S. 2—Scope—Penal provision has no retrospective effect—Interpretation of Statutes.

Section 2 has no retrospective effect. On the ordinary principles of penal legislation a penal provision does not have retrospective effect. [P 279 C 1]

Judgment.—The respondent, Nga Po Ngwe, has been convicted under S. 227, I. P. C., of a breach of a condition of remission of punishment, and has been sentenced under that section and S. 2, Burma Act 3 of 1928, to nine months' rigorous imprisonment. The unexpired portion of his original sentence was found to be four months and 26 days

In a case under S. 227, Penal Code, it is necessary to prove the following :

1. That the accused person has been convicted and sentenced. The conviction and its date and the sentence passed should under Chap 5, Evidence Act, be proved by documentary evidence, that is by the judgment in the case. The judgment being a public document it may, under S. 65 (e), Evidence Act, be proved by a certified copy. But oral evidence to prove it is not admissible.

2 That the accused person was granted a remission of punishment. This again must be proved by documentary evidence that is, by the order granting the remission Here also a certified copy of the order is admissible, but no other form of secondary evidence

3. The conditions on which the remission was granted. This again is provable only as above, i.e., by a certified copy of the order of remission The bond executed by the accused should also be put in, or a certified copy of it.

4. The fact that the accused is the person convicted, sentenced and granted remission must be proved, and for this oral evidence is admissible.

5 The fact that the accused has committed a breach of a condition of the remission This may also be proved by oral evidence, but obviously no breach can be proved until the condition itself has been proved as set out in head 3 above.

The trying Magistrate has overlooked all the requirements of documentary evil dence and allowed everything to be proved by oral evidence. But as the accused admitted all the facts I think it would be hypercritical to interfere on this ground, though properly the accused should not have been questioned at all until proper evidence of the facts was on the record. A further point arises in the case. The alleged breach of condition was committed before Burma Act 3 of 1928 was passed. It was contended by the accused that therefore he could not be sentenced under that Act but the Magistrate overruled that contention, though he gave no good reason for doing so. On the ordinary principles of penal legislation a penal provision does not have retrospective effect. The wording of S. 2, Burma Act 3 of 1928 is somewhat peculiar. It reads :

"Whoever is convicted of absconding in violation of a condition of a remission of punishment under S. 227, Penal Code, shall in addition to the punishment prescribed by that section, be punished by the convicting Magistrate with rigorous imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year."

This suggests that it is incumbent on the Magistrate to add some term of imprisonment to that prescribed by S 227, though the length of the term to be added is within his discretion. This point, however, is not of importance in the present case.

If the section were worded in the ordinary way that is, if it began: "Whoever absconds in violation of a condition ....." I think there can be no doubt that it would not have retrospective effect, and that the additional sentence passed on the accused in this case was illegal. But the wording "Whoever is convicted of absconding ....." makes it arguable that S. 2, Act 3, applies to anyone convicted before the Act came into force and not only to an offence committed after that date. This interpretation, however, is so contrary to the accepted principles of penal legislation that I think it would be unsafe to accept it on grounds no stronger than are to be found in the section. I am not prepared, therefore, to hold that the section has retrospective effect. I therefore reduce the sentence passed on Nga Po Ngwe to one of rigorous imprisonment for 4 months and 26 days.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 86-B of 1928, Decided on 12th March 1928, for review of order of 3rd Addl. Magistrate of Taungdwingyi, in Criminal Regular No. 159 of 1928.

Penal Code, S. 227 and Burma Act (3 of 1928), S. 2—Magistrate sentencing person, convicted under S. 227, Penal Code, and S. 2, Burma Act, for period in excess of his powers—Such sentence is illegal.

There is nothing in either S. 227, Penal Code or Burma Act to empower any Magistrate to pass a sentence in excess of that which he is empowered under the Criminal P. C., to pass. Thus if a Magistrate sentences a person, convicted under S. 227 of the Code, and under S. 2, Burma Act, for a period which is in excess of his power, the sentence is illegal. [P 279 C 2]

Judgment.— The respondent Nga Mya has been convicted under S. 227, Penal Code and sentenced under that section and S. 2, Burma Act 3 of 1928, to rigorous imprisonment for two years, eight months and six days. The Magistrate who passed this sentence has ordinary 1st class powers and the maximum term of imprisonment that he can impose for one offence is two years. The sentence is, therefore, illegal. There is nothing in either S. 227, Penal Code or Burma Act 3 of 1928 to empower any Magistrate to pass a sentence in excess of that which he is empowered under the Criminal Procedure Code to pass. The conviction and sentence passed on Nga Mya are set aside and it is ordered that he be retried by a competent Magistrate.

This case is similar to the same Magistrate's Criminal Regular No. 164 of 1928 in that oral evidence has wrongly been admitted to prove the fact and particulars of the accused's conviction and the fact and conditions of the grant of a remission of sentence. I have explained in my order in Nga Po Ngwe v. Emperor (1) which is a review of that case, the nature of the evidence required in cases under S. 227, I. P. C. The Magistrate who retries this case should see that proper evidence is produced He should also in passing sentence, if the accused is convicted, take into consideration the imprisonment

Judgment.— Petitioner applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council against a judgment of a Bench of this Court which on appeal from a decree of the District Court of Amherst dismissing petitioner's suit affirmed the decision of the District Court. Petitioner valued the property which is the subject-matter of the suit at Rs. 10,000 when he first filed the suit and at Rs. 13,000 when he gave evidence, and it is not suggested by the respondents that the value of the subject-matter in dispute in the suit and in the appeal to this Court and in the proposed appeal to His Majesty in Council is less than Rs. 10,000. Petitioner claims that the proposed appeal involves a substantial question of law because, as he alleges, the judgment of this Court recognized as valid an oral transfer of immovable property and such recognition contravenes the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act, which provides that a sale of immovable property worth Rs 100 or more can be made only by registered instrument

In his original plaint, a copy of which (Ex. 12) is on the District Court's record petitioner alleged that in 1909 by registered deed he made a simple mortgage of the lands in suit in favour of one Ma Son and her two sons San Ye and Tun Hlaing, that in 1917 he put the mortgagees into possession of the lands on an agreement that the rents and profits should be taken by them in lieu of interest and that he was entitled to recover the lands from the mortgagees or their heirs and legal representatives on payment of the original mortgage money without interest. The defence was that the transaction of 1917 was not as petitioner alleged, a conversion of a simple mortgage into a possessory mortgage but was an outright transfer of the mortgaged properties to the mortgagees in satisfaction of the mortgage debt.

Petitioner admitted that profits of the lands were only sufficient or barely sufficient to pay the interest due on the mortgage and the Government revenue and that he allowed his brother Kya Baw to work the lands taking nothing from Kya Baw by way of rent or profits. It appeared from the official land records registers that about 1915 a report of a transfer of the lands by petitioner to Kya Baw was made to the revenue authorities and that in the registers for the year 1915-16 the lands were transferred from petitioner's name to Kya Baw's name as owner. It appeared also from the official registers that in 1917 the lands were transferred outright by Kya Baw to San Ye and Tun Hlaing for Rs. 4,000 the transaction being reported to the revenue authorities as a sale, that being the usual form of report in this country when mortgaged properties are transferred to the mortgagees in satisfaction of the mortgage debt. There was some evidence that the petitioner himself took part in this transaction, and although the trial Court rejected that evidence it must be remembered that in his original plaint petitioner himself said that it was he who transferred the lands to the mortgagees. It seems clear therefore that petitioner took part in the transaction of 1917 and that that transaction instead of being, as he alleged, a mere putting of the mortgagees into possession under an agreement that they should take the rents and profits in lieu of interest was in fact intended to be an outright transfer of the lands to the mortgagees in satisfaction of the mortgage debt. The only difference between this case and many similar cases which come before this Court is that the person who made the transfer to the mortgagees in this case, as shown by the entry in the land records registers, was petitioner's brother Kya Baw and not petitioner himself. But petitioner had admittedly allowed his brother to deal with the lands as owner and had allowed them to stand in his brother's name as owner for several years, and on his own statement in the plaint he was a party to the transaction of 1917. In these circumstances the trial Court found that petitioner could not be allowed to repudiate the transaction of 1917 which was proved to be in intention though not in law an outright transfer of the lands to the mortgagees in satisfaction of the mortgage debt. Petitioner appealed to this Court on the ground that the lower Court should not have recognized the transfers of the lands by him to Kya Baw and by Kya Baw to San Ye and Tun Hlaing because those transfers were not effected by registered deed.

This Court said that petitioner's admission that he was a party to the transaction of 1917, which was proved to have been an outright transfer in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, debarred him from alleging that he was not bound by that transaction, and that although that transaction did not convey a good title to San Ye and Tun Hlaing, nevertheless it was a good defence to petitioner's suit to redeem the property. That decision was based on a long line of decisions of this Court that an agreement to sell, which is inherent in the execution of a conveyance which was not registered, or in a report of an outright sale made by the vendor to the revenue authorities with a view to mutation of names, is a good defence to a suit for possession of the property brought by the legal owner. That view of the law is settled, so far as this Court is concerned, by the Full Bench cases of Myat Tha Zan v. Ma Dun (1) and Ma Ok Kyi v. Ma Pu (2) and has been adopted in numerous cases of which the following are examples, namely, Shwe Hmon v. Tha Byaw (3), Ma Ma E v. Maung Tun (4) and Tun Bye v. Maung Kya (5).

Petitioner's learned advocate asks us to give leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council on the ground that all those cases have been wrongly decided in that they recognize as valid transfers which are declared by S. 54, T. P. Act, to be invalid. Respondent's learned advocate refers us to the case of Mathura Kurmi v. Jaydeo Singh (6) as laying down that the application of well defined legal principles to a particular set of facts does not raise any question of law which can fairly be described as substantial, but in quoting that case the learned advocate has omitted certain important words. The Bench qualified the generality of the statement quoted by the words "in these circumstances," the circumstances in that case being that the matter had been agitated time and again before their Lordships of the Privy Council, who had repeatedly laid down the law in the sense in question. In the present case the law does not seem ever to have been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. There are certain cases in which their Lordships have dealt with somewhat similar points, namely, the cases of Immudipattan v. Peria Dorasami (7) Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (8), and Sheo Go v. Maung

In (9)., but in thoe cases, as was pointed out in the case of Myat Tha Zan v. Ma Dun (1) the question of precise effect of the provisions of S 54, T. P. Act, was not material to the decision In these circumstances we are unable to hold that the decision in Mathura Kurmi's case (6) applies to the facts of the present case.

The question whether the cases in this Court mentioned above and similar cases decided in the other High Courts of India were rightly decided is clearly a question of law and in view of the number of such cases occurring in this country and the importance of the legal principles involved it seems to us to be a material question of law. We therefore grant a certificate that as regards amount or value and nature the case fulfils the requirements of S. 110 of the Code. Ba Maw—for Appellant.

Po Han and On Thwin—for Respondents.

Mya Bu, J —Appellant Maung Po Mya was the eldest born child of a Burman Buddhist couple U Pu and Ma Gyi who had two younger children Ma Hla, respondent 1, and Maung Than, the father of respondents 2 and 3 U Pu died in 1920 and Po Mya claimed and obtained his quarter share in the estate of the parents as the orasa son. Maung Than died in 1923. In 1928 Ma Gyi died. Maung Po Mya now sues for administration and partition of the estate of Ma Gyi, claiming 11/24ths share of the estate as against his sister and the children of his deceased brother The estate left behind by Ma Gyi consists entirely of the joint property of herself and U Pyu. The defence is that as the appellant took his quarter share as orasa son on the death of U Pu he is not entitled to claim any share in the estate left by Ma Gyi.

The question for decision is whether an orasa son after taking his quarter share on the death of the father retains any right to inherit in the remainder of the estate on the death of the mother The case of Maung Hmu v. Maung Po Thin (1), is an authority showing that the orasa son in such a case retains no further right, and if it still remains good law, then the question must be answered in the negative The decision in that case was to the effect that the orasa son after having taken his quarter share of the estate of his deceased father retained no right to any further future partition of, or any right in, the remainder of the estate. This decision was based on the Dhammathats collected in S. 30 of Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest and on the ruling in Ma On v. Ko Shwe O (2), where it was held inter alia that on the death of one of the parents the eldest son or daughter may claim his or her share and the remainder of the property vests in the surviving parent for himself or herself and the remaining children. Ma On's case (2), has now been overruled by a Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma in Ma Sein Ton v. Ma Son (3),

(1) [1900] 1 L. B. R. 50.
(2) [1872-1892] L. B. R. 378.
(3) [1915] 8 L. B. R. 501=30 I. C. 588=8 Bur. L. T. 903 (F.B.).

which, however, does not deal with the question as to whether an orasa son after having taken his quarter share on the death of his father is entitled to claim a further share in the joint property on the death of the mother, but simply strengthens the widow's right of disposal over the remaining three-quarter share.

In the case of Ma Toke v. Ma U Le (4), in which the question was whether partition having been effected between the surviving parent and the children on the remarriage of the surviving parent, the children of the first marriage could claim any further share in the lettetpwa property of the surviving parent and his second spouse, the ruling in Maung Hmu's case (1), was referred to. One of the texts collected in S. 30 of Kin Wun Mingyi's Digest is an extract from the Manugye which corresponds to Manugye —Book 10—S. 5, which deals with the partition between the mother and sons on the death of the father and states after detailing the personal belongings of the father which go to the eldest son and those of the mother which go to her:

"Let the residue be divided into four parts of which let the eldest son have one, and the mother and younger children three"

This clearly indicates that after the orasa's claim to a quarter share has been satisfied the only other persons having an interest in the remainder are the mother and children other than the orasa although the interests of such children, according to settled law, are not vested until the death of the mother.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down in Ma Hnin Bwin v. U Shwe Gon (5), that where the Manugye is not ambiguous other Dhammathats do not require to be referred to, and I do not think that it is necessary for the purpose of the present case to refer to the other Dhammathats in S. 30 of the Digest which I may, however, say do not introduce anything inconsistent with the rule enunciated by Manugye, Book 10, S. 5 Further support to the view that the orasa son having taken his quarter share on the death of the father is not entitled to a further share on the death of the mother, is gained from S. 155, of the Attasankhepa Vannana Dhammathat compiled by the Kinwun Mingyi who was also the the author of the Digest and who during regime of the last two Burmese Kings and for many years after the annexations until his death was the greatest living authority on Burmese Law and Literature and whose opinion is therefore very reliable.

For these reasons it is in my opinion safe to uphold the ruling in Maung Hmu's case (1) except where it speaks of the right of pre-emption, which is contrary to the ruling of the Full Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma in Maung Ye Nan O v. Aung Myat Sari (6).

The learned counsel for the appellant relies on the obiter dictum in Maung Po San v. Maung Po Thet (7) which is to the effect that even if the orasa has taken his quarter share on the death of one parent or on the remarriage of the surviving parent, he is still entitled to claim a share on the death of the surviving parent or on the death of the step-parent, unless separation from the family is proved or is to be presumed.

According to my experience of the modern practice an orasa child who has taken a quarter share on the death of the parent of the same sex does not usually act up to the old notions of continuing in the family looking after the family estate and the younger children; and there is no reason why an orasa child who has actually taken a quarter share from the surviving parent and lives separately as in this case, should not be regarded as having been separated from the surviving parent and the younger children. It is contended that the orasa child gets his or her quarter share on the death of the parent of the same sex because of the special and outstanding position that such child occupies in the family, and therefore such share should be regarded as a reward and should not be taken into consideration in the final division of the estate on the death of the surviving parent. Bearing in mind the fact that the orasa child is given the right to claim a quarter share on the death of the parent of the same sex while other children are not entitled to claim anything till the death of the surviving parent, which is in itself a special privilege, the contention that the actual share—not merely the right—is given as a reward appears to me to be quite untenable. The learned counsel points out that according to the texts mentioned in S. 149 and the allied sections of the Digest, the orasa child has a right to participate in the inheritance along with other children on the death of the surviving parent. But there is nothing to show and it does not appear that the references to the orasa in the text relate to the orasa child who has taken a quarter share on the death of one of the parents.

It is possible that in spite of the fact that an orasa child has obtained a quarter share of the parental estate from the surviving parent on the death of the parent of the same sex, he or she may be allowed to inherit on the death of the surviving parent where no other child survives. But it is in my opinion clear that where there is a child of the family surviving the last dying spouse the orasa who has taken a share of the parental estate from the surviving parent on the death of the parent of the same sex, does not retain any right to a further share in the partition of the remainder of the estate on the death of the surviving parent. For these reasons I would dismiss the appeal with costs

Maung Ba U—Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 103 of 1929, Decided on 6th September 1929, against order of Dist. Judge, Thaton in Misc. Case No. 19 of 1929.

Buddhist Law (Burmese) — Guardian and Ward.

A mother's sister is a preferential guardian to a putative father or stepfather when the estate belonged to the minor's deceased father. [P 284 C 2]

Janab Ali—for Appellant.

Shwe Thwin—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Shwe Ya and Ma Ngwe U were husband and wife They lived together for many years, but had no children. Some 10 years or more ago, Shwe Ya, who must have been well over 70 years of age, married Ma Wut, a girl of about 20 who had been living with them as a servant. Not long afterwards, the present respondent Ba U came to live in their house as a clerk. Ma Wut conceived four times, while she was married to Shwe Ya. One conception was abortive, and two of the children died soon after birth, but the last child, a girl Ma Thu was born five months and 13 days after Shwe Ya's death, and is still alive. There is a strong presumption that this child was conceived while Shwe Ya was alive and that it was his child Shwe Ya died in July 1924, and thereafter his widow, Ma Wut and the clerk Ba U lived together as husband and wife. They had no children. Shwe Ya's estate was admittedly worth of Rs. 1,00,000 or more, and the minor Ma Thu as his daughter would be entitled to claim partition by reason of her mother's remarriage, and would also be entitled to claim a share of inheritance from Ba U, if he was her stepfather.

The appellant Ma Zaw May is Ma Wut's own sister, and she claims to be appointed guardian of the person and property of her minor niece Ma Thu. Her object is doubtless to file a suit on behalf of the minor against Ba U. Ba U objects to her appointment as guardian on the ground that he is in fact Ma Thu's father, having had adulterous intercourse with her mother Ma Wut during Shwe Ya's lifetime. The learned Judge in th lower Court said that he was inclined to hold that Ma Thu was not begotten by Shwe Ya, but was begotten by Ba U. For this reason he dismissed appellant's application to be appointed guardian.

It seems to us that it is unnecessary for the purposes of these proceedings to decide whether or not Ba U is in fact the father of Ma Thu because even if he was her father that fact would in the circumstances of the case give him no right to be guardian of either her person or her property It is quite clear that his interests are adverse to hers, and we are of opinion that appellant who is admittedly the sister of the minor's mother ought to have been appointed guardian of the minor's person and property. Respondent's learned advocate suggests that her antecedents are such as to disqualify her from appointment, but respondent's own antecedents are none of the best and in view of the appellant's admitted relationship to the minor, we think that she may reasonably be appointed, provided of course, that she gives security for the full value of the property, which she may be expected to recover on the minor's behalf. We therefore set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that appellant be appointed guardian of the person and property of her minor niece Ma Thu on giving such security as may be fixed by the lower Court. The respondent will pay appellant's costs in both Courts. Advocate's fees in this Court to be five gold mohurs.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 96 of 1929, Decided on 26th August 1929, from decree of Rangoon High Court in Second Appeal No. 492 of 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 2, R. 2—O. 2, R. 2, is no bar if cause of action in subsequent suit is different from one in earlier suit.

In an earlier suit the claim was based on the conveyance and the cause of action was the discrepancy between the area of the land as mentioned in the conveyance and the actual area of the land. In the subsequent suit the cause of action was an alleged failure to convey the land agreed to be conveyed, the land being land different from the one mentioned in the conveyance and the claim was based not on the conveyance but on the agreement to convey.

Held: that such subsequent suit could not be barred by operation of O. 2, R. 2. [P 287 C 1]

(b) Buddhist Law (Burmese)—Agreement by husband to convey land jointly belonging to him and his wife—Consent of wife not obtained—Claim for specific performance cannot succeed—Specific Relief Act, S. 28.

If a Burmese Buddhist agrees to convey land jointly belonging to him and his wife without obtaining her consent, suit for specific performance of such agreement cannot be obtained as the husband is not competent to alienate land without obtaining wife's consent. [P 287 C 1]

F. S. Doctor—for Appellant.

E. A. Villa—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Respondent who is a man of between 70 and 80 years of age, had a number of children by his first wife, and appellant who is nearly 50 himself is one of those children. About 1925, respondent married a young wife and the children by the first wife claimed partition of property. Respondent's lands were mortgaged for Rs 7,760 and so in April 1926, it was arranged that the children or some of them should buy the properties from him at the full market price, that the sale proceeds so obtained should be used to pay off the mortgage, that the father should have half of what was left after the mortgage had been paid off and that the children should share the other half between them, the price actually payable by children who bought property being reduced by the amount of the share payable to them under the arrangement. In accordance with that arrangement appellant agreed to buy certain lands for Rs. 10,000 and a conveyance of a certain holding of paddy land to him for that amount was executed and duly registered. That holding was described in the conveyance as holding No. 15 of 1925-26 in Ngamonchaun Kwin, measuring 28.82 acres, those particulars being copied into the conveyance from the tax ticket for 1925-26 but in copying the figures a mistake is made, and the figures 26.82 were read as 28.82, figures for 6 and 8 in Burmese script being easily mistaken for each other.

On discovering the mistake appellant sued his father to recover either the supposed deficiency of the two acres or Rs. 700 as being the price of the 2 acres, which as he alleged he had overpaid, but his suit was dismissed on the ground that he was himself in possession of all the tax receipts for the previous years, which showed the area as 26.82 acres, that he admitted that he knew before the conveyance was executed that the area of the land was in fact only 26.82 acres, and not 28.82 acres and that he had not been prejudiced by the mistake in the conveyance, because he knew the holding which he was buying and had got exactly what he intended to buy. Long before the suit was filed appellant was already in dispute with his father about another matter which as he alleged arose out of the same agreement to buy from his father certain lands for Rs. 10,000.

Adjoining the holding of 26.82 acres there was an extension into State waste land which had been made by his father apparently during the year 1925, but which was said not to have been assessed to revenue at the time when the conveyance was executed. That extension was assessed to revenue in the name of the father and the new wife as a separate new holding namely holding No. 4 of 1927-28 of 10.38 acres. It does not appear when that holding was first assessed to revenue, but it seems probable that it was at about the time of the conveyance of the 26 82 acres holding to appellant. Appellant claimed that although that holding was not included in the conveyance it was intended that he should receive it along with the 26.82 acre holding, and he attempted to take possession of it, with the result that the new wife prosecuted him for criminal trespass. He replied by prosecuting his father for cheating and his father and the new wife together for mischief.

The basis of the charge of cheating, which it may be noted was made on 23rd June 1926, the date of the conveyance being the 24th April 1926, was that his father had fraudulently and dishonestly induced him to buy the 26.82 acre holding by representing that the adjoining extension which the father had cleared and prepared for cultivation during the previous year but which according to his father had not yet been assessed to revenue, would pass to him along with the 26 82 acre holding. He said that the reason for his paying so much as 350 per acre for the holding mentioned in the conveyance was that it was agreed that he should get also the adjoining holding of 10.38 acres thrown in at the same price. The basis of the charge of mischief, which was made on 9th July 1926, was that his father and the new wife had damaged the growing paddy planted by him on the 10.38 acre holding. All these criminal proceedings were abortive, appellant's charge of cheating being classified as false, and his complaint of mischief being dismissed without trial. Appellant's suit for the recovery of the two acres of land or Rs. 700 which was instituted on 3rd September 1927 having been dismissed on 5th December 1927, he instituted the present suit on 16th January 1928.

In his plaint in this suit he alleged that his father agreed to sell him both the 28.82 acre holding and the 10 38 acre holding for 10,000 agreeing to convey the former holding forthwith and the latter after it had been assessed to revenue, that the former holding was duly conveyed to him, the whole consideration for the sale of the two holdings being entered in the conveyance as the consideration for that holding, that his father had failed to convey the latter holding, and that he was entitled to a decree for a conveyance of it and for mesne profits, which he assessed at 600. The father denied that he ever agreed to sell the 10.38 acre holding and said that if he had agreed to sell it there was no reason why it should not have been included in the conveyance, because it had actually been assessed to revenue and the tax ticket for it had issued before the conveyance was executed He pleaded that the suit was barred by reason of the former suit in which the appellant had claimed either the two acres of land or its value. He also pleaded that appellant could not be allowed to vary the terms of the conveyance by oral evidence to show that although only the 26 82 acre holding was mentioned in the conveyance, the 10.38 acre holding was also intended to be conveyed.

The trial Court found that the respondent did agree to sell both the holdings for 10,000, that no conveyance of the 10.38 acre holding was executed because respondent's rights in it were those of a mere "squatter" and land alienated by a squatter is liable to be resumed by Government, and that S. 92, Evidence Act, did not prevent appellant from proving that the 10.38 acre holding was included in the agreement for sale. The learned Judge regarded the pleading that the present suit was barred by the previous suit as being a pleading of res judicata, and finding that the subject matter of the present suit was not res judicata by reason of the earlier suit, gave appellant a decree for a conveyance of the 10.38 acre holding and for mesne profits. Respondents appealed but the lower appellate Court accepted the findings of the trial Court and dismissed his appeal with costs.

Respondent then came to this Court in second appeal, and the learned Judge who dealt with this case was of opinion that the present suit was barred by the operation of O. 2, R. 2, on the ground that the present claim ought to have been made in the earlier suit. The matter now comes before us as an appeal under S. 13 of the Letters Patent on a declaration of the Judge who passed the judgment that the case is a fit one for appeal. It seems to us clear that the decision of the learned Judge was mistaken, because the cause of action in the earlier case was the discrepancy between the area of the land as mentioned in the conveyance and the actual area of the land, the claim being based on the conveyance itself, whereas in the present case the cause of action is an alleged failure to convey the land agreed to be conveyed, that land being land different from the land mentioned in the conveyance and the claim is based not on the conveyance but on the agreement to convey.

What appellant claims in the present suit is specific performance of an agreement to convey the 10.38 acre holding to him, but that claim cannot succeed because it is clear from appellant's own admissions that that land was acquired by his father after his marriage to his present wife, so that it belongs to the father and the stepmother jointly, and the father could not alienate it without the consent of the stepmother It is clear that the stepmother did not consent to the alienation, since she prosecuted appellant for trespass as soon as he attempted to enter into possession of the land. The case is therefore not one in which the Court would decree specific performance, and appellant must be left to such other remedies as may be open to him In this connexion we may note that in our opinion appellant would be well advised to let matter rest where it is, and not to embark on any further litigation which it is certain to be costly and likely to be infructuous. The appeal is dismissed, and in the circumstances of the case the parties will bear their own costs.

N. M. Cowasjee—for Appellant.

K. C. Bose and P. B. Sen—for Respondents

Judgment.—The respondent to this appeal is the Administrator-General of Burma as administrator of the estate of one Lee Woot Hong, deceased. He brought a suit on the Original Side of this Court against the appellant, Ah Kway for a declaration as to the share to which Lee Woot Hong's estate is entitled in a partnership business carried on with the appellant, for the taking of accounts and for the winding up of the partnership. Subsequently the respondent 2, Lee Way Pein, was added as a defendant to the suit in his claiming that he was a subsisting partner. Ah Kway did not file a written statement but made an application to the Court under the provisions of S 19, Arbitration Act, asking for a stay of proceedings. After hearing the parties on this application, the trial Judge passed orders refusing to stay proceedings and Ah Kway has now filed an appeal against this order.

It is contended on behalf of respondent 1 that no appeal lies and reliance is placed on the Full Bench ruling of this Court in the case of P. K. P. V. E. Chidambaram Chettyar v. N. A Chettyar Firm (1) It has been suggested on behalf of the appellant that we should not follow this Full Bench decision because a different view of the law was taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Sooniram Jeetmul v. R. D. Tata & Co. (2) In that case a suit was brought on the original side of this Court and an objection was taken that the suit was not within the local jurisdiction of the Court. The trial Court overruled the objection and proceeded to deal with the case on the merits. An appeal against this decision was filed before a Bench of this Court, and the Bench held that an appeal did lie, but, eventually, dismissed the appeal on the merits. The defendants then applied to the Privy Council for special leave to appeal against the order of the Bench and special leave was given. The order granting special leave to appeal records that counsel had been heard in support of the application and in opposition thereto. If no appeal had lain in the first instance to a Bench of this Court that would have been a complete answer to the application for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council It is contended therefore that the order of their Lordships admitting the appeal involved a finding that an appeal from the trial Judge to the appellate Bench did lie. We are unable, however, to accept this contention. In the order admitting the appeal there is no reference whatsoever to the question whether an appeal had lain in the first instance from the order of the trial Judge. The Privy Council finally decided the case against the appellants. Their judgment is reported [Soni Ram v Tata & Co, Ltd. (3)]. There is no reference in their judgment to the question whether an appeal lay in the first instance from the order of the trial Judge. The appeal was dismissed on the merits and the respondents were not called on for a reply. It is quite clear, therefore, that at the hearing of the appeal the question whether an appeal had lain from the trial Judge was not considered. The order admitting the appeal did not involve any finding on any question in dispute. The final result of the appeal was against the appellants and we are unable to hold that the order of their Lordships of the Privy Council involved any finding on the question whether an appeal did lie in the first instance from the order of the trial Judge.

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Rang 41=6 Rang. 703 (F.B.).

(2) C. M. No. 82 of 1925.

Reference has also been made on behalf of the appellant to the case of Joylall & Co. v. Gopiram Bhotica (4). In that case a Bench of the Calcutta High Court did decide that an appeal would lie from an order refusing to stay proceedings under S. 19, Arbitration Act. That is clearly an authority in favour of the view that the present appeal lies but it appears to us to be in conflict with the decision in the Full Bench case of Chidambaram Chettiar (1). In that case Ormiston, J., wrote a long judgment in which he discussed exhaustively the previous authorities on the point. The question referred for the decision of the Full Bench was :

" whether the finding that the parties intended to treat the document on which the suit was filed as an inland and not as a foreign instrument, and that the defendants in consequence cannot now rely upon any defects based upon its being a foreign instrument, a finding which had the effect of allowing the suit to proceed, amounts to a judgment within the meaning of Art. 13, Letters Patent. "

The five Judges who composed the Bench were unanimously of opinion that the question referred should be answered in the negative.

At pp 709 and 710 in his judgment, Ormiston, J., sets forth three criteria which had been suggested as means for determining whether or not an order is appealable within the meaning of Cl. 13. On p. 710, he states as follows :

" The first is that adopted by the Madras High Court in 1868, where a judgment is stated to have the meaning of 'any decision or determination affecting the rights or the interest of any suitor or applicant' : The second is that adopted by the Calcutta High Court in 1872, and which on very many occasions has been described as classical. According to this view, 'judgment' means 'a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability' and it is immaterial whether it is final, or merely preliminary or interlocutory . . . The third criterion . . . which may be described in contradistinction to the others as the modern view, being that laid down by the Chief Justice of the Madras High Court in 1910, and adopted by the late Chief Justice of this Court in 1924. According to this view, the test is whether or not the effect of the adjudication is to put an end to the suit or proceedings so far as the Court before which the suit or proceedings is pending is concerned, or if its effect, if it is not complied with, is to put an end to the suit or proceeding ; if it has this effect the adjudication is a judgment ; otherwise not. ' "

After discussing the case law on the subject, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that this last test was the proper test to be applied. The order which was appealed against in that case was merely an order on one issue in the case and its effect was not to put an end to the trial of the suit or proceeding, but to allow it to continue. The Officiating Chief Justice in a concurring judgment remarks, at p. 738 :

" The finding with which we are concerned is one, in effect, which decides " that the suit is maintainable, and so

(3) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 156=5 Rang. 451=54 I. A. 265 (P.C ).

(4) [1920] 47 Cal. 611=58 I. C. 755=24 C. W. N. 612.

paves the way for the determination of the main question between the parties. It does not finally decide the rights of the parties and will be subject to attack on appeal, if the decree is ultimately against the appellant.

It is quite clear that according to the principles approved in that case the finding on a single issue in the trial of a case which does not finally determine the rights of the parties is not a judgment within the meaning of Cl. 13, Letters Patent, and previous rulings of this Court to the effect that a preliminary finding whether the trial Court had jurisdiction to try the case is appealable were expressly dissented from. We are bound by this decision and we find ourselves unable to distinguish the question involved in the present appeal. The trial Court has decided to proceed with the trial of the case but it has not come to any decision on the merits of the dispute between the parties, and the effect of the order is not to put an end to the suit or proceeding. It cannot by its nature be an order which, if not complied with, would put an end to the suit or proceeding. When the trial Court has proceeded to try the suit on its merits and passed its final judgment thereon, an appeal will then lie and it will then be open to the appellant, if aggrieved by the final order, to raise the point that an adjournment should have been allowed under S. 19, Arbitration Act. The effect of the order may be temporarily to deny the appellant the right to have the matter referred to arbitration, but it is not a final order on the point. It is true that the order appealed against is not a decision on an issue in the case, but its effect is the same as if it were an order on an issue as to jurisdiction It was expressly held in Chidambaram Chettyar's case (1) that a preliminary order deciding that the Court had jurisdiction on an issue was not appealable, and it seems to us necessary to follow that the order appealed against here is also not appealable We are, therefore, of opinion that the present appeal does not lie. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

Application No. 186 of 1928, Decided on 28th March 1929, arising out of First Appeal from judgment of Original Side in Civil Regular No 213 of 1927.

Civil P. C., O 41, R 10—Appellant asked to give security under O. 41, R 10 (1) failing to furnish it within time ordered, with knowledge of order for security — Application made for extension after expiration of time to give security refused — Appeal rejected — No order to restore appeal can be made.

An appellant was directed to give security under O 41, R. 10 (1) and notice of the application for security was duly served on him. With knowledge of the order for security, he failed to give security within the time ordered by the Court and applied after the expiry of that time, for extension His application was refused on the ground that it was made after the expiration of the time allowed and that no security was given up to the date of the hearing of the application. The appeal was rejected under O 41, R 10 (2) and not merely struck off the file.

Held: that no order to restore the appeal could be made: 8 All. 315 (P. C); 17 Cal. 1 (P. C), 17 Cal. 512 (P. C) and 42 All 626, Cons. and Dist. [P 290 C 1, 2]

Heald, J.—On 11th December last an order under O 41, R. 10 was made against applicants and they were directed to give the necessary security on or before 15th January They failed to give the required security but on 22nd January they applied for an extension of one month The opposite party objected and asked that the appeal should be rejected under O 41, R 10 (2) The case was fixed for hearing the two applications on 13th February and the Bench which heard the applications said that the time for furnishing security expired on 15th January, that no application for extension of time was made until 22nd January and that it was admitted that up to the date of hearing, that is, up to 13th February no security had been offered. On these grounds the Bench refused the application for further time and rejected the appeal. Applicants now on 14th March ask us to restore the appeal, which has been rejected, on the ground that they are now in a position to give security.

Their learned advocate has referred us to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balwant Singh v. Daulat Singh (1), but the facts of that case seem to be different from those of the case which is before us. In that case the order for security was made without notice to the appellant Three days before the date by which security was to be given the appellant filed a petition showing cause why he should not be ordered to give security, but nine days later, that is six days after the date fixed for giving security, the Court ordered the appeal to be struck off the file on the ground that security had not been given within the time prescribed by the Court. Subsequently the appellant filed a petition in which he brought to the notice of the Court the fact that he had received no notice of the application for security and applied for the appeal to be restored. On that application the Court seems to have granted him further time to give security, but when he tendered the security the Court said that the appeal was not dismissed under S. 556 or 557 of the Code and that the petition was not entertainable under S. 558 and was inapplicable to an order made under S. 549. The references were of course to the old Code of Civil Procedure and the appellate Court's order was in effect that because the appeal had not been dismissed for default under the provisions of law which are now Rr. 17 and 18, O. 41, but had been struck off under provisions corresponding to those of O. 41, R 10, no application under what is now O. 41, R. 19 would lie. Their Lordships of the Privy Council said that there was some difficulty in saying what in substance was the proper course to be taken in these circumstances, but assuming that after the appeal had been ordered to be struck off the file, the Court had allowed the appellant further time to give security they held that he should be allowed to give security and that on his giving security his appeal should be restored to the files of the Court.

It is clear that that decision is no authority for the proposition that there is a general discretion to restore an appeal which has been rejected under O 41, R. 10 (2), or that there is such a discretion in a case where notice of the application for security has been duly served on the appellant, where with knowledge of the order for security he has failed to give security within the time ordered by the Court, where he has subsequently applied for further time which has been refused for reasons given in the order, and where the appeal has been rejected as directed by the Code and not merely struck off the file.

Applicant's learned advocate has, however, referred us to another Privy Council case, namely Rajab Ali v. Amir Hossein (2). In that case an appellant was ordered to furnish security under S. 549 (now O. 41, R. 10) to the satisfaction of the Judge of the trial Court before a certain date Security was tendered before that date but the Judge found it to be insufficient and refused to allow other security to be given on the ground that the time allowed by the appellate Court had by that time expired. The appellant appealed against the order refusing to allow him to give other security, but the appellate Court said that he took the risk of furnishing security which was found to be insufficient and that therefore he could not be allowed the opportunity, after the expiry of the prescribed period, of furnishing fresh security The appeal in respect of which security had been ordered to be furnished was accordingly rejected. Their Lordships did not in fact interfere with the decision of the appellate Court but they pointed out that that Court had a discretion to enlarge the time allowed for finding security or to accept fresh security. The law as to enlargement of time as laid down by their Lordships is now embodied in S 148 of the Code, and since their Lordships' dictum is merely a statement of that law, it does not help applicants so far as the present case is concerned

The learned advocate has referred us also to the case of Badri Narain v. Sheo Koer (3), in which the High Court had held that it had no power to grant an extension of time after the expiry of the time fixed. In that case their Lordships said that the application to the Court to enlarge the time for giving security may be made either before or after the expiration of the time within which the security has been ordered to be furnished and the Court may therefore enlarge the time according to any necessity which may arise where it is just and proper that they should do so. That decision similarly does not go beyond the provisions of the present S. 148.

The only other case cited was that of Sundar v. Habib Chik (4). In that case the appellants were ordered to give the necessary security within a week. On the last day of the week allowed they filed an objection to the order calling on them to give security, but apparently they neither tendered security nor applied for an extension of time. Their appeal was rejected, but two days later they applied for a reconsideration of the matter and they were granted an extension of time, their appeal being restored to the file The opposite party applied to the High Court against the extension of time and the restoration of the appeal, and the High Court purporting to follow the ratio decidendi in Balwant Singh's case (1), said that the Court was entitled to reconsider on cause subsequently shown an order rejecting an appeal under O 41, R. 10 (2), and accordingly, regarding the application before them as an application for rovision and the order of the lower Court as an order passed in review, refused to interfere. All that need be said about that case is that it seems possible that the view which the learned Judges took as to the effect of the decision in Balwant Singh's case (1) was not warranted by the facts of that case and that in any case the facts there were different from those of the present case.

In this case more than a month was allowed for furnishing the security, and the appeal was not rejected until applicants had been heard on their application for an enlargement of time. After due consideration of the time granted in the first instance, of the fact that applicants had not tendered any security within that time, of applicants' delay in applying for an enlargement of time, and of the grounds shown by them for the enlargement for which they asked, the Bench decided to refuse to extend the time and rejected the appeal. We are not asked to deal with that order in review and this Bench as now constituted could not do so. We are merely asked to restore the appeal and to grant further time on the footing of a supposed right based on the judgment of the Privy Council in Balwant Singh's case (1), but that case is no authority for the existence of such a right in a case like the present. On the analogy of the rejection of a plaint there would be no such right and I see no reason to believe that any such right exists I would therefore dismiss the application.

Civil Misc Appeal No. 29 of 1929, Decided on 12th August 1929.

 Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 16 —Original petition validly presented— Petitioner not proceeding with due diligence — Court can substitute in his place other creditors as petitioners during pendency of insolvency proceedings and they will take place of original petitioner ab initio—No fresh act of insolvency is necessary

If the original petition by a creditor to get a debtor adjudicated insolvent is validly presented and the case is one in which the petitioner does not proceed with due diligence on his petition it is open to persons to come in as creditors at any time while the insolvency proceedings are pending and it is open to the Court to substitute them as petitioners for the original petitioner; the effect of such substitution would be that they take the place of the first petitioner ab initio and are entitled to prosecute the original petition as if it were their own petition so that no question of the necessity for a fresh act of insolvency could arise In re, Maund, (1895), 1 Q B D 194, Dist, In re, Mangham, (1888), 21 Q B D. 21, Ref [P 293 C 1]

F. S. Doctor—for Appellants.

Eunoose and Banerjee— for Respondents.

Heald, Offg. C. J.—On 19th December 1927, the present respondents 1 who are A. S. Chettyar Firm, filed a creditor's petition under S. 9, Provl. Insol. Act, for the present respondents 5, 6 and 7 who are mother, son-in-law, and daughter and who according to the petition were jointly indebted to respondents 1 in respect of certain promissory notes, which they had executed jointly, to be adjudicated insolvents. The acts of insolvency which they alleged were that the alleged insolvents had on 20th September 1927 that is within three months before the date of the petition made two transfers of their properties in favour of the T A. Chettyar Firm, which transfers would under S. 54 of the Act be void as being a fraudulent preference, if the 5th, 6th and 7th were adjudicated insolvents.

On 10th February 1928, the present respondents 4 who are the M. V. R. Chettyar Firm, applied to be joined petitioning creditor on the ground that the alleged insolvents and the T A. Chettyar Firm were trying to induce respondents 1 to withdraw their petition in fraud of the rights of the other creditors They relied on the acts of insolvency mentioned in respondents 1's petition. Respondents 1 and the alleged insolvents stated that they had no objection to their being joined as petitioning creditors, and they were so joined by consent. On 27th March and 11th August 1928, the present respondents 2 and 3 respectively also applied to be joined as petitioning creditors, alleged the same acts of insolvency. On 10th October 1928, before orders had been passed on the applications of respondents 2 and 3, these respondents applied to be allowed to withdraw their applications and respondents 1 and 4 applied to be allowed to withdraw the petition.

On the same date, the present appellants namely the L. C. T. R M. and T. S. T. Chettyar Firms applied to be joined as petitioning creditors. They alleged that respondent 1, that is the original petitioning creditor and some of the other creditors had fraudulently and collusively come to an arrangement with the alleged insolvents out of Court to their own advantage and to the detriment of the general body of creditors and they prayed that leave to withdraw the petition should not be granted and that the insolvency proceedings should be continued by adding or substituting them as petitioning creditors, if necessary under the provision of S. 16 of the Act. On 26th November 1928 the Court directed the first four respondents to file statements of the terms on which they asked to be allowed to withdraw. They filed petitions in which they denied that they had come to any arrangement with the alleged insolvents and said that the ground for their withdrawal was that they were satisfied that the alleged act of insolvency could not be proved. The Court then allowed the withdrawal of the original petition and of the applications of respondents 2 and 3 to be joined as petitioning creditors, and directed that the appellants should be substituted as petitioning creditors and should file new petitions on their own behalf.

Appellants appeal against the order allowing the withdrawal of the petition and directing them to file a new petition on the ground that that order prevents them from taking advantage of the act of insolvency mentioned in the original petition, since that act took place more than three months before the date on which new petitions can be presented. The first four respondents, that is, the creditors who applied to be allowed to withdraw, admit that the lower Court's order has the effect of preventing appellants from prosecuting the insolvency proceedings on the footing of the act of insolvency originally alleged, but say that in law the Court could not allow the appellants, whose application to be made petitioning creditors was made more than three months after the alleged act of insolvency to be joined as petitioning creditors so as to rely on that act of insolvency. The alleged insolvents support the contention and say that in order to succeed appellants must prove a new act of insolvency committed within three months of their application.

All the respondents rely on the decision in the case of In re, Maund (1). In that case certain creditors filed a petition on 16th May 1894, alleging that an act of bankruptcy had been committed on 5th March 1894. On 15th June an application to add the names of two other persons as petitioning creditors was made, the reason for that application being that there was a doubt whether the amount of the debts due to the creditors who had filed the petition was sufficient to entitle them to present the petition. The English Bankruptcy Act of 1883, contained in S. 107 a provision similar to that of S. 16, Provl. Insol. Act, which gives the Court power in cases where the petitioner does not proceed with due diligence on his petition, to substitute as petitioner any other creditor to whom the debtor may be indebted in the amount required by the Act in the case of a petitioning creditor; but the learned Judge said that:

"the power ought not to be exercised after the lapse of three months from the date of the act of bankruptcy."

The decision was doubtless right on the facts of the particular case in which it was given, since in that case it was desired by the exercise of the power to remedy a defect, which might invalidate the filing of the petition itself, but it has no application to a case like the present where the petition was validly filed ab initio or to a case where fraud and collusion between the alleged insolvents and the petitioning creditors is pleaded since in the very case on which that decision was based and in which it may be noted the expression of opinion which it followed was clearly obiter namely the case of In re, Mangham (2), it was expressly said that if on an application for substitution fraud was alleged the Court would strain its jurisdiction to the utmost. In the present case, there is no need to strain the jurisdiction. The original petition was validly presented and could not be withdrawn without the leave of the Court. The case was clearly one in which the petitioner did not proceed with due diligence on his petition and was further one in which fraud and collusion were alleged. It was open to the appellants to come in as creditors at any time while the insolvency proceedings were pending and it was open to the Court to substitute them as petitioners for respondents 1.

The effect of such substitution would be that they took the place of respondents 1 ab initio and that they were entitled to prosecute the original petition as if it were their own petition so that no question of the necessity for a fresh act of insolvency could arise I would therefore set aside the lower Court's order allowing the original petition to be withdrawn and directing the appellants to file a new petition and under the provisions of S 16 of the Act I would substitute appellants as petitioners for the respondents 1. The respondents should bear the appellants' costs in this Court, Advocate's fee to be five gold mohurs and the cost of the lower Court would abide the final order for costs in the insolvency proceedings.

Judgment.—The appellants in this case sued for partition and possession of a third share of certain land. The appellant Tun Pe, respondent Ma E Thwe, and one Ma Mya Nwe who was a defendant in the trial Court, were joint heirs of the land in question. At the time of filing the suit, the land was in the possession of Ma Mya Nwe and Ma E Thwe. Ma Mya Nwe did not contest the suit and we are concerned now only with the land in possession of Ma E Thwe. Her defence was that in the year 1921 Tun Pe entered into a contract for the sale of his share to the defendants and put the defendants into possession under the contract. Admittedly a document was drawn up at the time of the transaction and that document has not been registered The lower Courts have held that that document is inadmissible in evidence, but that oral evidence of the contract of sale is nevertheless admissible. They have found that this oral evidence establishes the case of the defendants and have dismissed the suit of Tun Pe Tun Pe's appeal to this Court was originally heard by a single Judge, who was of opinion that the existence of the document precluded the bringing of oral evidence and gave the plaintiffs a decree. An order has been passed granting an application to review this judgment and the appeal is now again before us for decision.

It may now be regarded as settled law that in a suit for possession of land, it is a good defence that the person in possession has obtained possession under an oral agreement of sale although no registered deed of sale has been executed and, therefore, no actual sale has taken place All the Indian High Courts are now agreed on this point, the leading case of this Court on the subject is the case of Maung Myat Tha Zan v. Ma Dun (1). It is, however, contended on behalf of the appellants that the same rule cannot be applied when a document has been executed by the parties. If the document in question were merely one recording the terms of a contract for sale, the contention that oral evidence could not be adduced to prove the terms of the contract would no doubt be correct. Such evidence would be precluded by the terms of S. 91, Evidence Act. No practical difficulty would, however, arise in such a case, because such a document would not require registration (S. 2, Act 2 of 1927) and would, therefore, itself be admissible in evidence. In the present case, the document that was drawn up is clearly not a document recording the terms of a contract for sale. It first of all recites that the land has been sold for Rs. 400 and then goes on to record the agreement as to repurchase by the heirs of Tun Pe It is suggested that it is not a document of sale at all and that it does not require registration However that may be, we are not satisfied that the existence of this document precludes the bringing of oral evidence as to the alleged contract of sale. Mosley, J., who dealt with this appeal in the first instance, held that the agreement to sell was superseded by and merged in the document for sale. It does not appear that the actual document was ever before him or that he was aware of its terms. In Maung Mayat Tha Zan's case (1) Robinson, C. J., remarks at p. 304 (of 2 Rang) of the judgment :

" As regards S. 91, Evidence Act, it appears to me that it does not apply in this case at all. It deals with cases where the terms of a contract have been reduced to the form of a document, and to cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document. If we were dealing with a deed of a sale that was in existence, or with a contract for sale which was required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, some such question might arise; but we are dealing here with a contract for sale which the law does not require to be reduced to the form of a document. An agreement to sell may be an oral agreement, and no question, therefore, of the admissibility of the evidence, I think, arises. It is not the transaction of sale that it is in question, but the agreement to sell, which must, and always does, precede the execution of the contract for sale. By Expln. 3 to the section, even if a statement was made in a document of sale, which was not registered, of the prior oral agreement to sell, evidence as to that prior oral agreement is excluded from the provisions of the sections."

A distinction here is no doubt drawn between a case where the transaction is wholly oral and a case in which a document has been drawn up, but it seems to us that the existence of the document in the present case has no effect on the general principles to be applied. Under S. 91, Evidence Act :

" when the terms of a contract, or of a grant, or of any other disposition of property have been reduced to the form of a document and in all cases in which any matter is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, no evidence shall be given in proof of the terms of such a contract, grant or other disposition of property, or of such matter, except the document itself, or secondary evidence of its contents in cases in which secondary evidence is admissible under the provisions hereinbefore contained."

Oral evidence is excluded equally when a document does exist and when the law requires the matter to be reduced to the form of a document So far, therefore, as the sale itself is concerned, the existence of an unregistered document makes no difference Whether a document exists or not, no oral evidence of the sale can be given. But a contract of sale is not a matter which is required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, and it has been clearly held in Mayat Tha Zan's case (1), that the contract which proceedes the sale can be separated and distinguished from the sale itself. In this case there is a document, but whatever that document may be, it is not a document which records the terms of a contract for sale. The terms of that contract have not been reduced to the form of a document The intention of the parties may have been to go beyond a mere contract and to record in the document an actual sale. But that does not, in our opinion, convert the contract into a sale in such a way as to preclude the defendants from relying on the contract independently of the actual sale. We do not think that in the present case oral evidence as to a contract for sale was rendered inadmissible by the document that was executed.

That is perhaps sufficient for the disposal of this appeal, but we would go further than this and say that whilst oral evidence as to the contract for sale is admissible, the document itself is also admissible in so far as it throws light on the terms of the contract in dispute between the parties. It is contended, as we have said, on behalf of the respondents that the document is not a document which requires registration at all. We are of opinion that whether it requires registration or not, the document would be admissible in evidence as to the terms of the contract which preceded its execution Under S. 49, Registration Act :

"No document required by S. 17 to be registered shall (a) affect any immovable property comprised therein; or (b) confer any power to adopt; or (c) be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property or conferring such power unless it has been registered."

An unregistered sale document, of course, does not affect any immovable property described therein, but the question here is not whether it affects the property, but whether it can be received as evidence of a collateral matter, namely, the previous contract of sale, and that depends on the exact meaning of the words "any transaction affecting such property." There have been a number of judicial decisions on the meaning of these words. In the case of Ulfatunissa v. Hosain Khan (2), it was held by a Full Bench of five Judges of the High Court of Calcutta that the words mean "shall be received as evidence of any transaction so far as it affects land." The question then for decision is whether a contract for sale by itself affects land. In one sense, of course, it does, as it imposes personal obligations on the contracting parties with reference to land. But, under the provisions of S. 54, T. P. Act, a contract of sale does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property. The effect that such a contract has on land is, therefore, indirect only, and the question is whether the provisions of S. 49 (c), Registration Act, were meant to exclude such an indirect affecting.

In the case of Narayanan Chetty v. Subbayya Servai (1), it was held that the phrase must be interpreted in a wide sense. On page 73 of the Court's judgment, the following passage occurs :

"Mr. S. Srinivasa Ayyangar has in his able argument drawn our attention to the provisions of S. 40, T. P. Act and S. 91, Trusts Act. The first of these provisions speaks of an obligation arising out of a contract and annexed to the ownership of immovable property but not amounting to an interest therein or easement thereon being enforceable against a transferee with notice or a gratuitous transferee of the property affected thereby. This shows that a contract to sell or an agreement to lease immovable property is a transaction which affects the property * * * * When, therefore, S. 49, Registration Act, declares that a document compulsorily registrable but remaining unregistered shall not be 'received in evidence of a transaction affecting such property' or, as put by the Calcutta High Court, 'of a transaction so far as it affects such property, it would seem that the legislature meant to indicate that the instrument should not be received in evidence even where the transactions sought to be proved does not amount to a transfer of interest in immovable property but only created an obligation to transfer the property."

If this judgment is good law then a document for sale which was unregistered clearly could not be admitted as evidence of the terms of the previous contract of sale, but this judgment was delivered before the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (4), and a different view of the interpretation of S. 49 has subsequently been taken by the same Court. In Varada Pillai's case (4), the persons in possession of certain property claimed that the property had been given to them. No document had been drawn up, but it was held that certain petitions to the Collector with regard to the land and changes of names made in his registers were admissible to prove the nature of the possession of the defendants The documents held so admissible were not documents which were required by law to be registered and this decision has, therefore, no direct bearing on the point before us. It does, however, suggest that the laws of evidence in such a case should not be interpreted in too rigid a sense. In the case of Saraswatamma v. Paddayya (5), a view of the meaning of S. 49 was taken entirely different from the view taken in Narayanan Chetty's case (3) At p. 359 of the judgment, Spencer, J., remarks :

"I have the highest respect for the opinion of Sadasiva Ayyar, J., but I think he stretched too widely the meaning of the verb "affect" in S. 49, Registration Act. All sorts of transactions may remotely affect immovable property. S. 49, Registration Act has to be read in the light of S. 17 of the same Act and S. 91, Evidence Act. If this is done, the word 'affect' will be seen to be only a compendious term for expressing the longer phrase of 'purporting or operating to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent to.' "

In the case of Qadar Bakhsh v. Mangha Mal (6), it was held that a document although inadmissible for want of registration to prove title may be referred to in order to ascertain the nature of the possession sought to be disturbed The provisions of S. 49, Registration Act are not discussed in this judgment, but the finding is clearly an authority in favour of the admissibility of such a document for the purpose of proving a contract of sale. If the interpretation in Saraswatamma's case (5) be adopted, then it is quite clear that the contract of sale is not a transaction affecting property within the meaning of S. 49. The object of S. 49 is clearly to prevent the law as to compulsory registration of certain documents from being nugatory and to supplement the law of evidence. It has now been definitely held that oral evidence can be accepted as to contracts for sale when no documents have been drawn up It would obviously be an entirely unsatisfactory state of affairs if parties should be in a worse position when they had drawn up a document but failed to have it registered than if they had drawn up no document at all And it would be still more unsatisfactory if in such circumstances parties were allowed to give oral evidence but were not allowed to give evidence of the document itself. Such a state of affairs would involve an entire negation of the principles underlying S. 91, and the following sections of the Evidence Act, but it would be the result of our adopting the wide interpretation of S. 49, Registration Act. We agree with the remarks in Saraswatamma's case (5).

We are of opinion that S. 49, Registration Act must be read together with S. 17 of that Act and S. 91, Evidence Act and that a fair interpretation of S 49 does not preclude an unregistered document, which is required by law to be registered, from being given in evidence as to the terms of the contract for sale. Even, therefore, if the document in the present case is required by law to be registered, we are of opinion that it was admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving the original contract of sale. The document was not admitted by either of the lower Courts, but we do not think it is necessary to remand the case now for further consideration. The document does not recite the terms of the contract for sale at all, but it does recite that there has been an outright sale and it contains an agreement that the children of Tun Pe claiming as his heirs may get the land back on payment of the purchase price plus interest That clearly does not help

v.

Maung Po Saung and others—Respondents.

First Appeal No 159 of 1928, Decided on 3rd April 1929, from judgment of Dist Judge, Magwe, in Civil Regular No. 23 of 1928.

(a) Limitation Act, S. 14 — Proceeding contrary to clearly expressed provision of law is not prosecuting another civil proceeding in good faith.

Proceeding contrary to a clearly expressed provision of law cannot be regarded as prosecuting another civil proceeding in good faith in the sense in which the words "good faith" are defined in the Act. [P 298 C 1]

Thus if a person, against whom an order is made under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., instead of bringing a suit applies for revision of the order, and brings a suit when his application for revision is dismissed, he is not entitled to the exclusion of the period for which he was prosecuting his application for revision. 8 *L. (b) Civil P. C., S. 115—High Court does not ordinarily interfere in revision with orders passed under O. 21, R. 63.

High Court does not ordinarily interfere in revision with orders made under O. 21, R. 63, because such orders are by the rule itself declared to be conclusive and the rule itself provides a remedy by way of suit for the person against whom such an order is made. 3 *U. Anklesaria—for Appellants.

Thein Maung—for Respondents

Judgment.—In Suit No. 9 of 1924 of the District Court of Magwe the present appellant obtained a money decree against the present respondents Po Saung and Ma Twe, and in execution of that decree he attached certain oil well sites. The respondents Po Maung and Ma E applied for removal of the attachments on the ground that they were in possession of the said sites under a possessory mortgage, and the Court made an order removing the attachment.

Instead of filing a suit under the provisions of O. 21, R. 63, appellant applied to this Court for revision of the order removing the attachment. His application was dismissed. Appellant then filed a suit under O. 21, R. 63, for a declaration of his right to attach the properties.

The date of the order removing the attachment was 22nd April 1926 and under Art. 11, Sch 1, Limitation Act, the suit under O. 21, R 63, to set aside that order ought to have been filed within one year from that date. Appellant's suit was not filed until 17th September 1927, and the lower Court held that it was barred by limitation and dismissed it. Appellant appeals on the ground that under S. 14, Lim. Act, he was entitled to exclude the period between 15th July 1926 and 6th January 1927, during which his application for revision was pending in this Court.

The same question which arises in this appeal was decided by a Bench of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma in the case of Tun U v Y. P. S. P. L. Chettyar Firm (1). In that case, the learned Chief Judge said :

"Subsection 1, S. 14 of the Act says that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceedings, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the defendant, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature is unable to entertain it.

The course which the plaintiff should have pursued is very clearly indicated in R. 63, O. 21, Civil P. C., which says that where a claim or an objection is preferred to an attachment the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive. Art. 11, Lim. Act, gives one year from the date of the order for the institution of such suit.

With such plain provisions staring him in the face it was sheer culpable negligence on the part of the advocate who was then acting for the plaintiff to incur the risk of the plaintiff losing all remedy by filing the appeal and the application for revision. If the plaintiff is bound by the acts of his advocate no case for exclusion of time under S 14 of the Act is made out, because proceeding contrary to a clearly expressed provision of law cannot be regarded as prosecuting another civil proceeding in good faith in the sense in which the words 'good faith' are defined in the Act, viz., done with due care and attention."

In the Upper Burma case of San Ba v. Lun Bye (2), the question whether the High Court even has power to interfere in revision with orders made under O. 21, R. 63, was considered and it was said that the High Court will interfere only where the extrinsic conditions of the lower Court's legal activities have been plainly infringed, but where the alleged or apparent error consists in a misappreciation of evidence or misconstruction of the law intrinsic to the enquiry and decision it will respect the finality intended by the wording of O. 21, R. 63 and will intervene only when it is manifest that by the ordinary and prescribed method an adequate remedy or the intended remedy cannot be had. In this connexion reference may be made to the case of Balakrishna Udaya v. Vasudeva Aiyar (3), where their Lordships of the Privy Council said that S. 115 of the Code, which is the section which confers on the High Court power to revise the decisions of subordinate Courts :

"applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it on the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

The High Court in both Upper and Lower Burma has repeatedly said that it does not ordinarily interfere in revision with orders made under O 21, R 63 because such orders are by the rule itself declared to be conclusive and the rule itself provides a remedy by way of suit for the person against whom such an order is made. Appellant's learned advocate has referred us to the case of Phomon Singh v. Wells (4), where a Judge of this Court said that where an investigation has been refused or an order has been passed without investigation or where the order passed is not a proper order passed in accordance with O 21, Rr. 59—63, the High Court would interfere. That statement may or may not be a correct statement of the law, but it is clear that it did not overrule the decision in Tun U's case, and as we are in entire agreement with that decision we dismiss the appeal with costs, advocate's fee to be five gold mohurs.

Special Second Appeal No. 131 of 1929, Decided on 31st July 1929.

(b) Transfer of Property Act, S 78 — Scope.

Ba Thaung—for Appellant.

S. Ganguli and Wellington—for Respondents

Judgment.—The plaintiff Ba Hlaing, filed a suit in the Sub-Divisional Court of Tavoy on a mortgage dated 8th February 1927, executed by Maung Ba and Ma Bok. The mortgage covers certain immovable property and four buffaloes. Prior to this mortgage, Maung Aung Ba and Ma Bok had executed a mortgage in favour of Tan Sit Hauk, who was defendant 3 in the suit, on 4th March 1924 for Rs 300 the property mortgaged being a piece of paddy land, two male buffaloes, and three female buffaloes, total five buffaloes, Whether the two male buffaloes included on the subsequent deed are two out of five included in the earlier deed, we have no means of knowing, as no evidence was directed on the point. The learned advocates think that it would be safe for me to leave out of consideration the buffaloes entirely, and I would do so except for the purpose of construing the second mortgage-deed in favour of Sit Hauk.

On 7th March 1927, the same mortgagors executed a mortgage in favour Tan Sit Hauk for Rs. 1,000 but in this mortgage deed no mention is made of any buffaloes. This last transaction had been held to be a mortgage by way of conditional sale, and this finding has not been challenged.

In the trial Court, the plaintiff obtained a decree for the sum of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 260 which sum is claimed by way of compensation, because the mortgage does not mention any interest and is to the effect that if the mortgagors deliver the two hundred baskets of paddy to the mortgagee for 10 years the mortgagee shall be deemed to have been discharged The mortgage in favour of Tan Sit Hauk is also to a similar effect. In the trial Court, the learned Judge did not keep in mind the points in issue between the parties clearly, and raised only one issue namely whether defendants 3 and 4, that is Sit Hauk and his wife knew of the mortgage to the plaintiff by defendants 1 and 2, and agreed to settle defendant's libilities to the plaintiff at the time that the mortgaged land was sold to them by a registered sale deed. This issue was raised on the defence of the original mortgagors, that as defendants 3 and 4 had agreed to discharge the mortgage, they were no more liable on it. The learned Judge did not raise any issue as to how far the mortgage was operative against Tan Sit Hauk, who had subsequent to his mortgage become the purchaser of the property. The learned Judge therefore contented himself with answering the first issue in the affirmative, that is Sit Hauk had knowledge of Ba Hlaing's mortgage and agreed to pay the amount due on the mortgage to Ba Hlaing. The evidence shows that he did have knowledge of Ba Hlaing's mortgage, but it does not show that he agreed to pay the amount to Ba Hlaing either with Aung Ba the mortgagor or with Ma Bok.

On appeal, the learned District Judge modified the decree to this extent. He held that it was proved that the sum of Rs. 300 due to Sit Hauk in respect of the first mortgage was included in the sum of Rs. 1,000 which was the consideration for the mortgage of 7th March 1927. I have no doubt that this is a correct finding, and that it is entirely in accordance with the probabilities of the case. He therefore gave a decree in favour of Ba Hlaing subject to the payment of Rs. 300 in respect of the prior mortgage to Sit Hauk and his wife. Both Ba Hlaing and Sit Hauk have appealed to this Court. On behalf of Ba Hlaing it is contended that the order postponing his mortgage to the extent of Rs. 300 due to Sit Hauk on the first mortgage is wrong In the argument, it is urged that, on the evidence, it is clear that Sit Hauk gave up the registered mortgage deed or destroyed it, showing a clear intention that that mortgage should be discharged and extinguished. It is argued on Sit Hauk's behalf that, since it is to his benefit to keep alive the earlier mortgage, it must be deemed to have been kept alive and could be used as a shield against the subsequent mortgagee Ba Hlaing.

It is unnecessary to refer to many authorities on this point. I shall therefore refer to two cases. In Gopal Chandra Sreemany v. Herombo Chandra Haldar (1), the facts were similar to the present case. There an old debt was included in a new one, and certain new properties were also added to the security, and the question arose whether the old mortgage was extinguished to the extent of not being available against an intermediate encumbrancer The learnad Judges held that what was done was merely a fresh advance with fresh security in respect of both but they added that even if it were not so, and if the old debt had been paid by the new transaction, it would not necessarily destroy the security. They cited a number of cases to only one of which I shall refer and that is the of case Goluknath Misser v. Lalla Prem Lal (2). In that case, it was held that a creditor holding a mortgage on the lands of his debtor does not necessarily surrender that mortgage, or lower, or in any way impair its priority by taking a subsequent mortgage, including the same lands for the same debt. At p. 310 of the judgment they referred to an English case Tenison v. Sweeny (3) where Lord Leonards stated that the contention that the former mortgage was merged in the new, because the new mortgage included the amount due on the old, was a novel view of the operation of deeds, and held that the former mortgage remained untouched and operative, and that the effect of the new mortgage was merely to let in the further advances as security on the property.

(1) [1899] 16 Cal. 523.
(2) [1877] 3 Cal. 307.
(3) [1844] 1 Jo. & Hot. 717

It is therefore clear that the learned Judge's order in giving Sit Hauk priority in respect of Rs. 300 is correct. A memorandum of cross objection has been filed by Sit Hauk and he claims priority over Ba Hlaing's for the whole of his amount and not merely for Rs. 300. The contention is clearly untenable. He is a puisne mortgagee and he cannot get rid of the priority of the earlier mortgagee except by proving that the prior mortgagee was guilty of fraud or gross negligence. The learned advocate for Sit Hauk referred to parts of the evidence but there is nothing in it to show that Ba Hlaing, the earlier mortgagee, was negligent or fraudulent so as to lose his right of priority. In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs in favour of respondents 1 and 2. The memorandum of cross objection is also dismissed in favour of the appellant, the mortgagors being merely formal parties are not entitled to any costs.

Even quite apart from the provisions of the Easements Act it is safe to hold as a general principle of law that no claim can be made either as a natural right or as an easement by prescription to water which does not flow in a definite course but which should be regarded as surface water or surface drainage: 37 Mad. 304; Rawstron v. Taylor (1855), 11 Ex. 369; *A. Mya Bu, J.—This is an appeal preferred under Cl 13, Letters Patent from the judgment in Special Civil Second Appeal No. 707 of 1927, which set aside the judgment of the Court of first appeal and restored that of the Court of first instance. [Mg. Chan Nyein v. Mg. Pwe (1).]

Three pieces of culturable land known as holding Nos. 10, 3 and 8 in Kongyaung Kwin, Pettaw Circle, Taungtha Township, Myingyan District, belong respectively to the respondents Chan Nyein, Thu Daw and Po Kyaw These three pieces together measure 12·69 acres. On the west of these lies holding No. 8/219 of the same kwin measuring 13·50 acres which is State land worked by the appellants under a permit granted by the Deputy Commissioner of Muingyan District in October 1922. They are situate in a locality of undulating land and are apparently on the same side of a rising ground, the part occupied by holding No. 8/219 being higher than that occupied by holding Nos.10, 3 and 8.

The respondents sued for an injunction restraining the appellants from entering upon and working the holding No. 8/219 and directing them to remove the kazins which the latter had constructed thereon, alleging that they (the respondents) were the owners both of holdings Nos 13, 3 and 8 which they cultivated and of holding No. 8/219 which they did not cultivate but from which water ran down to the former three holdings.

In view of the fact that holding No. 8/219 was State land at the disposal of the Government and that the appellants worked it with the permission of the Deputy Commissioner who undoubtedly has authority to grant the permission, the respondents' assertion of ownership thereto could obviously have possessed no strength, The respondents could not prove the alleged ownership and the Township Court dismissed their suit on 9th June 1926.

The respondents then appealed to the District Court accepting the adverse finding of the Township Court on the question of ownership but changing their ground to one of right to receive the water flowing down from holding No. 8/219 to their lands. The Additional District Judge observed to the effect that the respondents claimed an easement in respect of surface water flowing from holding No. 8/219 to their lands, and remanded the suit to the Township Court for trial on the following issues:

(1) Has the surface water flowed from the disputed land to the plaintiffs' lands adjoining thereto ?

(2) If so, how long have they enjoyed the right to use it ?

(3) Are they entitled to continue the right ?

This order of remand was made on 21st August 1926

It is important to note that it was in respect of surface water that the respondents claimed the right and their case was not based on any assertion that the water flowed in a defined channel either natural or artificial.

When the case got back to the Township Court the whole record was lost in a fire to the Court house. The present record of the suit has been reconstructed from copies and such like and does not contain any copy of the depositions of the previous trial After recording fresh evidence the trial Court answered issue 1 in the affirmative It found on issue 2 that the respondents had enjoyed the right of use of the water for more than 25 years, and on issue 3 that the respondents on account of uninterrupted use of the water flowing from holding No. 8/219 for more than 20 years had acquired by prescription an absolute and indefeasible right of use of the water flowing from that land. In the result the trial Court passed "a decree as prayed for" by the respondents. The obvious effect of the decree was absolutely to restrain the appellants from entering upon and working the holding No. 8/219.

The appellants then took the matter up on appeal to the District Court which set aside the decree of the trial Court and ordered the dismissal of the respondents' suit on the ground that the respondents could not in law possibly have acquired a prescriptive right to the use of water not running in a natural or defined or artificial channel. The Additional District Judge took the analogy from S. 17 (c), Easements Act This Act, however, does not apply to this province

When the matter came up to this Court, the respondents for the very first time claimed the benefit of an alleged local custom for only the lower ground to be cultivated and for each piece of lower ground to have a catchment area attached to it. This, however, appears to have weighed with the learned Judge who disposed of the second appeal and whom the alleged custom struck as a proper one without which there could be no cultivation in the area in question. The learned Judge found this custom proved, and it was principally on this ground that he proceeded to set aside the judgment of the District Court and restore that of the trial Court. Although the judgment contains some expression of the learned Judge's inclination to the view that the water from holding No. 8/219 might have flowed in a stream, he did not, as far as we can judge, come to any definite finding to that effect. Even assuming that there was a finding to that effect and that it would have supported an assertion of a prescriptive right to the use of the water, the respondents' claim for a right under S 26, Lim. Act, would have been defeated on account of the period of user having terminated more than two years before the filing of the suit. There is sufficient evidence to show that the appellants obtained the permit in October 1922 and began to cut and clear the land and started cultivation in the following year. The date of institution of the suit cannot be ascertained from the materials before us but there can be no doubt that the suit was instituted in the early part of 1926 Thus the suit was filed after a lapse of more than two years from the time when the user must have ceased.

Further, although the learned Judge emphasised the fact that the Indian Easements Act did not apply in this province, nevertheless he stated that in the ordinary way a right merely to receive surface water would not be recognized by the Courts as an easement This statement is undoubtedly correct, for no claim can be made either as a natural right or as an easement by prescription to water which does not flow in a definite course, but which should be regarded as surface water or surface drainage . see V. Adinarayanna v. P. Ramudu (2).

This principle is taken from the English case of Rawstron v Taylor (3), where it was held that the plaintiff who claimed the right of easement by prescription had no right to surface water which had no defined course, for the plaintiff had no right to water in alieno solo. At p.383, Platt, B., very pertinently observed

"The plaintiff could not insist upon the defendant maintaining his fields as a mere watertable."

The same principle underlies the ruling in Mt Sarban v Fhudo Sahu (4), which as pointed out at p.117 (of 2 Pat.), relates to a case to which the Indian Easements Act does not apply and where it is held that every landowner has a natural right to collect and retain upon his own land the surface water not flowing in a defined channel and put it to such use as he may desire.

Therefore even quite apart from the provisions of the Indian Easements Act it is safe to hold as a general principle of law that no claim can be made either as a natural right or as an easement by prescription to water which does not flow in a definite course but which should be regarded as surface water or surface drainage.

Turning now to the question of the respondents' contention of having acquired the easement in virtue of custom it is desirable to bear in mind the ordinary definition of an easement which according to the English Law is a right which a person has in respect of land belonging to him to utilize certain land belonging to another in a particular manner not involving the taking of any part of the natural produce of the latter or of any part of its soil, or to prevent the owner of the latter from utilizing his land in a particular manner. This is deducible from the digest of the case law set out in paras 470 and 489 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 2 While the Indian Easements Act declares that an easement may be acquired in virtue of a local custom, such easements being called customary easements the English Law also recognizes easements existing by custom: see para 492 of Halsbury's Law of England, Vol. 2.

Evidence of such custom is relevant under S 13, Evidence Act. The learned author of the Law of Evidence, Sir John Woodroffe, points out at pp. 167 and 168 of the 8th Edn. of his work that "custom" as used in the sense of a rule which in a particular district, class, or family has from long usage, obtained the force of law, must be peaceable and acquiesced in, reasonable, certain and definite, compulsory and not optional to every person to follow or not

In the case of Ramalakshmi Ammal v Sivanantha Perumal Sethurayar (5), which was a case relating to a special family custom their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it was essential that special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence, observing that it was only by means of such evidence that the Courts should be assured of their existence.

In Kuar Sen v. Mamman (6), it was observed as follows:

"A local custom to have the effect of excluding or limiting the operation of the general rules of law must be reasonable and certain. A local custom as a general rule is proved by good evidence of a usage which has obtained the force of law within the particular district, city, mohalla or village, or at the particular place, in respect of the persons and things which it concerns. Where it is sought to establish a local custom by which the residents or any section of them of a particular district, city, village or place are entitled to commit on land not belonging to or occupied by them, acts which if there was no such custom, would be acts of trespass the custom must be proved by reliable evidence of such repeated acts openly done, which have been assented and submitted to as leads to the conclusion that the usage has by agreement or otherwise become local law of the place in respect of the person or things which it concerns. In order to establish a customary right to do acts which would otherwise be acts of trespass on the property of another the enjoyment must have been as of right, and neither by violence nor by stealth, nor by leave asked from time to time."
